Bands kick off year

By Becky Howard
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Although Memorial Stadium held a crowd smaller than in years before, it still vibrated with the rock sounds of The Dial Tones and The Elvis Brothers at the 7th annual Welcome Back Concert Sunday afternoon.

A cool, partly cloudy afternoon had a mellow crowd of about 600 scattered on blankets watching the show or playing Frisbee and Hacky Sack at the free concert, which was co-sponsored by the Union Program Council and KQLA-FM radio.

Mike Penner, UPC program adviser in charge of the concert, said he was disappointed with the smaller crowd (last year's concert drew about 1,500 people), but he said he thought it "did not make it an unsuccessful event."

"There could be a couple of factors involved with the lower turnout," Penner said. "It was cloudy earlier in the afternoon, which may have deterred some people. Also, the bands that played were not as well-known as other bands we have had in the past."

Dale Uhlenhop, junior in electrical engineering, said the concert needed "more rock."

"This year's concert music was too slow, but I think as a whole these concerts are a great way to get out and meet people and relax before the first day of classes," he said.

Bill Graff, senior in agricultural economics, said, "I am familiar with the bands, so this concert is enjoyable for me. But a lot of people aren't familiar with the bands or their music. Still, the concert gives people a chance to get out and relax. If they don't like the music, they can play Frisbee or Hacky Sack."

The concert started with The Dial Tones, a four-member band from St. Joseph, Mo., who also opened last year's concert. Gary McKnight, lead singer and bass guitarist for the group, said the band enjoyed playing at Memorial Stadium because of its echo.

"We like playing here because the stadium has its own built-in reverb," he said.

McKnight described the band's style of music as "power pop" with "an Everly Brothers kind of harmony."

"We are most influenced by a 1970s band called Bad Finger," he said. See CONCERT, Page 12

Wefald assigns provost duties

By Deron Johnson
Editor

James R. Coffman, acting University provost since July 1, was appointed provost Friday by President Jon Wefald. Coffman replaces Owen Koeppel, who stepped down to return to teaching.

The provost is the academic head of the University and is responsible for the deans and colleges.

"My immediate reaction is that it's a humbling experience," said

Coffman, who served as dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine until he took over as acting provost. "I view it as a real opportunity and challenge."

Wefald said Coffman's association with the University will enhance his effectiveness.

"He has the intelligence, analytical skills and ability to listen that will make him an outstanding provost," Wefald said. "Jim Coffman has the potential to become one of the best provosts in the history of Kansas State

Police to examine wing flap controls

By The Associated Press

DETROIT — Federal investigators hope the discovery of devices that controlled the wing flaps on Northwest Flight 255 will reveal clues to the cause of the crash which killed at least 156 people.

Families consider suits/

Meanwhile, a memorial service was held Sunday at the Roman Catholic Cathedral of St. Paul, and Arizona Gov. Evan Mecham declared Sunday a day of mourning in his state. Flight 255 was headed for Phoenix when it crashed.

National Transportation Safety Board officials said a flap control lever and a drive mechanism that moved the plane's wing flaps were found Saturday and might reveal how the flaps were set before the plane crashed Aug. 16 on takeoff from Detroit Metropolitan Airport. "We can't confirm the lever was in any certain position (before the crash) without studying it in a controlled environment," said Jack Drake, a spokesman for the NTSB.

The drive mechanism — an electric motor and a screw jack that were located inside the plane's wing — were heavily damaged, Drake said.

"It was broken to the extent that we don't expect it to tell us much," Drake said.

But The Detroit Free Press reported Sunday that an investigator for the Federal Aviation Administration who asked not to be identified said the drive mechanism indicated that the plane's flaps and slats were retracted during takeoff, a setting experts say could cause a crash.

The slats on the front edge of a wing and flaps on the back edge are extended to produce additional lift at low airspeeds during takeoffs and landings.

The crash, the nation's second-worst air disaster, killed all but one of the 155 people on board and at least two people on the ground.

The lone survivor, 4-year-old Cecilia Cichan of Tempe, Ariz., remained in serious condition Sunday in the University of Michigan Medical Center's burn unit, said spokesman John Turck.

"She is becoming increasingly more alert," he said.

Cecilia's mother, father and brother died in the crash. Rescuers said her mother may have shielded Cecilia with her body.

In Detroit, about 100 worshippers gathered at the church for an interfaith service conducted by about 15 clergymen to remember the victims and honor rescue workers and others who assisted at the crash.

Wayne County Prosecutor John O'Hair compared the response from

Collegian changes in numerous ways

Change, it has been said, is inevitable.

And anyone familiar with the Kansas State Collegian will undoubtedly notice a big change with this issue. Although the most obvious difference is cosmetic, technical and format changes have occurred as well.

The words you see were printed by a small table-top laser printer that has taken the place of the two cumbersome, less-than-lightning-fast machines previously used. The change brings the Collegian more in line with current technological advances and will greatly improve our efficiency.

Since the new printer required that we change our headline style, it seemed a logical time to update our flag, which had become slightly dated. New page flags appear as well, and other design changes will debut as the semester progresses.

In addition to the facelift, the Collegian will offer several new features this fall. The first appears today as "SportsMonday," a two-page feature that will run each Monday and offer a comprehensive weekend sports wrap-up.

Each Tuesday, "BusinessTuesday" will provide a local look at the retail and business climate as well as examine how national developments affect the local economy. A business page seemed natural considering the significant growth and change occurring in Manhattan.

Although there may seem to be an inordinate number of changes this fall, by no means is the Collegian being overhauled. The changes are designed to make our coverage more complete and upgrade what we believe to be already a fine product.

We hope the changes meet with your approval.

State orders landfill to close

By Judy Lundstrom
Special Projects Editor

Thirty-four months and counting. That's how much time Riley County commissioners have to shut down the Riley County Landfill and institute a new form of waste disposal, according to an administrative order from the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

Analysis

The order, filed July 17 by KDHE Secretary Stanley C. Grant, was issued after water tests from two private wells east of the landfill revealed contamination by cancer-causing compounds.

The first contamination was detected in November 1985 on the property of Charlene Sweet, a landfill employee who owns a home adjacent to the landfill in Mochlman Bottoms. The second was discovered in November 1986 on the property of John Pratt Jr., 1,000 feet southeast of the landfill.

After learning of the problem, Mochlman Bottoms residents banded together and petitioned the county for a water district to be installed to provide them with city water. Commissioners approved the district April 27.

But residents still weren't satisfied. Twelve families hired a Junction City law firm and threatened a suit if closure action was not taken by July 20.

The KDHE order came three days before the deadline, mandating the landfill closure be completed by July 1, 1990. The closure was ordered because water testing indicated "beyond a reasonable doubt that contaminated groundwater from the Riley County Landfill has migrated beyond the boundaries of the landfill and has contaminated groundwater..." according to the administrative order.

One of the major deadlines mandated by the order is Dec. 31, when the water district must be completed.

Bids for installation of the system will be opened by Riley County Commissioners Aug. 27. The system will probably be installed by the end of October, said County Engineer Dan Harden.

Currently, several residents are hauling water from Manhattan, Sweet said. The county purchased several 5-gallon water coolers in July for those residents, and it is paying them $20 a month to haul the water, she said.

Dec. 31 is also the deadline for county commissioners to submit a

Briefly

Mines found on PLO yacht

VALLETTA, Malta — Soldiers in Valletta harbor removed two limpet mines from the hull of a yacht belonging to the Palestine Liberation Organization, authorities reported Sunday.

The officials, who insisted on anonymity, said the mines were removed Friday and that six crewmen of the vessel, which was named Angel, were questioned by police.

The mines were discovered after a crane hoisted the vessel out of the water for repairs. The yacht had been berthed in the harbor since May.

No one answered the telephone at the PLO office in Malta when called for comment on Sunday.

Limpet mines are designed to be fastened onto a variety of surfaces.

Spanish Guard accepts women

MADRID, Spain — Spanish women will be allowed to join the Civil Guard for the first time since the paramilitary police force was founded more than a century ago, its director said in an interview published Sunday.

The Madrid daily El Pais quoted director Luis Roldan as saying 150 women would join the 60,000-member Civil Guard next February or March.

Roldan said the women would work in special information, fiscal and administrative units as part of a program to modernize the police force.

The Civil Guard was founded in 1844 during the reign of Queen Isabel II to patrol the countryside and keep bandits and anti-royalist factions at bay.

It still patrols rural areas but also serves as a national highway police, has special anti-terrorist units and guards government buildings and foreign embassies.

Indian water minister resigns

NEW DELHI, India — The government announced Sunday the resignation of the water minister, and newspapers reported that he would lead an investigation into India's arms kickback scandal.

The announcement said only that the resignation of B. Shankaranand, water minister since September 1985, had been accepted by President Ramaswamy Venkataraman.

But the Indian Express and Sunday Observer newspapers said Shankaranand was to lead a committee that will probe alleged kickbacks in the purchase of artillery for India's military from Sweden's Bofors company.

Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi announced an investigation after it was made public in Sweden that a $38 million commission was paid on the $1.4 billion deal. Gandhi has denied any wrongdoing.

Bride dies hours after wedding

DEPEW, N.Y. — A bride was killed less than eight hours after her wedding when the car she was riding in was broadsided by another vehicle that ran a red light, police said.

Gayle Rzeznek, 31, of Depew, was returning from her wedding reception early Saturday with her new husband, Alan, 35, when a car sped through a red light and struck their auto on the passenger side, said Officer Richard Zolnowski.

John A. Radibeck, 26, of Cheektowaga, was charged with driving while intoxicated and passing through a red light, Zolnowski said.

KC man new Hispanic leader

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City businessman Hector Barreto was named chairman of the board of the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce at the group's annual board meeting.

Barreto, who has served as the chamber's president for the past eight years, was appointed to the new post Saturday.

The 14-member board, which met at the chamber's Kansas City headquarters, also elected Abel Quintela, of Odessa, Texas, to succeed Barreto as president.

Barreto, who owns a construction and ceramic tile distributing firm, was one of the founding members of the chamber. The organization promotes Hispanic businesses across the country.

Poll shows people like Pope

LOS ANGELES — Most Americans think highly of Pope John Paul II but disagree sharply with many of his beliefs and those of the Roman Catholic Church, according to a Los Angeles Times poll released Sunday.

The survey of 2,040 adults, including 957 Catholics, found that while Americans express admiration for the pope, a majority disagree with his church's position on such subjects as birth control, artificial insemination and women in the priesthood.

The newspaper said the telephone survey, conducted Aug. 16-19, has a 4 percent margin of error.

Of the Catholics polled, 75 percent said they admire John Paul, who will visit the United States next month. Among Catholics 40 or older, the pope is well thought of by 89 percent.

More than half of the Protestants interviewed said they like the pope and only 8 percent expressed dislike for him.

Lodge looks for FDR look-alike

TIMBERLINE LODGE, Ore. — A 50-year-old ski lodge, built during the Depression, is holding a look-alike contest.

The lodge is looking for a twin of Franklin Delano Roosevelt for a ceremony next month celebrating its golden anniversary.

The winner will help re-enact the dedication of the lodge on Mount Hood, which the late president presented to the nation in 1937 as a major achievement of his Works Progress Administration.

The look-alike also will play FDR in a motorcade through Portland on Sept. 25. The winner will receive a weekend for two — his companion need not be named Eleanor — at Timberline Lodge, along with dinner and ski lift tickets.

Timberline says the qualified applicant must be: an inspirational speaker with an identifiable Eastern accent, older than 21, ideally about 55, comfortable using a pince-nez and a long cigarette holder.

Elderly women to celebrate

ONALASKA, Wis. — Leilah Halverson, a resident at the Onalaska Care Center, is looking forward to celebrating her 92nd birthday next week. And among the invited guests is her first baby sitter, Lillie Severson. She's 105.

Today, the two women are confined to wheelchairs, but Severson recalls that the infant Leilah was easy to care for. "She was a good baby," she said recently, recalling how the Halverson family asked her to baby-sit.

Later, both women spent many decades caring for their own homes. Halverson had three boys, while Severson became the mother of 16 children.

University." Coffman said his first priority is to emphasize the strategic planning initiated by the University within the past year.

"We have to intensify and upscale substantially the planning process," he said.

Coffman said he will consider beginning the planning process in the fall instead of in the spring, as it is currently. He also wants to include subsequent years to make the plan more continuous.

"The excellence of the deans, other administration leaders and faculty leadership ensures we'll be able to hit the ground running from the start," he said.

Coffman was named acting provost after the four finalists from a national search dropped out of contention. Wefald considered initiating a second national search, but he said it might have seemed "rigged" to outside applicants because Coffman had so much internal support.

"Most people came to the conclusion (that another national search) could be counterproductive," Wefald said. "Usually the rule of thumb is you have to bring someone in from the outside because no one on the inside has that kind of support."

Recruitment, funding attract Merit scholars from Kansas schools

By Becky Lucas
Managing Editor

The number of the "best and brightest" students is on the rise at K-State. Thirty-four National Merit Scholars have either enrolled at K-State or have indicated they will do so, said Larry Moeder, associate director of Student Financial Assistance.

Last year 17 National Merit Scholars were enrolled at K-State, Moeder said. He attributed the increase to new recruiting techniques implemented last year, increased knowledge about K-State's programs and a scholarship commitment that jumped from $250 to $5,500.

University of Kansas figures scheduled to be released today indicate that 34 National Merit Scholars are expected to enroll, eight more than in 1986. National Merit Scholars attending KU receive $1,300 per year.

Pat Bosco, assistant vice president and dean of student life, said there are 161 National Merit Scholars from Kansas. At Wichita State University, two National Merit Scholars are expected to enroll. Fort Hays State University expects four, and Pittsburg State University expects none.

The emphasis placed on recruiting National Merit Scholars stems from an attempt to remedy Kansas' "brain drain," when the state's best students leave to attend universities elsewhere.

"This past year President (Jon) Wefald made as one of his main interests increasing the number of National Merit Scholars for this fall," said Bosco.

"They don't necessarily represent the best and brightest," he said. "There are a number (of others) who are as bright that KSU attempts to respond to as well."

Wefald approached the KSU Foundation to secure increased scholarship backing, Bosco said. Before Wefald's initiative, the only full-ride scholarships were athletic.

"We had to remind the people of the state that Kansas State is a very special place," Wefald said, referring to the recruitment effort. "We were able to convey how many outstanding students had come and gone from Kansas State."

He attributed the increase to a rejuvenated image, the new admissions representatives who visited all the Kansas high schools and, with help from the Foundation, a competitive scholarship package.

National Merit Scholars are selected from high school students who have taken the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test/ National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test (PSAT/ NMSQT) as juniors and scored in the top one-half of 1 percent of the graduating high school students in their state. This score qualifies the student as a National Merit Semi-Finalist.

"This past year President Wefald made as one of his main interests increasing the number of National Merit Scholars for this fall."

—Pat Bosco

Semi-finalists compete to become National Merit Scholars by taking the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT), submitting academic records and providing endorsements and recommendations from their high school principals.

According to a spokesperson for the National Merit Scholarship Cooperation, each year more than one million high school juniors take the PSAT/NMSQT. Approximately 15,000 students qualify as semi-finalists, and about 90 percent go on to become National Merit Scholars. From this group of scholars, 6,000 receive National Merit Scholarships. The money for the scholarships comes from 600 independent sponsors and universities.

After re-evaluating their scholarship program, Fort Hays State offered $2,200 per year to National Merit Scholars.

Regents broaden status

By Staff and Wire Reports

Some out-of-state residents may qualify for cheaper tuition rates at state universities as a result of regulations passed by the Kansas Board of Regents in mid-August.

Stanley Koplik, Regents executive director, said the regulations were designed to implement a new law the Legislature passed last spring.

Under the law, high school students who move out of the state after graduation and enroll at one of the six state universities or Kansas Technical Institute in Salina within 12 months are considered in-state residents for payment of tuition.

Also, people who move to Kansas to take a job and then enroll within 12 months of their move would be eligible for in-state rates.

Koplik said before the law was passed, a person had to be a Kansas resident for at least one year to meet Kansas residency requirements. Tuition for in-state students is generally less than half the amount for out-of-state residents.

Undergraduate students at K-State who qualify for in-state rates paid $665.65 for the fall semester. Out-of-state undergraduates paid $1,750.65 for tuition and fees. In-state graduate students paid $725.65, and out-of-state graduate students paid $1,810.65 for tuition this fall.

University officials are unable to estimate how many people are affected by the new law until fall enrollments are completed.

The tuition rules will stay in effect until Dec. 15, by which time the Board can make them permanent. If there is no filing to make them permanent, the temporary rules will expire May 1.

Readers' chance to comment on story

The ringing of the 8:05 a.m. school bells today awoke most of us to the reality — summer is over. Those who spent the last three months working in office buildings, on their tans or anywhere in between might feel disoriented being in Manhattan and not knowing what went on this summer.

Since most missed most of the soap operas this summer because of never-ending Contra hearings or work schedules, here is K-State's very own One Life of a Wildcat.

To begin with, the show will cost more to be part of the family than it did last semester. Grandfather Legislature decided last spring the grandchildren should pay more of their own way. Besides, he said it was just too expensive for him when he was concentrating on making a family advertisement about famous Kansas skyscrapers and vicious elk.

The advertisements were supposed to run in national magazines to bring in businesses and tourists. While it was in production, people started wondering where the 60-story building was located since everyone thought the tallest building was about 30 stories smaller. They also wondered if the elk pictured in the ad were living in the building since they — like the building — don't inhabit Kansas.

Meanwhile in Manhattan, the eight Wildcat children, also known as colleges, were ordered by Father Wefald to make up plans for the future for the strategic planning program. He was happy with most of the childrens' plans, but most of them were thwarted when Dad only promised a few of the children enough allowances to carry the plans out.

The children who were promised the most money were the ones interested in research and the scientific fields. This is partly because he could "sell" the cost to grandfather Legislature. Father Wefald got the notion that Grandfather would be more likely to fund programs that promised to generate money for Grandfather — who in the end controls how much money Dad gets. Examples of programs likely to do this are agricultural research, restaurant programs and scientific research bringing in national grants.

schedule and should be ready to join the family of facilities in the fall of 1988-89 basketball season. Too late for most of us grandchildren — who paid the brunt of the costs — to use, but they say it's good for the family. This summer, Charles Thomas was named director. He would like to bring in family shows like Sesame Street and trade shows — attractions students are bound to flock to.

Groups began planning protests and receptions when they remembered President Reagan's promise to return to K-State on Alf Landon's 100 birthday this fall. It's odd that in most soap operas powerful characters who return are almost always villains. Anyway, there's not much of a chance the president will remember the promise he made five years ago.

The Wildcats' favorite relative, Aggieville, turned a year older along with its patrons. It's odd how three-fourths of the students are not allowed to drink, yet the bars have about the same number of people in them year after year.

The family's poor relative, Farrell Library, was forced to cancel about 3,000 books due to an unexpected rise in serial subscriptions. Father Wefald said he would like to improve the facility by making it more accessible to the state but not necessarily buying more research materials.

And as for the Collegian, it will continue to relay the ongoing story of the Wildcats. This section is devoted to the opinions of the Collegian staff through editorials, the thoughts of writers through regular columns and to the opinions of the readers through letters to the editor and guest columnists.

Because the quality of this page depends on diversity of views, all readers are encouraged to write either letters to the editor, which must be 300 words or less, or guest columns which can't be more than 800 words or so.

Another "don't" in the newspaper opinion business is sending unsigned letters. After all, readers tend to think the writers are cowards and don't believe them. Plus, it makes the writers more responsible for what they write.

The letters will be published when space is available — hopefully within the week they are received. I plan to publish most, if not all, of them to ensure readers are exposed to all the viewpoints. Of course, letters and columns deemed libelous or in poor taste won't be printed. After all, newspapers generally are not in the business of misleading or lying to the readers, and this paper would like to stay in business a while longer.

Academic year brings new challenges, hope

Somehow, there's no time of the year quite like the end of August when thoughts turn from relaxation to academia. There's an attitude among nearly everyone — students especially — that there's nothing that can't be done.

Perceptions that great things are in store tend to be pervasive. In Manhattan this fall, all these things seem to be especially evident.

And for good reason.

The downtown area, once shunned by shoppers and fate, is coming alive amid one of the largest retail construction projects in the city's history.

The University has doubled its number of National Merit Scholars with 34 tentatively enrolled for fall classes, and preliminary signs point to an enrollment gain that may be sizable. K-State's dorms and greek houses have already noted marked increases in occupancy.

But all this optimism must be tempered by the reality that much remains to be done at K-State. Funding is still woefully insufficient in many areas, the best and most diverse faculty elude the University and we have a library desperately in need of assistance.

But what would August be without its challenges? By channeling our optimism properly, there's nothing we can't do.

This University is already beginning to prove that.

Tuition fees outpace inflation rate—again

K-State can take dubious pride in knowing its tuition rose less than the national average this year. But it still out-paced the rate of inflation.

Undergraduate students will see an increase of about 4 percent this school year, while the Consumer Price Index rose by 3 percent. The national average for four-year public institutions was up by 6 percent.

Out-of-state students will find it difficult to find any good news when they pay fees the next two semesters. They will be paying $2,170 — an increase of 9 percent. The national average is 7 percent.

Education Secretary William Bennett criticized the colleges for the increases. They increased the tuition because they think students can receive enough financial aid to meet the costs, he said.

A spokesperson for the College Board said, "While (the amount of financial aid) is not sufficient to meet everyone's needs, students shouldn't let the cost figures frighten them."

What should frighten them, however, is the debt they could accumulate in four or five years.

Like 64 percent of public institutions in the College Board survey, K-State blames the cost increase on changes made in the student-cost ratio.

In previous years, students paid about 25 percent of the total cost and the state picked up the rest. In the 1986-87 year, in-state students will be paying 26.7 percent of the costs.

States need to develop alternative ways to generate money for higher education.

Legislators should remember that one of the reasons public universities have been funded in the past was to keep costs down so that everyone could use them. If they become accessible only to a wealthy few, they are not being used to their potential.

I DON'T KNOW HOW HE DOES IT... EVERY YEAR HE PAYS HIS KID'S TUITION IN FULL.

Ignorance rules world 'Elite' duty to find answers

Well, we are all back for another year of higher education here at K-State. By now, you all have been welcomed back enough times to know the University is glad to have you and your money, so I will dispense with the usual mushy garbage and get down to serious business.

As college students, we are part of an elite group. Only a very small percentage of people ever advance this far in their education. Colleges and universities are where world leaders are trained, new technologies developed and the knowledge of generations passed on. Take these away and we could very well revert to the Stone Age.

However, being a part of this elite group carries with it great responsibilities. Even with all of this new knowledge, the world is growing more and more ignorant. Illiteracy in the United States is actually growing. Some estimates put the number of functionally illiterate adults at one-third of the population and rising. Newspapers are being forced out of business by G.I. Joe and the "Dating Game."

The majority of the people now receive most of their news in the form of 30-minute television newscasts. These newscasts report only a small part of what is actually happening in the world. They are also prone to replacing real news with sensationalized drama, such as those touching interviews with victims and survivors that have little value except as ratings boosters.

This is what the people get when they watch the news, which they don't. A few months ago, Peter Jennings of ABC News did a story about how network affiliate stations are dropping the evening news in favor of shows like "Wheel of Fortune." It seems even the dramatic productions of television news are being ignored by a "dumb America."

What little news Americans do digest is often flawed. News reported for mass consumption tends to be bland, non-stimulating and middle-of-the-road. This is the result of the media trying to hide their biases.

The American media also have a bad habit of reporting the facts and leaving out the context of the situation. This makes the facts essentially meaningless and leads to confusion and misinterpretation of the situation at hand, which can be worse than not knowing at all. Associated with this is the tendency to simplify things by using labels and buzzwords like communist, democracy and right-wing. These words and others are used to describe so many different situations that they lose all of their meaning and have a negative effect on finding the truth.

Then we have the spectacle known as the political campaign. This once noble process for determining the leaders of our country has degenerated into a battle of the public relations wizards who sell their candidates like laundry detergent. The message of the campaign has been shortened to the 30-second commercial where a candidate wraps himself in the flag, says a few catchy phrases and smiles at an audience that barely knows what he is talking about anyway. It is a miracle we haven't elected someone like Adolf Hitler as president, although we have come closer than

I care to think about.

So this leaves us, America's up-and-coming elite, with some big problems. We are supposed to go out and fix these problems, but we won't. Today's college students have become as much a part of "dumb America" as the rest of society. We watch "Wheel of Fortune" instead of the news. We read the "National Enquirer" instead of the "Washington Post." We care more about how our steak is cooked than about the millions who have nothing to cook. We have the stupidity to believe war is good because it helps the economy.

Yes, we are a real sorry bunch. Even in University affairs, we couldn't even get one-third of the students to vote in last spring's student government elections. It's not hard to vote in these elections; all you need to do is bring your student ID card to the Union on one of the two days elections are held. If we can't even do something this simple, how are we going to even make a dent in fixing this screwed-up world?

People nowadays seem to take everything for granted. Democracy is a process, not an institution. For this process to work, you have to participate and have knowledge of what is going on. It is very much like a chain in that it is only as strong as its weakest link. If you want to sit around and let others run the government for you, maybe you should consider moving to the Soviet Union. At least you'll be free from the responsibility of political participation.

We had all better do something about the world while we still have one. It's up to us to do the changing because we're all that's left and we're running out of time. So if you choose to ignore this warning, good luck. Just remember: Ignorance is not bliss.

Accident victims' relatives must decide legal strategy

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Still numb with shock, relatives of victims in the Northwest Airlines crash are now confronting a difficult decision: whether to accept cash settlement offers or take the carrier to court.

Legal experts say the chances are good that families who successfully sue Northwest are likely to win sharply higher damage awards from a jury than whatever they might get from the airline's insurance carrier.

"The people who wait it out for eight months or a year get twice as much," said Melvin Belli, one of the nation's best known personal-injury lawyers and counsel to at least four families who lost relatives in the crash near Detroit that killed at least 156 people.

Belli said in a telephone interview that he always advises clients to reject settlement offers from airline insurance companies.

He said based on past cases, awards could run up to $5 million per victim, depending on their earning ability, number of dependents, education and social position in the community.

On the other hand, many relatives may be tempted to accept whatever Northwest offers and try to put the trauma behind them, rather than risk protracted and nasty legal battles.

Besides, there's always the possibility that a jury would decide a victim's family is entitled to less than the airline's initial offer, leaving the plaintiff not only with a smaller settlement but a hefty attorney fee, usually one-third of the award.

More than a dozen lawsuits already have been filed against Northwest, most of them handled by well-known attorneys skilled in exacting large negligence awards from big companies.

At the same time, a number of complex legal questions have arisen, including what court to sue in, who is entitled to file a claim and who, besides Northwest, may be liable.

Perhaps more importantly, the Aug. 16 crash of Flight 255 has revived some emotional issues about lawsuits, grief, greed and the value of a life, pitting client-hungry lawyers against airline insurers.

"There is no easy way out of this thing," said Debbie Baye, who lost her 6-year-old daughter in the July 9, 1982, crash of a Pan Am jet in Kenner, La. After a long ordeal, Baye and her husband John were awarded $523,000 from a jury, an amount affirmed on appeal.

"We didn't know what to do and we don't know whether we did the right thing," Debbie Baye said in a telephone interview. "At a time like this, the most important thing is prayer. Pray to get through."

Lawyers for plaintiffs generally demand at least $1 million from an airline in crash suits, said George Milko, an attorney for HALT, a Washington-based legal reform group that has published a handbook for victims' families.

Airline insurance adjusters are reluctant to divulge settlement awards, but Milko said his impression is that they begin making offers between $100,000 and $600,000.

New York attorney Stuart Speiser, a wrongful death specialist who represents some families in the Northwest disaster, said the main criterion for determining damages is whether the victim had dependents. The value placed on young children and the elderly generally is much less.

Differences in damage laws of each state also will play a major role in where suits are filed.

In the Northwest case, many of the victims resided in Arizona, which allows for punitive damages and recognizes the value of non-economic factors such as loss of companionship in determining compensation. Michigan law also recognizes non-economic losses, but does not allow for punitive damages.

Funds halt museum plan

By Patti Paxson
Staff Writer

Faced with a lack of money, a campus committee is continuing its efforts to get the go-ahead for the construction of a museum that would house K-State's 1,000-piece art collection.

Though the KSU Foundation's executive committee has not officially approved the museum project, "the administration is firmly in favor of doing it," said Ruth Ann Wefald, chairwoman of the eight-month-old art museum steering committee.

"The will (to build an art museum) is there," she said. "The fuel to make the whole thing go is what we lack right now."

Boasting works by Pablo Picasso, Henri Matisse and Thomas Hart Benton, K-State's art collection is scattered throughout campus offices, buildings and storerooms, or displayed throughout the state while on loan to other institutions.

Wefald said she is confident K-State will eventually be able to build a museum for its art collection, but funding remains the primary barrier to starting planning and construction.

Funds will most likely come from alumni and others interested in promoting the arts, she added. A sizable donation would be enough to start the project, she said.

"We're looking for a major donation in the area of $1 million," Wefald said.

The committee conducted a feasibility study to determine a budget for the construction of the museum, possible building sites and interest in the project. The proposed budget is about $3.8 million, Wefald said.

Although there is a significant amount of support to build an art museum, some concerns about starting the project at this particular time have been raised. Tackling a large funding campaign while Bramlage Coliseum is still under construction and the troubled Kansas economy were two concerns expressed, Wefald said.

The art museum committee will be traveling throughout the state to promote fine arts at K-State and drum up support for the museum.

Dorm contract numbers rise

By The Collegian Staff

Requests for campus residence hall rooms are up 18 percent from last year, and about 4,100 students will be living in residence halls, K-State housing officials said last week.

Tom Frith, director of housing, said 576 more contracts were requested over last year's 3,211 requests.

Frith attributes the increase to a projected increase in enrollment, increased recruitment efforts and the "fine job" being done by the housing staff and individual hall governing boards.

Because of the overflow of students living in residence halls this year, space normally not used for housing — located primarily in Putnam and Boyd Halls — is being made available.

City clamps down on expansion near University areas

Staff/Mary Ward

University overlay district in shaded area

By Janet Swanson
Agri/Business Editor

The Urban Area Planning Board is taking steps to rectify traffic and parking problems in the University overlay, the residential area surrounding campus.

The board is proposing an amendment to the city's zoning ordinances that would make the uses of land in the overlay conditional rather than permitted. Conditional uses are considered on a case-by-case basis.

The overlay contains special provisions that allow the areas to be zoned for University-related uses, including parking lots, art galleries, museums, boarding houses and offices.

The amendment would formalize a review process for land uses in the overlay area and require a public hearing before changes can be approved.

"The problem many residents have found is that the University overlay permitted too much to occur without it being subject to public review," said Vickie Hilpert, Manhattan project planner. "Areas zoned for single-family dwellings can be overlaid to allow multi-family dwellings," said W. Lawrence Garvin, director of facility planning and University architect.

While Garvin is concerned about protecting residential areas, he said multi-family structures should be maintained because they offer alternatives to residence halls.

"Most of the fraternities and sororities have been grandfathered by previous ordinances but can probably petition for a variance if they want to expand," she said.

The amendment, which should be in place by the end of the year, will provide city planners with more control over expansion, said Eric Cattell, Manhattan city planner.

The amendment would provide a second zoning district, separate from the present overlay, that would be used for land purchased for University activities.

Democrats in Iowa forum

Economic plans debated

By The Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — Seven Democratic presidential hopefuls traded gentle economic jabs Sunday in a two-hour debate at the Iowa State Fair, with Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis at the center of much of the fire.

While the seven reserved most of their heavy blows for the Reagan administration, several pressed Dukakis to defend the centerpiece of his campaign: claiming credit for economic revival in his home state.

"The problem with what Governor Dukakis said is it contains no specifics whatsoever," said Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee. "With all due respect to my friend from Massachusetts, we need some specifics."

Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois noted that defense spending in Massachusetts has increased by 59 percent during Dukakis' tenure. "That's a pretty healthy welfare check for the state of Massachusetts," he said.

Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri noted that there might be a link between the criticism and Dukakis' standing in the polls.

"If I get to 52 percent in the polls in New Hampshire, will you start attacking me like you attacked Governor Dukakis?" Gephardt asked Gore.

Dukakis said he didn't "think anybody was picking on me."

"I like debate, I like discussions, one never knows what's going to happen," Dukakis said. "I thought it was a good discussion, a good debate. This adventure is very unpredictable."

The exchanges came before more than 1,000 Iowans who took time out from the corn dogs and cattle shows at the fair.

The debate, sponsored by the Iowa Broadcast News Association, was the first of a series of meetings for the seven candidates in Iowa, with at least three more scheduled before the state holds its Feb. 8 precinct caucuses, the nation's first test of Democratic presidential strength.

Efforts to arrange a similar debate of Republican presidential hopefuls fell through in the face of resistance from the organizations of Vice President George Bush and Senate Republican leader Robert Dole of Kansas, who lead in early public opinion polls.

The candidates said Sunday's debate was important both because it was broadcast statewide on Iowa Public Television and because it gave Democrats a chance to spell out their economic programs, an area where the party has been considered weak in past presidential elections.

"In a sense, this is the litmus test for Democrats," said Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware. "People don't think we're fiscally responsible. Any Democrat who proposes any new program better say precisely how they'll pay for it."

Dukakis argued that 1988 election will turn on pocketbook issues, and that he has the best record because he's taken his state from being "an economic and financial basket case" to the "Massachusetts miracle."

Gephardt said that's approaching the presidency "looking through a regional prism" and is irrelevant to most of the country.

Former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt took time to criticize Gephardt for his plans to allow farmers to cut back on production.

"I think they're well-intentioned," Babbitt said. "But I don't think that will work. I think there's a better way."

Jesse Jackson argued that Democrats must sharpen their message and present a clear alternative if they are to be successful next year.

Baltics recall takeover

Anniversary marked by protestors

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Thousands of people in the Baltic capitals braved police barricades Sunday to protest the 1939 Hitler-Stalin pact that allowed the Soviets to take over Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia, sources said.

Sunday was the 48th anniversary of the non-aggression pact between Nazi German dictator Adolf Hitler and Soviet leader Josef Stalin, which delayed Russian fighting in World War II and deeded control of the Baltic republics to the Soviet Union. Some Western nations, including the United States, regard the Baltics as "enslaved nations" under Soviet control.

Baltic residents told Western reporters in Moscow that hundreds of police turned out to control demonstrations in the capital cities of Riga, Latvia; Vilnius, Lithuania; and Tallinn, Estonia.

Janis Roskalns, a Latvian nationalist who laid a wreath at Riga's monument to war victims, told The Associated Press by telephone that at least 2,000 gathered at the memorial around noon.

He said as many as 5,000 tried to reach the cordoned-off square throughout the afternoon and that many of the elderly sobbed while recounting the republic's suffering in the 1940s.

"Those who were bold managed to get through to the monument," said Roskalns, 38. He said about 500 uniformed and plainclothes police set up barricades and closed off a pedestrian underpass to the monument.

Roskalns said authorities took away a man who held up a placard demanding, "Publish the facts about the Stalin cult" and seized a photographer believed to be a foreigner and smashed his video camera.

A Western visitor who spoke on condition of anonymity reported from Vilnius that about 500 protesters gathered at noon outside St. Anna's Catholic Church. Police ringed the cathedral, but demonstrators brushed by them and were allowed to assemble, the source said.

The official Tass news agency declared the Vilnius protest a "flop" and set the number of participants at "only 250-300." But the agency disclosed that they were protesting the installation of Soviet power in 1940.

Tass said nothing about the protests in Tallinn and Riga.

Details of the Tallinn protest were not immediately available in Moscow, but Roskalns said Latvian activists learned it had taken place.

"The senators' message coincides...with the overtly instigatory, anti-Soviet campaign launched in recent weeks by Western radio voices broadcasting to the Soviet Union, including those subversive radio stations which are financed and directed by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency."

—The Communist Party daily newspaper Pravda

Sunday's demonstrations and Red Square protests last month by Crimean Tatars who want to return to their Black Sea homeland demonstrated a more lenient approach to dissent in line with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's policy of "glasnost," or openness on selected issues.

The Baltic protests and the publicity given them by Western broadcasters over the past few days prompted an outcry from Soviet media, which published at least 15 commentaries over the weekend denouncing the broadcasts and explaining the Kremlin position.

Provisions of the Aug. 23, 1939, pact, signed by then-Soviet Foreign Minister Vyacheslav Molotov and Nazi Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop, became public in the West after Germany fell. But until last week the Kremlin rarely acknowledged the agreement and explained it as a ploy to buy time to prepare for eventual war with the Nazis.

A Tass interview with historian Herman Trukan disclosed to Soviets that the agreement divided areas of Eastern Europe into Soviet and German spheres of influence.

Trukan restated the official Soviet version of the takeover: that Baltic peoples voted to join the Soviet state and that Soviet troops entered the small nations because the people wanted their protection against the Nazis.

Sunday's protests were announced in the United States and Western Europe by emigre organizations that advocate a return to independence for the three Baltic nations.

A group of 20 U.S. senators wrote Soviet officials asking that protests be allowed to take place without interference. That request also drew fire from Soviet media.

The Communist Party daily Pravda said Sunday, "The senators' message coincides...with the overtly instigatory, anti-Soviet campaign launched in recent weeks by Western radio voices broadcasting to the Soviet Union, including those subversive radio stations which are financed and directed by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency."

Radio Moscow and Soviet Television called the Western broadcasts "a crude provocation violating international law," and said such protests were "incompatible with the existing systems in Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia."

In what was widely viewed as an attempt to dilute nationalist sentiments, some of the most prominent activists have been exiled to the West.

Roskalns was pardoned this year from a labor camp sentence for alleged anti-Soviet activity. But he said he was ordered to leave the Soviet Union and plans to go to West Germany next week with his wife and children.

Tourists visit Amish town; citizens divided on benefits

By The Associated Press

HARMONY, Minn. — Curiosity about the devout, old-fashioned Amish lifestyle has become the hot ticket for Michel Farm Vacations, a new tourism business in a southeastern Minnesota town that has felt the sting of a troubled farm economy.

"The main draw is the Amish. Those tours and our (gift) store are carrying us now. They're way ahead of what I expected," said Vernon Michel, who started the business last fall with his wife, Paula.

"Our idea is to bring people here for a week to utilize the whole area, instead of pulling them off the highway and into town for a couple of hours or a day," said Michel.

"We want to tie everything this area has to offer together — the Amish, trout fishing, canoeing, hiking and hunting — to the farms, historic sites and golf courses," said Michel, whose company basically acts as a booking agent.

The business serves as a liaison between eager tourists and bed-and-breakfast farms, rural cabins for rent, Amish wanting customers for their homemade goods and various recreational businesses and tourist attractions in southeastern Minnesota and northeastern Iowa.

Some of the Amish, who sell everything from fresh pies and garden produce to bright woven egg baskets and rolltop desks, welcome the extra income from the tourists.

"I don't mind them, if they don't ask religious questions. They can take pictures of buildings and animals, but not of humans," said

Lydia Ann Hershberger, an Amish woman, as she set a sheet of hot date cookies down to cool.

"I don't mind farm questions. I enjoy people coming, as long as we make sales," she added.

On the 1860s-style Amish farm of Jerry Hershberger and Henry Petershiem, visitors may watch work in the buggy repair and wheel shop, buy Lydia Ann's baked goods or watch her skillfully hand-stitch the pieced quilts of others.

"There are about 10 Amish farms where we can take car tours. But they've said no more bus tours," Michel said. "I can't blame them for not wanting the buses. I think they're concerned about liability. It's hard to control a bus crowd. The Amish are afraid kids could get hurt and then sue. They don't carry insurance."

University hopes to sell land

By The Collegian Staff

The KSU Foundation has refused to pay the taxes on three lots of land located 20 miles north of Manhattan in University Park.

Dave Weaver, administrative assistant for the Foundation, said the land is almost worthless due to its rural location, and the Foundation has been unable to sell it. The taxes were allowed to become delinquent in hopes the Riley County treasurer would be able to auction the land.

The lots were originally part of a large Foundation development project. The Foundation sold all of the land except the three lots.

Even though the land was developed into a residential area, and includes a golf course, a local real estate appraiser said the Foundation "couldn't even give the land away."

According to records in the treasurer's office, taxes on one of the lots have not been paid since 1979, while taxes for the other two have been delinquent since 1978. The Foundation owes $285 in delinquent taxes.

However, because the Foundation wishes to rid itself of the land, there are no plans to pay the taxes.

"If we put any money into this land," Weaver said, "it would be money - that could go for scholarships - going for nothing."

Bridgeton leads tankers

Convoy's mission a success

By The Associated Press

MANAMA, Bahrain — The mine-damaged supertanker Bridgeton and two U.S. warship escorts Sunday steamed down the Persian Gulf far ahead of a convoy of three smaller, U.S.-registered Kuwaiti tankers and two warships.

"It was another successful exercise in subterfuge by the American Navy," said one Dubai-based salvage expert. U.S. officials are striving to keep convoy movements secret and unpredictable.

All the tankers left Kuwait together early Saturday. It was not clear whether the other tankers would catch up with the Bridgeton later for the dangerous transit past Iranian anti-ship missile emplacements at the Strait of Hormuz, the gateway out of the gulf.

Iraq meanwhile said its warplanes Sunday bombed the Iranian petrochemical complex at Bandar Khomeini on the northern gulf coast for the second time in 24 hours and said Iranian shelling killed 12 civilians in Basra, southern Iraq. Iran did not comment on the report.

The 401,382-ton Bridgeton and the destroyer Kidd were spotted by a team from the NBC broadcast network aboard a helicopter about 100 miles southeast of the smaller tankers.

By early evening the patched-up supertanker, one of the largest in the world, was reported to be in international waters off the United Arab Emirates.

The USS Guadalcanal and its Sea

Stallion mine-sweeping helicopters scouted the waters ahead, said gulf-based shipping executives and another group of reporters posted farther south along the gulf.

On July 24, a mine blasted a hole in the Bridgeton off an Iranian island in the northern gulf, but the vessel safely sailed through the same waters Saturday for the return journey.

The 81,283-ton Sea Isle City and the 79,999-ton Ocean City, both tankers, and the 46,723-ton Gas King, a liquefied gas carrier, anchored for 12 hours about 50 miles off Bahrain.

They sailed at 3 p.m. escorted by the destroyers Hawes and Klakring, said Brent Sadler, a reporter for Britain's Independent Television News who saw them leave.

Sadler also said that the Hawes, without warning, sailed toward his chartered boat, bumped into it and clipped off its antenna, but there was no serious damage.

Shipping and salvage experts said the U.S. command signaled the Bridgeton to steam ahead past the anchored tankers before dawn Sunday, but its progress was not spotted until later.

The Dubai shipping expert, whose radio operators monitor gulf navigation, said the lumbering Bridgeton was sailing at about 5 mph, about half its top speed. All the shipping sources spoke on condition of anonymity.

It was the fifth one-way convoy of Kuwaiti tankers flying the American flag and escorted by U.S. warships to protect them from attacks by Iran.

The United States has blamed Iran for laying mines in the gulf and just outside its entrance in the Gulf of Oman.

Iran at first said "invisible hands" laid the explosives but later an Iranian official conceded his nation planted some mines "to defend our coastlines."

Judge's remarks bring reprimand

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — A committee that reviews the conduct of federal judges has reprimanded U.S. District Court Judge Patrick Kelly of Wichita for making "demeaning" comments to Topeka lawyer Fred W. Phelps Sr. during a hearing.

The reprimand against Kelly was issued last week by the three-judge Judicial Conference Committee to Review Circuit Court Conduct and Disability Orders. It carries no penalty.

Marge Phelps, Phelps' daughter, said Kelly had questioned the lawyer's professionalism, honesty and integrity during a March 13, 1985 hearing in U.S. District Court in Wichita.

She said court transcripts show

Kelly adjourned the hearing, saying: "Let's just leave it this way: You leave this courtroom for the last time and, for my part, it is with a sense of relief that I say to you, sir, good riddance."

Kelly, contacted at his home over the weekend, said he had received the reprimand but declined further comment.

Members of the extended Phelps family — 11 of them are lawyers — have had a bitter relationship with Kansas' federal judges.

In December, 1985, all nine U.S. District Court judges in Kansas filed a disciplinary complaint against seven members of the family, charging that they had maligned and intimidated the bench.

TWA jet lands after losing wheels

By The Associated Press

BELLEVILLE, Ill. — Passengers fearing for their lives screamed, wept and prayed as a TWA jetliner approached Scott Air Force Base for an emergency landing without one set of wheels.

Moments before the jetliner landed safely Saturday, "The pilot came on...and said, 'I wish you all well.' People began to cry," recalled passenger Ken Lew of San Francisco.

"It made people think it was the end. It was a horrible experience," Lew said after the TWA Boeing 767 touched down at Scott on two of its three landing gears and skidded along the runway on its right engine, spraying sparks.

TWA Flight 756, bound for St. Louis from San Francisco with 169 passengers and 12 airline employees, was diverted from Lambert-St. Louis International Airport to the base in southern Illinois when its right rear landing gear failed to lower and lock into place, officials said.

On Sunday, investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board and TWA worked at Scott, inspecting the crippled jetliner for clues that might explain why the right landing wheels failed to lower, said Lt. Jerry Lobb, assistant chief of public affairs at the base.

One man broke his ankle and nine other passengers suffered minor injuries when they slid down inflatable emergency chutes after the jetliner landed, Lobb said.

TWA officials said the jetliner was diverted from Lambert because the pilot felt Scott would be better equipped to handle a major emergency, with rescue vehicles on hand and the base hospital minutes away.

After landing, the passengers were taken by bus to Lambert for connecting flights to their destinations Saturday night or Sunday, Lobb said.

"It was the scariest thing that ever happened to me in my life," said Judy Anderson of San Francisco who was flying to St. Louis to visit relatives. "People threw up all over the place. I'm just glad I'm alive."

Frank Siegel, a banker from Columbus, Ohio, said most passengers thought they were about to die when flight attendants instructed them to "prepare for an impact landing."

"It was scary. There were times it was terrifying," he said.

Japan expels Soviet trade officer

By The Associated Press

TOKYO — Soviet Vice Trade Representative Yuri G. Pokrovsky left Japan Sunday, three days after being ordered out in an exchange of expulsions between Japan and the Soviet Union.

Pokrovsky flew home on a Soviet Aeroflot plane, an airline official said.

Japan announced on Thursday it was expelling him because he failed to appear for questioning on allegations he bought information about aircraft instruments and controls stolen from a Japanese company.

The announcement came shortly after Moscow said it was ordering out a Japanese defense attache, Nobuhiro Takeshima, for alleged espionage activities, and a Japanese businessman, Takao Otani, for purportedly trying to obtain commercial secrets from the Soviet Trade Ministry.

Japan's Foreign Ministry denied it was expelling Pokrovsky in retaliation. It also said no basis existed to the Soviet charges against Takeshima, one of three Japanese defense attaches stationed in Moscow.

Takeshima, the first Japanese diplomat ordered out of the Soviet Union since World War II, was expected to return to Japan this week.

Japanese-Soviet relations chilled during past months over allegations of illegal transfers of high technology material from Japan to the Soviet Union.

In April, the Japanese government said Toshiba Machine Co. illegally sold Moscow computerized milling machines. The United States said the machines enabled the Soviets to build quieter submarines.

Britons bury dead

By The Associated Press

HUNGERFORD, England — Hundreds of churchgoers wept and prayed Sunday for the victims of Britain's worst mass murder and for the quiet local man who turned into a killer on a sunny summer afternoon.

The Anglican, Roman Catholic and Methodist churches were packed as this small market town 60 miles west of London united in grief and remembered the victims of Michael Ryan's massacre Wednesday.

At the largest service, in the Anglican Parish Church of St. Lawrence, parishoner Trudy Pihlens read out the list of 16 victims killed and 14 injured and then added: "And Michael Ryan, may God have mercy on his soul."

Relatives of some of those gunned down clung to each other and almost everyone wept or fought back tears. A young woman, not related to any victim, collapsed and was helped from church. A London Broadcasting Co. radio reporter said one member of the congregation cursed when Ryan's name was mentioned.

Police piecing together Ryan's lifestyle said Sunday they were investigating claims that the 27-year-old gun-lover kept a secret arms cache and was a key figure in an illegal gun-dealing network.

The Sunday Mirror said it handed a dossier to Thames Valley Police which claimed the unemployed Ryan sold "hot" guns for use in armed robberies and enjoyed a lavish lifestyle with the proceeds.

Ryan was reported as being able to obtain any gun or ammunition he wanted.

He used a Kalashnikov assault rifle in the massacre.

Thames Valley Police said Sunday: "We are investigating the report. We can't say whether it's right or wrong at the moment."

Police have said they don't know what sparked Ryan's shooting spree. Psychiatrists say they believe he was suffering from acute schizophrenia.

Woman learns politics of toxic waste

Love Canal leader reflects on triumph

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hazardous waste transformed Lois Marie Gibbs. Nine years ago, this housewife from Niagara Falls, N.Y., rose up in anger and led her neighbors at Love Canal in a battle to force the government to buy their houses and promise to clean up what became the nation's most infamous dump.

Now, she teaches others what she learned: that hazardous waste cleanup is more a political than a scientific issue.

Since 1981 she has run the non-profit Citizen's Clearinghouse for Hazardous Wastes, based in Arlington, Va. It works with more than 1,700 environmental organizations, as well as neighborhood groups, labor unions and religious leaders.

Today, Gibbs is 37, divorced and remarried to Steven Lester, a toxicologist who helped in the Love Canal battle and now works at the clearinghouse. They have a 21-month-old son and Gibbs has a boy and a girl from her first marriage.

While 550 Love Canal families were eventually evacuated and the dump capped, the saga is not over. Lawsuits totaling $15 billion are still pending and the canal is leaking dioxins into neighboring creeks and sewers. A hearing on a federal plan to clean up the dioxins is scheduled for Tuesday in Wheatfield, N.Y.

Lois Gibbs is still involved — but no longer obsessed.

"After Love Canal, I felt it was critically important, because of all that I had learned and some of my neighbors had learned, that we provide a service to other Lois Gibbses," she said.

"I still don't consider myself an environmentalist; I rather consider myself somebody who helps fight for justice," she noted. "I don't eat beansprouts and yogurt and that sort of stuff. I care less about the snail darter and more about the child in Mississippi with the brain tumor" caused by toxic chemicals.

Gibbs grew up trusting in government and the American way. She married a chemical worker, had two children, and in 1972, they bought a modest bungalow in a development built around a toxic landfill.

Neither the Gibbses nor their neighbors knew this, but the city of Niagara Falls did. So did Hooker Chemical Co., which dumped some 21,800 tons of noxious substances in the canal from 1942 to 1952.

Hooker sold the canal and surrounding land to the city in 1953 for a token $1 with the proviso that Hooker not be held liable for future problems related to the dump. Occidental Petroleum Corp., which purchased Hooker after Love Canal, continues to deny liability.

The first hint Gibbs had that something was wrong was when her son Michael, then 6, began to have seizures after he started attending the 99th Street School. She soon discovered that the school and playground were built on top of Love Canal, a 3,000 foot-long, poison-filled trough.

Talking to neighbors, she learned many of them were sick. Some showed her chemical ooze in their back yards; others pointed out basement sump pumps giving off noxious odors. Their kids played with "fire rocks" that exploded in flames when thrown to the ground.

It took years of public hearings, health tests, chemical sampling, petitions and grass-roots organizing to get something done. Finally, all but 62 families were evacuated and their homes bought out, at a cost of $24.8 million.

The Environmental Protection Agency issued a feasibility study in June, suggesting three alternatives for cleaning up the leaking dioxins. In July, the EPA said it believed the best option would be to burn the sediments at very high temperatures, thereby destroying 99.9 percent of the dioxins. The "clean dirt" should then be stored in a permanent containment facility at Love Canal, the EPA said.

Gibbs charged that there is no real need to store the clean sediments at Love Canal.

"The reason they're pushing for on-site containment is if something is always on site, the state Department of Health never has to make a habitability statement," she said.

The same situation is true at Times Beach, Mo., another community that was evacuated because of chemical contamination, she said.

"It's much cheaper politically and economically to abandon these areas and not have people move back in. Because in order to clean them up sufficiently, it would cost well over $20 million at each and every site," she argued. "To move people out and say this area is no longer safe is much cheaper."

While she has mixed memories of Love Canal, Gibbs said the experience overall was positive for her.

"Being a victim was horrible," she said. "But the experience of learning how the world runs and how you can make a difference, individually and collectively, is an experience that was terrific."

"It's given me the ability not only to become who I am but to be able to go out and share this information with other people, with a sense of confidence and sort of a vision that you can fight this and you can win," Gibbs said.

Penn begins term

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Actor Sean Penn forsook the rural jail where he served the first part of a sentence for probation violation and checked into the huge Los Angeles County Central Jail to complete his term, officials said Sunday.

Penn, 27, who has lately received more attention for his fisticuffs than his roles in such films as "The Falcon and the Snowman" and "Fast Times at Ridgemont High," was booked into the downtown lockup late Saturday, said sheriff's Sgt. John Andrews.

More than 5,000 prisoners are confined at the Central Jail.

The feisty husband of singer Madonna served the first five days of his term in the Mono County Jail in the Sierra Nevada town of Bridgeport, where he paid for his own lodging. He was released Aug. 6 to resume his motion picture work.

Updated system for phone bills begins this fall

By The Collegian Staff

Roommates' squabbles over telephone bills might be less of a problem now due to a new billing system implemented in University residence halls.

Students who directly dial long-distance calls from dorms must use an access code to complete their call. But, they may still place credit card and collect calls.

"The code is an access number, not a charge card," said Tom Gallagher, director of computing and telecommunications activities. "Since it isn't a credit card, students won't have to pay the higher rate of a credit card."

The code will identify the caller and smooth out the billing process, he said.

"Before, there may have been two people per phone in a residence hall, which could have created some question about the bill. This system will remove any questions," Gallagher said.

Such is not the case for other Kansas colleges that have adopted different systems to meet the new policy.

"Other colleges are forcing their students to use credit cards to make their calls. We decided not to do that and adopted our plan," Gallagher said. "They may do something similar later on."

The new system routes calls through telecommunications and a state wide telephone network. The system is the result of a new policy set by the Division of Information Systems, which makes policies for all state agencies.

Since most of the calls made on campus are within the University, the system will allow the college to contain costs.

"The system will keep the University from being vulnerable to the rate changes that Southwestern Bell and AT&T make (for on-campus calls)," Gallagher said.

Students living in residence halls were previously billed directly from Southwestern Bell but now will be billed by the University.

U.S. visit by Gorbachev 'rumor'

By The Associated Press

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — Reagan administration officials said Sunday they have no reason to believe a published report that Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev plans a September meeting with the president.

The Los Angeles Times reported in its Sunday editions that Soviet officials have told the United States that Gorbachev plans to visit New York in late September to attend the U.N. General Assembly and then go to Washington to meet with Reagan.

The Times attributed its information to "informed officials," who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

It did not say whether they were U.S. or Soviet officials.

An administration official, in Santa Barbara while the president vacations at his ranch north of here, said he knew nothing about any such visit.

A U.S. official in Washington, also speaking on condition of anonymity, called the story

"implausible."

The president's national security adviser, Frank C. Carlucci, was away from Santa Barbara and could not immediately be reached. Before leaving, however, he told Cable News Network that he had spent Saturday with Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Shultz said nothing about such a visit.

Landfill

landfill closure plan to KDHE.

While KDHE mandated the submission of closure plans in its July 17 order, those plans should have been submitted years ago, said Peter Rombold, attorney for the Moehlan Bottoms residents. According to Kansas statutes, "Persons desiring to obtain a permit shall file a site closure plan at the time a permit application is submitted."

KDHE issued a Solid Waste Disposal Permit to Riley County in June 1976 to operate the landfill.

But a closure plan was never submitted to KDHE, and the department continued to license the landfill annually without requiring a closure plan, Harden said.

"There's never been any closure plan anywhere in the state," he said.

As for a new disposal system, Harden said the main alternatives the county will consider will involve recycling or incinerating the waste. Or, he said, there is a "minute possibility" the county may open another landfill.

"It's a difficult choice," he said. "If we bury the waste, we put the groundwater at risk. If we burn it, we put the atmosphere at risk."

Another consideration in selecting a disposal method is cost, Harden said. An incineration system could cost several million dollars to install, while a conventional landfill costs only a few hundred thousand dollars.

Funds for the new site will probably come from a bond issuance, and could be "the largest bonded indebtedness expenditure the county has made," Harden said.

So far, commissioners have budgeted between $500,000 and $600,000 for the landfill project in 1988, he said.

Regardless of which disposal method is selected, Harden said, the site will likely be a regional one and could include Junction City and Fort Riley.

Until the decisions are made, however, it's business as usual at the landfill.

"I imagine we'll be out at the landfill until the day before the new place opens," Harden said, adding that 135 tons of trash are dumped daily at the landfill.

"A landfill messing up the groundwater is bad," he said. "But not as bad as having no place to dump the trash."

Minnesota veteran compiles directory

By The Associated Press

FREEPORT, Minn. — Ron McGinnis pulled his semitrailer truck into St. Louis, hometown of an old Vietnam war buddy. He found a motel, a beer and a phone book, but he couldn't find Jim Boettcher.

"I must have called every Boettcher in the St. Louis phone book. And, of all names, wouldn't you know his wife's was Smith. So I didn't even try."

But McGinnis, 39, of Freeport, didn't give up his search for Boettcher and his other Army buddies. In fact, he's not only looking for his own buddies, but everybody else's as well.

McGinnis wants to put together a directory of veterans' addresses and phone numbers. That way vets like him could keep in touch with each other.

"There's a bond there. We share something that others will never know," he said.

McGinnis formed Veteran's Directory Inc. in January. He quit his trucking job about three months later to devote time to the project.

He works out of an office in the back of his house, where he spends his days making telephone calls, writing letters and preparing news releases.

"We're looking for recognition at this point. We're here. We're not going to give up," he said.

The "we" is McGinnis and five or six volunteers, whom he calls his board of directors. He admits he's the only full-time worker, and an unpaid one at that, running the operation on donations.

Some vets have sent back the information needed to get their names in the directory. McGinnis keeps them filed by state in his desk drawer. Before he's finished, he'll probably fill several filing cabinets.

He estimates there are 2.5 million vets in the American Legion alone. And then there are the deceased vets and civilian war vets he'd like to include in the book.

"A lot of people don't realize how many civilians served in the war. I remember the pilot and stewardesses on the plane that took us home. (Enemy troops) were bombing the airfield when they landed."

Accidents claim 2 lives

By The Associated Press

Two people died in weekend traffic accidents on Kansas roads this weekend, including a Manhattan man who was riding in a pickup truck involved in a two-truck accident early Sunday.

Riley County police said the victim, James G. Plata, 40, was a passenger in a truck driving south on U.S. 24 near Manhattan when another pickup traveling north swerved into the southbound lane.

Rebekah Plata, who was driving the Plata car, attempted to avoid the oncoming car but was broadsided, police said. The accident occurred about 3:45 a.m. Sunday.

The driver of the northbound truck, who was in custody Sunday, was to be charged with aggravated vehicular homicide, driving while under the influence, transporting an open container of alcohol and driving left of center, according to a statement released by Capt. Nick Edvy.

Frank Linden, 22, of Braman, Oklahoma, died Friday night in a two-car wreck on U.S. 166 east of South Haven, according to the Sumner County sheriff's department.

The car Linden was driving crossed the center line and hit another car head on, officers said.

the crash to the nationwide outpouring of support after the explosion of the space shuttle Challenger.

"These feelings were best expressed in the poignant statement from one of the rescuers at the crash site, who found little Cecilia Cichan," O'Hair said. "He said, 'She will never know me, but I will know and remember her the rest of my life.'"

The Ann Arbor hospital has received more than $16,000 in donations for Cecilia. A 5-year-old girl from Auburn, Mass., raised about $400 selling Kool-Aid over the weekend to buy Cecilia a present.

The last wreckage of the McDonnell Douglas MD-80 aircraft was removed Saturday from the crash site near the intersection of Interstate 94 and Middlebelt Road at the edge of the airport.

Before Middlebelt Road is opened later this week, workers will reseed a scorched embankment and repair the road surface.

Police battle riots after worker dies in S. Korean clash

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — Riot police on Sunday fought hundreds of striking shipyard workers protesting the death of a fellow worker in a previous clash, news reports said. A policeman was reported seriously injured.

The death on Saturday of 22-year-old Lee Suk-kyu was the first in a month of national labor turmoil.

A Labor Ministry official said meanwhile that for the first time, the number of labor disputes settled Sunday exceeded the number of new disputes. But he said disputes at 494 workplaces still affected hundreds of thousands of workers.

The official would not allow use of his name.

Bus service in Seoul returned almost to normal after a partial walk-out Saturday, but foreign and domestic flights at Seoul's airport were delayed Sunday as 500 ground workers walked out for the second consecutive day.

In Koje on the southern coast, the police officer was badly hurt in a clash with shipyard workers when he tried to persuade about 500 workers to release Lee's body for an autopsy in another hospital with better facilities, news reports said.

The workers were keeping watch over the body at a hospital mortuary. They had sealed off the mortuary with welding torches because they feared that police might try to forcibly take away Lee's body to destroy evidence, news reports said.

Lee worked at the struck shipyard, Daewoo Shipbuilding and Machinery Ltd. He was reported to have been hit by fragments of a tear gas canister in a clash between about 3,000 workers and 1,300 police in which two dozen other workers suffered minor injuries.

The policeman reported injured Sunday was not identified.

About 400 policemen were at the scene. No arrests were reported.

About a mile away, police fired tear gas to prevent 1,000 workers from marching out of the Daewoo shipyard, South Korea's second biggest, after a one-hour protest rally, the state television KBS reported.

A union leader was quoted as saying earlier that Daewoo workers would avoid violent protests until after Lee's funeral, tentatively set for Wednesday.

No arrests or injuries were reported in the 30-minute clash.

Daewoo workers rioted Saturday after talks on higher wages and benefits broke down.

Swim adjusts to team, expectations

One of 18 junior college transfers signed, Quarterback Gary Swim is the Wildcats' hope for a renewed air attack this season. A transfer from Snow Community College in Utah, Swim passed for over 1,600 yards and 11 touchdowns last year.

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

It's not easy being the new kid on the block. Just ask Gary Swim, the highly-touted transfer from Snow Community College in Utah and K-State's No. 1 quarterback this season.

Of the 18 junior college players signed by head football coach Stan Parrish this year, Swim was K-State's biggest prize. And even though he has yet to play a down in a Wildcat uniform, Swim is receiving more media attention for a K-State quarterback since Darrell Dickey led the 'Cats to an Independence Bowl appearance in 1982.

With Swim's arrival came a myriad of hopes that his ability, which accounted for more than 1,600 yards and 11 touchdowns in an injury-shortened season at Snow last year, would elevate the "Air Parrish" passing attack which simply fluttered last year.

But even with his vaunted reputation — while at Snow, Swim was compared to such former standouts as David Archer and Mike Norseth, who each made the transfer to a Big Eight Conference school — Swim said the transfer wasn't an easy one.

"It's been a learning experience," he said.

"When (the transfers) came in here, some of the players looked at us and told us Coach Parrish had already granted starting positions and stuff like that. We had to pull together, realize our juco days were over and work just as hard or harder than anybody else."

Swim, though, has an aura of confidence. When asked about the comparisons to Archer and Norseth, the 6-foot-3, 180-pound junior insists, "I'm my own type of player." He quickly earned the starting nod and the respect of his teammates with his strong arm and ability to read defenses and had an impressive showing (10 of 14, 87 yards) in the annual Alumni-Varsity scrimmage last spring.

"We've definitely upgraded the position," said Parrish who, in addition to head coaching, will be in charge of the quarterbacks this season. "We knew that during recruiting without solidifying that position, we're not going to be a winner here."

After surviving the initial transfer shock, Swim now has to contend that "Air Parrish" will be somewhat grounded this season in favor of a strong running corps. Parrish said Thursday he will favor the running game this season — which includes the likes of record-setting tailback Tony Jordan and the return of a healthy Maurice Henry — in an effort to improve the Wildcats' total offense, which finished seventh in the Big Eight last season.

"It's been a learning experience."

—Gary Swim

Still, Swim is optimistic about his chances to test his skill against a strong non-conference schedule and the seven Big Eight opponents.

"When I came here I knew what Tony Jordan was all about and I'm not disappointed that Coach Parrish has said he is going to 'ground' his passing attack," Swim said. "We're still going to throw the ball 25 to 30 times a game, which is quite a bit for Big Eight ball."

"And when teams scout us and start to key off Jordan, it will leave the passing attack open," he added.

Besides the chance to be the No. 1 quarterback on what was a pass-oriented team, Swim was also lured to K-State because of the emphasis Parrish placed on the recruiting of junior college players.

If asked by a senior athlete in high school, Swim said he would suggest they go to a junior college for one or two years to hone their skills.

"A lot of people think a junior college is just full of dumb athletes who don't have good GPAs but that isn't the case," he said.

"I would say a junior college is the right way to go because they could get playing time, have more individual instruction and can then know what they're doing when they get to the major-college level."

Swim has noticed a difference between junior college and Division I ball — as far as receivers are concerned.

"Here the receivers are quicker and a lot smarter whereas in juco they were slower and more of a position-type player."

One question to be answered is K-State's offensive line. With the loss of three starters, will the line have the ability to handle the onslaught of defensive rushing that harried starters Randy Williams and Tim Hanson last season? Swim said he isn't concerned about his protection in the pocket.

"I feel safe behind this line," Swim said. "They all came back this summer 20-plus pounds heavier — there's a wall in front of me. Plus, I have the ability to move if I have to move."

Swim chose K-State over Illinois, Utah State and Weber State, and knows what it's like to be a winner and a loser. His high school team went 0-8 his senior season. And after a hardship season at Snow, Swim guided the team to an 11-0 record and a national title.

To be a winner, Swim realizes the team has to cooperate to reach its goals. Even though there was great competition for the starting job last spring with returning senior Tim Hanson and three additional quality quarterbacks on the roster, Swim said there is no animosity between them.

"We get along real well. We know what we have to do, which includes working with each other to make each other better."

Sometimes great quarterbacks are made — sometimes they are born to be great. Swim's opportunity to become a field general could be attributed to lady luck. He started at receiver his junior year in high school and may have stayed there if his coach wouldn't have known about his passing ability from a punt, pass and kick competition when he was a sophomore.

What might be a godsend for the 'Cat passing attack this year may never have happened if Swim had received basketball offers after his senior season in high school. That's right — his first love was the sport founded by James Naismith.

If K-State is successful through the air this season, gridiron fans can be thankful that basketball coach Lon Kruger didn't get to Swim first.

Summer sports memories linger

For the third year in a row, I decided to spend the summer in Manhattan. If you haven't yet experienced spending a summer at K-State, I recommend it.

Working on the Collegian this summer gave me a first-hand opportunity to find out something new about summer life in the Little Apple.

Since you didn't get to read the Collegian over the summer, I'll try to update you on a few summer tidbits you may not have caught in your hometown newspaper.

■ The K-State Crew made excellent showings at the Chicago Sprint regatta (where the men's varsity took the championship) and at the Gateway regatta in St. Louis. After excellent spring and summer seasons, crew should have a strong silver anniversary season.

■ Norris Coleman was picked 38th in the National Basketball Association draft by the struggling Los Angeles Clippers. He was picked in the second round, but was the fourth pick of the Clippers. From K-State: good luck and goodbye, Norris. It's been a long road, huh?

■ On another positive basketball note, K-State forward Mitch Richmond was selected to play on the U.S. team in the World University games. Richmond was selected as one of 12 amateur players from a field of 20 finalists from around the country. That should have been an awesome learning experience for an already-awesome player.

■ On a less positive note and something that's not fun to write about or even mention, a motorcycle gang ripped a page out of our basketball history book by stabbing to death former K-State basketball standout Jari Wills. Wills played for the Wildcats during the '78-'80 seasons and later served as a graduate coaching assistant under Jack Hartman. The tragedy involved Wills previously breaking up a fight in an Ottawa, Kan., bar and ended ten months later when Wills was jumped by the bikers.

Sports Rapp

JEFF RAPP
Sports Editor

■ For the second consecutive year, Anne Stadler and Jacques Struckhoff were voted to the GTE/COSIDA Academic All-America first team. Stadler, a fifth-year senior in education, and Struckhoff, a fifth-year senior in physical therapy and nutrition science, both carry 4.0 GPAs. That's right; amid the endless practice schedule and traveling, neither of these athletes has ever received a "B" in college. That is excellence in its purest form. Applause, applause.

■ The rugby team played in three seven-man tournaments this summer, and they performed typically well. The rules were basically the same for seven guys instead of fifteen, except that some of the chaos was cut down and all the players were really tired after the games. But basically it was just a few less players than usual grinding each other into the grass. You gotta love it.

■ One other thing happened that I'll mention is that Mike Hinkle from the Wildcat baseball squad was drafted by the St. Louis Cardinals.

■ Something I won't discuss are the scuffed attitudes and the corked feelings of major league baseball, except to say, "Bo, thanks for the memories."

Molitor taking hitting streak in stride

By The Associated Press

Paul Molitor is aware that he may never pass this way again as he climbs baseball's ladder of longest hitting streaks.

The Milwaukee Brewers' designated hitter extended his streak to 38 games Sunday in a 10-5 victory over the Kansas City Royals and then looked forward to Monday, a day off.

"It's nicer the higher you go naturally," said Molitor, admitting that there is not much difference between 37 and 38 games.

"But when you talk about in comparison to what the record is and everything else, it's really not that significant."

"Thirty eight, I was thinking about that today. That's a long time, you know, and those numbers still seem far away out there. I'm still trying to take that one game at a time approach."

Molitor lined a fifth-inning single off Charlie Leibrandt to keep the streak going and the Brewers also got big efforts from Greg Brock and Bill Schroeder, who had four hits and three runs batted in apiece.

The Brewers, who had 17 hits Sunday, now take a day off before beginning a three-game series with the Cleveland Indians at home.

"I'm really looking forward to a day off. We've had a tough stretch since the All-Star break. This will only be our second day off. It will be nice to get away from the park for a day," Molitor said.

"I'm going to enjoy a day at home."

After going hitless in his first two at-bats, Molitor led off the bottom of the fifth by lining a Leibrandt slider to left on the first pitch, giving him the fifth longest streak in major-league history.

Big Eight downs Czechoslovakia

By Staff and Wire Reports

After a dismal showing in its debut contest in Ahearn Field House on Aug. 13, the Big Eight select basketball team made a good showing for the conference Friday in the first round of the International Tournament being held in Beijing, China.

The team, which is coached by and was selected by K-State head coach Lon Kruger and his staff, lost to a team of K-State and Big Eight area alumni 89-85 in Manhattan in front of a crowd estimated at 2,000 people to kick off its campaign.

The alumni team included former K-Staters such as Lynn Smith, Kevin Muff, Scott Langton and Eddie Elder, but the one who really showcased his talent was Joe Wright.

Wright went 5 for 6 from beyond the three-point line and scored 29 points to lead all scorers in only 19 minutes of play.

After the game, Kruger looked realistically at his team's progress after three days of practice. "We (the select team) still have a lot of areas to work on, but I thought the last 10 minutes of the game we played more aggressively. There were a lot of signs which were very pleasing."

"I thought it was a really good game. I thought the alumni played hard and did an excellent job," Kruger said.

On the opening day of the nine-nation tournament, the Big Eight all-stars rallied from an early second half 10-point deficit and defeated the Czechoslovakian national team 74-69.

Coached by Kruger, the Big Eight team trailed 40-37 at halftime and were down 47-37 three minutes into the second half.

But the team took advantage when Czechoslovakia's 7-foot-1 center, Jiri Okac, was benched with foul trouble, and surged into the lead at 56-55 with nine minutes left.

The score was tied at 68 with 1½ minutes left before Scott Wilke of Colorado and Archie Marshall of Kansas made jump shots to put the Americans ahead 72-68.

Steve Henson of K-State, who was a favorite of the capacity crowd of 18,000 at Beijing's Capital Gymnasium, added two free throws to cap the U.S. victory.

Wilke led the United States with 15 points, followed by Henson with 10, Gary Thompson of Iowa State and Royce Jeffries of Oklahoma State with nine points each.

Saturday, the Big Eight team was plagued by poor field goal shooting and turnovers in a 74-62 loss to Poland.

The team went an ice-cold 38 percent from the field and committed 18 turnovers. Wilke led the all-stars again with 14 points and Henson added 12. Kansas' Mark Randall was the only other scorer for the Big Eight in double figures with 10 points.

In action Sunday, the Big Eight team defeated Malaysia 75-60, paced by three players scoring in double figures.

With the victory, the Big Eight select team moved its record to 2-1. The team will next meet China in a contest to be played at 3:30 a.m. (CDT) Tuesday.

Sooners picked preseason No. 1

By The Associated Press

For Oklahoma football coach Barry Switzer, having one of his teams selected No. 1 in the preseason is no big deal. And he treats it that way.

"I don't really care. It doesn't make any difference," Switzer said. "We have been selected preseason No. 1 many, many times. We've won it when we've been selected, and we've finished high."

The Sooners were picked by an overwhelming margin over Big Eight rival Nebraska in The Associated Press poll released Saturday. It is the third straight year Oklahoma has been the preseason No. 1 choice, and the sixth time in Switzer's 15 years as head coach.

It's only the fourth time since the AP began a preseason poll in 1950 that two teams from the same conference were ranked 1-2.

Iowa and Ohio State of the Big Ten were 1-2 in the 1961 preseason poll, Nebraska and Colorado of the Big Eight held the top two spots in 1972, and Nebraska and Oklahoma led the way in 1983.

Defending national champion Penn State is No. 11 in this year's balloting.

Oklahoma received 55 of 60 first-place votes and 1,193 of a possible 1,200 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters. The Sooners finished third last year after winning the national championship in 1985.

Oklahoma also won national championships in 1956, 1974 and 1975 after being picked No. 1 in the preseason poll. The Sooners also were the preseason choice in 1957 and 1977, but finished fourth and seventh, respectively.

The only other teams to win the national championship after starting out No. 1 were Tennessee in 1951, Michigan State in 1952 and Alabama in 1978.

Eight starters from an offensive unit that averaged more than 40 points per game in 1986 return this year. Included are four of five offensive linemen, who make up what Switzer says is the best group in school history, along with quarterback Jamelle Holieway and All-America tight end Keith Jackson.

Seven starters return on defense, although Switzer said he is concerned about finding solid defensive tackles.

"The secondary and the linebacking corps are good, but we have no depth at linebacker. The defensive tackles are the key. We've got to find some players there and we've got nobody who's ever played," he said.

Nebraska, which finished fifth last year, received three first-place votes and 1,005 points. UCLA, No. 14 in last year's final poll, is third with one first-place vote and 935 points. The other first-place ballot went to Penn State.

Ohio State, the seventh-place finisher a year ago, is fourth with 906 points. Auburn, No. 6 last year, is fifth with 835.

LSU, which ended 1986 as No. 10, is sixth with 789 points, followed by Michigan with 754. The Wolverines wound up eighth last year.

The preseason No. 8 team is Florida State, which didn't make the final Top Twenty last year. The Seminoles received 723 points.

Clemson is ninth with 682 points after finishing 17th last year. Miami of Florida, runnerup to Penn State in 1986 after losing to the Nittany Lions 14-10 in the Fiesta Bowl, rounds out the preseason Top Ten with 676 points.

The Second Ten consists of Penn State, Arkansas, Washington, Arizona State, Texas A&M, Iowa, Tennessee, Notre Dame, Southern California and a tie for 20th between Florida and Georgia.

Cubans win gold

By The Associated Press

Victor Mesa's bases-loaded single in the eighth inning off U.S. relief ace Cris Carpenter rallied Cuba to a 13-9 victory over the United States Saturday and its fifth consecutive Pan American Games baseball gold medal.

Until Mesa's decisive hit, the United States had been ahead 9-8 since the fifth inning, a lead fashioned on Ed Sprague's leadoff homer.

The victory avenged the 6-4 loss to the U.S. team last Saturday on Ty Griffin's two-run, two-out homer in the ninth inning — a loss that snapped Cuba's 37-game Pan Am winning streak.

This time, Griffin made a key error in the eighth inning, leading to Cuba's two runs off Carpenter.

Locker room lifts spirits

By Jeff Rapp
Sports Editor

Look what sprang up over the summer.

After a speedy construction that began in early June and was virtually completed by August 12, the K-State football squad and athletic program received a shot in the arm.

The Wildcats received a brand new football locker room and training facility, which have been sore spots in the program since the building of the complex but are now among the best in the Big Eight Conference. In fact, the locker room facilities could be the best in the conference, according to athletic director Larry Travis.

"I think that we have come into the Big Eight Conference with a bang," Travis said. "This locker room facility will put us in the elite of the conference, as far as having locker room and dressing facilities for our athletes. I think with the addition of facilities such as this one and the completion of the Fred Bramlage Coliseum (in 1988) there will be no better athletic facilities in the country."

The concept of the new locker room and training area first surfaced at the home of K-State president Jon Wefald after a recruiting party was held there last year, Travis said.

"We (head coach Stan Parrish, Travis and Wefald) talked about what we had to do to upgrade and to be a viable winner in the Big Eight Conference. Dr. Wefald, at that time, decided to do this project.

"Without his (Wefald's) support, we wouldn't be able to get this thing moving. Without his foresight and his help, we would never have been able to get this thing off the ground," Travis said.

Also, because of the financial nature of the completed project, Travis had many more thank-yous to make. No money was received from the University for the project, as it was completed strictly through donations of time, money and services.

The alumni foundation gave the athletic department permission to raise the $140,000 for the project, then major monetary donations were made by alumni Fred Bramlage of Junction City and Gil Johnson of Colorado Springs, Colo., according to Travis. He also thanked several local contractors and businessmen for their donations of time and materials to raise the structure.

In addition to a few donations from parents of the players, Travis cited Dot and Virgil Lundberg of Salina as the donors of over half the money needed for the project. Virgil was a K-State football player in 1929. His shoulder pads and helmet from that year will be on display in the locker room, Travis said.

"These people, through their gift, have made this facility possible, and this facility will be known as the Lundberg Locker Room. This facility will be something that the young men and women who function and work here will be able to look at with pride," Travis said.

Parrish said the locker rooms have created a brighter atmosphere for the players and coaching staff.

"The old locker rooms were dingy and dark — a real loser's heaven. But this new facility is among the top in the conference. It will really help us in recruiting," Parrish said.

Sports Briefly

Surcharge no longer necessary

TOPEKA — If Kansas colleges and universities admit senior citizens to athletic events without the sale of a ticket they do not have to assess 25-cent surcharge to those admissions, Attorney General Robert T. Stephan held in a recent opinion.

Coach schedules team tryout

Any K-State students interested in trying out for the baseball team should attend a meeting at 4 p.m. today at Frank Myers Field. Coach Mike Clark said there is no need to bring baseball equipment because this is an informational meeting. Actual tryouts will be held Aug. 31. For more information, call 532-6910.

Golf team tryouts planned

An informational meeting for students interested in trying out for the men's or women's golf teams coached by Rob Sedorek has been set for 7:30 p.m., Aug. 31, in Ahearn Field House. Actual tryouts will be held Sept. 1 at Rolling Meadows Golf Course in Junction City.

Volleyball tryouts today

Tryouts for the K-State women's volleyball team will be held today at 3 p.m. in Ahearn Field House and are open to any female enrolled in a full schedule at K-State. Those wishing to participate should be dressed in appropriate practice clothing. For more information, contact head coach Scott Nelson at 532-5935.

Here's hoping for a post-season feast

Stan Parrish and I have a dinner date Saturday, Nov. 21.

We'll either be dining on a rather large plate of crow washed down with a cheap bottle of Welch's Sparkling Grape Juice, or we'll be sipping vintage Dom Perignon while enjoying a succulent cut of prime rib.

What happens over the next three months will determine whether the K-State football coach and I, always the eternal optimist, will enjoy that late November outing or not.

Parrish, who enters his second season as the Wildcat head man with a team that is arguably bigger, faster and stronger than any other ever assembled at this University, is looking for good things from his 1987 squad.

Austin Peay State, the opening day opponent, and Kansas, the arch-rival Parents' Day foe, are considered by Parrish to be to teams that his squad must defeat if it's to have any hope of making the 1987 campaign anything but a carbon copy of the 2-9 1986 effort.

Parrish won't likely admit it up front, but he has to be feeling fairly confident that those wins will come. Two wins, however, won't buy a team respect. Not in a conference that boasts the Nos. 1 and 2 teams in the Associated Press' pre-season rankings (Oklahoma and Nebraska), and two other teams (Colorado and Oklahoma State) that received votes in that same poll.

No, the Wildcat coach has got to feel it is imperative that his team win each of its three home non-conference games — not just the first one against Austin Peay State.

Once again, Parrish may not admit it, but wins over Army and Tulsa have to be considered a good possibility in the mind of a coach that contends his team is much improved over the unit he inherited in December 1985.

With a possible four wins on the board, Parrish looks to the games against Missouri, Oklahoma State, Iowa State and Colorado as opportunities to take two more wins (and possibly post an upset win in another) and finish the year with a record above the .500 mark.

Before you start choking on your breakfast or break out laughing so hard that you disrupt your first lecture class, let me say, for the God-only-knows umpteenth time, that I feel this might be the year K-State can help its fans forget about all the pain they've endured over the last several years.

I've either lost a great many of you by now, or I've hopefully peaked your interest. Why do I find myself agreeing with Parrish that a team that finished 2-9 last season is instantly good enough to triple that win total in 1987? Good question. And one that deserves some good answers.

I've been at K-State since the 1982 season. That year, for those youngsters reading, was the first and only year that a K-State team went to a bowl game. Although the team looked less than impressive in dropping the Independence Bowl contest to Wisconsin, the season provided K-State fans with a dose of euphoria they hadn't experienced before

Svoboda on Sports

— and most assuredly haven't since.

Until now.

A team that wants to be a consistent winner can't win without several key ingredients, among them a balanced offensive attack, a physical defense and a strong special teams unit. K-State now has all three for the first time in recent memory.

Tailback Tony Jordan, who Parrish touts as one of the top players at his position in the country, leads the offensive attack. But don't think for a minute that he's the only diamond among several other unimpressive old rocks.

The quarterback battle, which in past years has consisted of a tough choice between the lesser of two or three evils, has been an extremely competitive one in fall drills. Gary Swim, the No. 1 man at the position, and Tim Hanson, the No. 2 signal-caller, are both capable of keeping opposing defenses from keying entirely on Jordan.

Although Swim, by Parrish's admission, lacked rhythm in Saturday's scrimmage at KSU Stadium, he has the size and throwing arm found on most legitimate pro quarterback prospects. He hasn't delivered yet, but here's betting that he does.

And Hanson, who threw a 51-yard scoring strike to John Williams in the scrimmage, gives the Wildcats something else they haven't had as of late — a legitimate backup quarterback.

On the defensive side, the linebacking corps and the secondary are the strong points of a unit that is basically the same one that took the field for the Wildcats in 1986.

Senior leadership, most notably that provided by linebackers Matt Wallerstedt and David Wallace and defensive back Brad Lambert, makes the defense that much stronger.

Anyone who watched Saturday's scrimmage or has seen the Wildcats in practice this fall has no doubt seen a few fights — yes, legitimate fights — between the offensive and defensive units. Wallace was found on the bottom of one such group discussion Saturday, and he's likely to be in on a few more before the season ends.

That's the difference in this team and those of past years here — they may fight in practice, but they're doing it because a healthy desire to win is motivating them. This team genuinely believes in each other and the fights in practice are nothing more than a way of expending the energy necessary to reach the intensity level it takes to become great.

And as Frank Ganz's Kansas City Chiefs special teams unit showed one year ago, a strong kicking game can also separate a bowl contender from an also-ran.

Mark Porter, who returns for his third year handling placements for the Wildcats, and Ken Olson, who was ranked among the top five jumbo punters in the nation at American River (Calif.) Community College one year ago, lead a strong kicking corps.

To bring all of these components together into a team that can win requires strong leadership, and Parrish has taken a much more visible and vocal role in the preparation process this off-season. That, maybe more than anything, will insure the success of this team.

Stan Parrish has been a winner in every year he's been a head coach except one...and we don't have to let our minds wander too far to figure out when that was.

We should, however, let our minds wander and think about what it would feel like to support a winner.

Wins over Austin Peay State, Army, Tulsa, Missouri, Kansas and Iowa State are possible, and I'm betting on them. Toss in an upset over either Oklahoma State or Colorado, and K-State fans would have a real reason to riot.

And Stan Parrish and I would finally get to eat some prime rib. I'm tired of eating crow, and Parrish has never had to. Dom Perignon for everyone.

Study: Farming may be most deadly

By The Associated Press

MADISON, Wis. — Those who make a living off the land also stand a high chance of dying from it, a researcher says.

University of Wisconsin researcher Roger Tormoehlen said he believes farming may be the most hazardous occupation of all because it also kills children.

Statistics show coal mining is the only occupation in the United States more dangerous than farming, which kills 1,600 people a year nationwide.

Last year, there were 67 farm deaths in Wisconsin. Thirteen of the victims were younger than age 15; five were 4 years old or younger.

"Statistics that measure fatalities in different industries don't count children under 14," Tormoehlen said. "If you count those, farming may be the most hazardous industry in the country. They don't let children work."

Children do drive tractors, the most frequent cause of fatal farm accidents in all age groups, he said.

According to Tormoehlen, 247 children under the age of 15 were killed in farm accidents between 1970 and 1984, and 100 died after being run over or crushed by a tractor.

Younger victims were often passengers or standing behind a wheel, while older children were often driving the tractor that killed them, he said.

In Stoughton last month, separate tractor accidents killed two young boys. David Augustine, 3, was run over by a manure spreader being pulled by a tractor, while James Byers, 8, died when a tractor ran over him.

Farm children, like their parents, often fall victim to the myriad of machines that harvest, bale, spread and transport, but which are also capable of crushing, mangling or suffocating.

A recent state study showed one in four Wisconsin farm families is likely to have an injury accident during a given year — a total of 20,000 farm injuries annually in the state.

Farm officials say one of the most dangerous pieces of farm machinery other than a tractor is its attached power take-off shaft (PTO), which rotates at speeds up to 1,000 revolutions per minute and can tear off clothes, skin and limbs.

A national study conducted by Frederick Rivara at the University of Tennessee found that more than half of children involved in fatal farm accidents die without ever reaching a physician. Only 7.4 percent live long enough to be admitted to a hospital.

The same is often true for their parents, Tormoehlen said, especially in cases when farmers try to take on a task alone that is too much for one person.

"There's no one around to help them do it, so they do it alone. And if there's an accident, the injured person may lie for hours before getting help, making the injury even more severe or fatal," he said.

Tormoehlen travels the state giving lectures on farm safety to adults and children. He said farm parents, and sometimes their children, usually nod knowingly when he uses a toy tractor to demonstrate that farm tractors pulling a heavy load with a hitch mounted too high will tip over.

Most farm injuries, whether fatal or not, aren't due to ignorance on the part of farmers, but are caused by carelessness, fatigue, or, in the case of children, lack of experience, Tormoehlen said.

Before you choose a long distance service, take a close look.

You may be thinking about choosing one of the newer carriers over AT&T in order to save money.

Think again.

Since January 1987, AT&T's rates have dropped more than 15% for direct-dialed out-of-state calls. So they're lower than you probably realize. For information on specific rates, you can call us at 1 800 222-0300.

And AT&T offers clear long distance connections, operator assistance, 24-hour customer service, and immediate credit for wrong numbers. Plus, you can use AT&T to call from anywhere to anywhere, all over the United States and to over 250 countries.

You might be surprised at how good a value AT&T really is. So before you choose a long distance company, pick up the phone.

Lonetree trial remains secret with censoring

By The Associated Press

QUANTICO, Va. — Marine Sgt. Clayton Lonetree has been tried and convicted of espionage and faces life in prison, but government censorship kept the public ignorant about much of his court-martial.

Lawyers for the former Moscow embassy guard weren't even allowed to ask one witness who he was.

From the moment the trial opened July 22 until Lonetree's conviction Friday, the proceedings at Quantico Marine Base were time and again closed to the public, while CIA and State Department attorneys were said to be in the courtroom.

Those agencies declined comment on their role in the case of the first Marine to stand court-martial for espionage. Lonetree, 25, of St. Paul, Minn., was found guilty on 13 counts, the most serious of which alleged he gave CIA identities and floor plans of the U.S. embassies in Moscow and Vienna to the Soviet KGB.

Authorities said the investigation began Dec. 14 when Lonetree went to the CIA station chief in Vienna and said he had become involved with a Soviet agent, Aleksiy Yefimov, after falling in love with a Soviet translator at the Moscow embassy, Violetta Sanni.

Sanni had introduced Yefimov to Lonetree as her Uncle Sasha, investigators said. Lonetree was interrogated by the CIA for several days in Vienna before being taken to London by Navy investigators who obtained two sworn confessions.

Defense lawyers contended that Lonetree was tricked into implicating himself, but they were unable to get the confessions thrown out. They argued that Lonetree turned over nothing of value and was instead a scapegoat in a bungled investigation of spying in the Moscow embassy.

Reporters covering the trial were not allowed into the courtroom or even to stand on the sidewalk outside to question people. They were confined to a building where they could watch on closed-circuit television, except when government censors turned it off.

Defense lawyers Michael Stuhff and William Kunstler protested, saying the censorship was imposed to create an illusion that important secrets were being discussed in a shoddy case. They were themselves under a court order that prevented them from describing what happened during censored sessions and from even mentioning the CIA.

They gave journalists a vague idea of what was going on by frequent references to a "certain intelligence agency."

"This Star Chamber procedure, actively orchestrated by the anonymous intelligence agency, which has a number of its attorneys overseeing all stages of this court-martial, has resulted in lowering an unnecessary and deliberately prejudicial secrecy curtain over all stages of the proceedings," a defense statement said.

Following the verdict, Kunstler said: "We shall appeal and we shall fight this to the end, and we hope, in the end, justice will prevail."

During the court-martial, the journalists' two-set television hookup did not always work. Some reporters noted that the technical difficulties never occurred while the chief prosecutor, Marine Maj. David L. Beck, was stating his case.

During what was supposed to have been an uncensored portion of Kunstler's closing argument, the sound on both television sets and the picture on one cut off when Kunstler began talking about a State Department official's ties to the Soviet agent who took information from Lonetree.

Slattery supports Nicaraguan aid

By Jim Dietz
Collegian Reporter

The United States should use economic aid as a means to pursue a peaceful solution to the situation in Nicaragua, said Jim Slattery, 2nd District congressman.

Slattery spoke to about 200 people Aug. 20 in a speech sponsored by the Manhattan Alliance on Central America at St. Isidore's Chapel.

"There is a 50-50 chance of getting a peaceful solution in Nicaragua," Slattery said. He proposed that a "Marshall Plan (be) made available to all Central American countries which are moving toward establishing democracy and protecting basic human rights in their countries."

This Marshall Plan would consist of economic assistance similar to what was provided in Europe following World War II.

"This (aid) is the best way for the United States to show the people of Central America that we care about them and we care about their future," he said.

"It's in our own best interests to invest about 1 percent of our defense budget for some kind of economic assistance package for Central America," Slattery said. This would double the amount of economic aid now being sent to Central America.

The presence of Soviet military troops and advisers in Nicaragua also concerned Slattery.

He said Nicaraguan Vice President Sergio Ramirez told him that, if the war in Nicaragua was brought to an end, the Sandinista government would expel the Soviets as well as lift the state of emergency, restore freedom of the press and hold free elections.

While in Nicaragua last fall, Slattery questioned both the Sandinistas and the Contras in an effort to determine what steps need to be taken to set up negotiations between the two.

He said he now believes negotiations could take place between the Contras, the Nicaraguan government and the United States. However, despite agreement of the other two parties to meet, it is uncertain whether or not the U.S. government will agree to negotiate.

In a letter to President Reagan, Slattery outlined a "framework of a bipartisan proposal that could be agreed to." It also contained the signatures of 110 other congressmen.

The letter proposed an immediate cease-fire with negotiations and an end to Contra aid. Negotiations would take place between the United States and the Nicaraguan government as well as between the Nicaraguan government and the Contras.

Suit to challenge policy held by minister's lover

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A lawsuit seeking to nullify an insurance policy on the life of Martin K. Anderson, who was slain in a field south of Manhattan in 1983, is scheduled for trial in U.S. District Court this week.

The policy would pay $270,000 in benefits to Anderson's four children. Their mother, Lorna Anderson Eldridge, waived her claim to the benefits in November 1986, but asked that the money be paid to the children.

Eldridge pleaded guilty in August 1985 in Lyon County District Court to two counts of criminal solicitation to murder her husband. She read a statement in court describing involvement in two plots to kill him, but authorities never contended either plot resulted in his death.

But in May of this year, Eldridge, who is serving up to 18 years on her Lyon County conviction, was charged in Geary County with first-degree murder in her husband's death.

The filing of that charge came just before the broadcast of "Murder Ordained," a CBS-TV mini-series portraying a love affair between Eldridge and Thomas Bird, the former Emporia minister for whom she worked as a secretary.

Bird was convicted of criminal solicitation to commit first-degree murder in connection with an unsuccessful plot against Anderson, and of first-degree murder in the death of his own wife, Sandra, earlier in 1983.

The civil suit due for trial in Topeka before U.S. District Judge Dale Saffels of Kansas City, Kan., was filed in March 1985 by New England Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Massachusetts. It was filed against Eldridge, both individually and in her capacity as mother and natural guardian of the children — Lori, Julie, Janelle and Jennifer.

Jury selection is scheduled to start Monday afternoon, with the trial expected to begin Tuesday.

Ruling Friday on a pretrial motion by Edward Hund, an attorney for Eldridge, Judge Saffels said he would not bar testimony that might link her to her husband's murder.

The suit alleges that Anderson bought a life insurance policy that provided $120,000 in death benefits and an additional $150,000 if death was caused by "accidental bodily injury."

The insurance company contends that Eldridge bought the policy because she planned to murder her husband or "cause him to be murdered" and that she willfully concealed the plan from the insurer.

The company returned premiums paid on the policy to Anderson's estate on March 18, 1985.

The petition asks that the policy be declared null and void and that the company be allowed to rescind the policy because it was "procured by fraud and deceit."

The insurance company also claims that it has been damaged by Eldridge's alleged fraud. If the company is held liable on the policy, it asks that it be awarded an amount equal to any payments owed to one or all of the plaintiffs.

In December 1985, a federal judge ordered Prudential Insurance Co. to pay almost $80,000 to the children as benefits from an insurance policy on Anderson's life.

Mrs. Anderson filed a petition in January 1986 in U.S. District Court in Wichita against the Fireman's Fund American Life Insurance Co.

She had filed on behalf of the children.

Wefald aids library by funding serials

By The Collegian Staff

A crisis threatening to seriously deplete serial subscriptions at Farrell Library has been averted — at least for this year.

Earlier this summer, President Jon Wefald diverted $100,000 from other campus funds to the library to cover a $180,188 increase in subscriptions rates for serials the library receives, said Brice Hobrock, dean of the library.

Another $50,000 has been re-allocated from funds the library uses to purchase books, and $30,000 will be recovered through cancellation of some serials and duplicate subscriptions.

Most of the increase in subscription rates has been due to a 61 percent rise in the cost of foreign subscription rates, he said. The average cost of a foreign subscription in 1986 was $135 compared to $217 this year.

The increase in foreign rates is blamed on the devaluation of the dollar against foreign currency, Hobrock said. The library pays for subscriptions with U.S. currency, and the prices fluctuate with the value of the dollar.

A decline in the number of serials could limit research sources since most of the foreign journals are scholarly publications.

"We hope it will not damage anyone's research this year," Hobrock said.

Library officials will determine which subscriptions will be eliminated and whether holdings will be kept in Farrell Library or one of the branch libraries, Hobrock said.

Area banks' profits fall by 80 percent, KC reserve reports

By The Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Profitability of banks in the 10th Federal Reserve District has fallen more than 80 percent since 1980, according to a report released by the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City.

While banks in Wyoming, Nebraska and Colorado led the nation as the top three states in return on bank assets in 1980, those states slipped in 1986 to 48th, 38th and 43rd places, respectively, the report said.

Since 1980, the district's regional economy "has deteriorated substantially and so has the condition of its banks," said Forest Myers, manager of the Federal Reserve Bank's policy and special projects department.

The 10th District is comprised of Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Wyoming.

For six consecutive years, 10th District banks have reported successively lower return on average assets. In 1986, the return figure was 43 percent below 1985.

The earning performance of the banks in these states now ranks among the poorest in the nation, according to the Federal Reserve Bank's 1987 Banking Studies Annual.

Earnings results varied widely within the seven-state district.

In the category of smaller banks with assets of less than $25 million, Nebraska and Missouri were the only states reporting improved return on assets performance, the first earnings improvement recorded in recent years, the report said.

Nebraska showed a 0.27 percent return on earnings compared with a district-wide decline of 0.02 percent.

In the category of banks with assets of $25 million to $50 million, Missouri banks reported a 20 percent increase in earnings from 1985 to 1986 while Oklahoma banks saw an 82 percent decline in the one-year period. Nebraska recorded an earnings decline of 26 percent.

Banks in the category of $50 million to $100 million in assets reported a 1986 return on assets amounting to about half the return recorded in 1985, the report said. However, Nebraska, Kansas and Wyoming banks in that category reported improved earnings in 1986.

In the category of banks with assets of more than $100 million, Nebraska had a 10 percent increase from the previous year, while the 10th District reported an 18 percent decline overall.

The district's banks also have had a marked increase in loan losses, the report said.

Nationwide, loan losses increased 2.5 times between 1980 and 1986. In the 10th District, loan losses increased nearly fivefold, the report said.

Within the district, losses varied by lender type. Losses at farm banks and energy banks increased about seven times.

The only bright spot for 10th District banks may be primary capital — equity plus loan loss reserves, Myers said.

For agriculture and real estate banks, capital has been even higher — 9.84 percent and 8.7 percent, respectively, at the end of 1986.

Cosmosphere loses status

Center to pay taxes

By The Associated Press

HUTCHINSON — The Kansas Cosmosphere and Discovery Center, one of the state's most popular attractions, has been ordered to pay back sales taxes because it lost its non-profit status in the eyes of the Kansas Department of Revenue.

A year-old ruling excluded the Cosmosphere, which features space exhibits and astronaut summer camps for youngsters among its programs. Officials are unsure what impact the sales tax question will have on the non-profit center.

"We lost our exemption somewhere along the line and were never notified we lost it," said Max Ary, executive director of the Cosmosphere.

Ary said the space center is likely to face added expenditures of $10,000 to $12,000 a year if it can't recover its exemption from the sales tax. An audit is under way, and the center faces the possibility of paying interest and penalties on back sales taxes.

Barbara Clark, a spokeswoman for the Department of Revenue, said that in 1970 the Legislature dropped the existing sales tax exemption for religious and non-profit groups but retained it for educational institutions.

"I believe there has been some misunderstanding since then about the applicability of sales tax to

"We lost our exemption somewhere along the line and were never notified we lost it."

—Max Ary, executive director of the Kansas Cosmosphere and Discovery Center.

some organizations," Clark said. Several instances of invalid sales tax exemptions turn up each year, she said.

On July 1, 1986, the revenue department came out with what it intended to be a clarifying definition of what constitutes an educational institution. The definition uses terms such as classrooms, curriculum and accredited teachers.

"We definitely do not fit that definition. There's no doubt about it," Ary said. "About the only ones that do are public and private schools. Before, the 'educational institution' definition was so broad, they were having some problems. The definition now makes it very restrictive ... we think it's too restrictive," he said.

Efforts will be made to have the Legislature rewrite the "educational institution" definition to include such facilities as the Cosmosphere, Ary said. Clark said the Department of Revenue would have no problems if lawmakers decide to do that.

"That would be fine with us," she said. "We would like there to be more definition statutorily."

In the meantime, the Cosmosphere has begun paying sales tax on all purchases except items bought for resale.

Army ROTC alters requirements; juniors allowed to enter program

By Patti Paxson
Staff Writer

Beginning this fall, juniors are allowed to participate in the Army's ROTC program, said Dana Bres, enrollment officer for K-State's Army ROTC program. Previously, those interested in pursuing their college education via Army ROTC had to make the decision earlier in their college career.

Entering Army ROTC as a junior is an "alternate entry option," Bres said. "We encourage most students to come in their freshman year — that's a real good year."

In addition, the junior-year option is one more chance to join Army ROTC before graduation.

The Air Force ROTC already allows students to enter as juniors, said Danny Kerr, unit superintendent for K-State's Air Force ROTC.

"In fact, some of our best cadets are the ones who come in their junior year," he said. "Often they end up becoming corps commanders and getting regular appointments as Air Force active duty officers."

Students entering Army ROTC under the junior-year option must attend Camp Challenge, a six-week summer training course at Fort Knox, Ky. Camp Challenge is equivalent training for those students not in ROTC their first two years, Bres said.

Students entering Air Force ROTC in their junior year must attend six weeks of summer field training, Kerr said.

Army ROTC regulations dictate that a student sign an enlistment agreement upon graduation from college and, in most cases, the Army will offer the student a commission, Bres said.

"The student expresses a preference for a commission in the (Army National) Guard, the Reserves or active duty," he said.

Kerr said all Air Force ROTC cadets are commissioned as officers on active duty upon graduation from college. A graduate will become either a reserve officer or a regular officer, with reserve status leaving the officer open for job cuts and a definite date of separation.

New law affects smoker's habits

By The Collegian Staff

Smokers take notice: The new Kansas law regarding smoking in public places may change your smoking habits.

The law, enacted July 1, states that all public buildings are non-smoking areas unless designated otherwise.

John Lambert, campus safety director, said the law prohibits smoking in all campus buildings. However, departments may determine the designated smoking areas in the buildings, he said.

Jack Connaughton, assistant director of the Union, said the Union and other campus buildings are trying to accommodate both smokers and non-smokers. He said the Union, however, has more of a challenge enforcing the law because it is an activity center, not an academic building.

"We are here to serve," Connaughton said. "We don't want to turn those people (smokers) off. The Union is more retail. We want to please the customers."

Designated smoking areas in the Union are tentative, he said. The Union Governing Board will finalize smoking areas at its meeting in early September.

Until then, designated smoking areas in the Union are the recreation area, ground level, first floor and second floor. The third floor of the Union is non-smoking. Smoking in meeting rooms will be at the discretion of those meeting in the rooms.

"We will serve the best we can," Connaughton said.

GREAT COMMISSION CHURCH

Statement of Faith:

We believe the Bible to be the inspired, the only infallible, authoritative Word of God.

We believe there is one almighty, perfect and true God: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, eternally coexistent personalities of the same essence.

We believe in the deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, in His virgin birth, His sinless life, His substitutionary death, His bodily resurrection, His ascension to the right hand of the Father and His personal return in power and glory.

We believe in the personality of the Holy Spirit, and in His ministry of convicting and regenerating sinful men, and indwelling, sealing and empowering believers.

We believe in the fall of man from the state of innocence in which he was created to one of total depravity in which he is devoid of spiritual life, and incapable, apart from divine power, of pleasing God.

We believe in the justification of the sinner by grace through faith alone.

We believe that the church universal is composed of all true believers and that its members should assemble themselves together in local churches for worship, prayer, fellowship and teaching with a view to being equipped to fulfill the Great Commission.

We believe in the bodily resurrection of the saved to immortality, and in the conscious eternal suffering of the lost.

Committee doubts missile's accuracy

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The guidance system on the MX nuclear-tipped missile has had so many problems that there are "serious questions of confidence" in the weapons which have been deployed, the House Armed Services Committee said Sunday.

The report by the Democratic-controlled panel was sharply critical of the Air Force and the Northrop Corp., which built the inertial measurement unit, as the guidance system is formally known.

Lt. Col. Richard Oborn, a spokesman for the Air Force, disputed the conclusions about the accuracy of the weapon, which is known formally as the Peacekeeper.

"There's no question about the capability of the Peacekeeper system. Its accuracy has been demonstrated in 17 test flights," Oborn said. Tony Cantafio, a spokesman for Northrop, said he had not seen the panel's report and could not respond to specifics in the document.

However, the report said that of the 17 tests thus far, only five used the type of guidance system that would actually go on the MX deployed in a silo. The other dozen were test versions.

"As a result of the significant management deficiencies and ineffective program monitoring, serious questions of confidence in the deployed MX missile force have arisen," the report said.

"The Air Force likes to cite the success of the test program," said Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the Armed Services Committee. "But our investigation shows that only five of the 17 test shots have used the production version of the guidance system, as opposed to the research version."

"And of those five shots, two fell far outside the target zone," he said. "That's a success rate of 60 percent, which scores a 'D' most places."

Oborn agreed that only five tests used the production version of the guidance system, but noted, "the bottom line for the accuracy of the system is better than the design specifications call for."

The report summarized a series of hearings held earlier this summer by the panel's research and development subcommittee and its procurement subcommittee.

The dispute is only the latest controversy surrounding the MX, the 10-warhead weapon that has been one of the main components of President Reagan's program of building new nuclear weapons.

Airlines under fire 'Industry is scared to death'

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Among an exclusive club of 535 frequent flyers — the members of Congress — sentiment is growing in favor of new laws forcing improvements in airline safety and service.

But even before a Northwest Airlines jet crashed after takeoff from Detroit last Sunday, killing up to 158 people, the open question was: How far might Congress go in imposing new requirements on the airlines?

Analysis

Nine years after U.S. airlines were deregulated, there is a growing sense on Capitol Hill that legislators ought to take some action on aviation issues. It's a threat the airlines are taking seriously.

"I think this industry is scared to death," says Jon F. Ash, an airline consultant in Washington. "A number of them are running around the Hill lobbying to try to prevent the imposition of these types of dictates."

Congress has been working on two major pieces of aviation legislation this year. One would provide billions of dollars for airports and the air traffic control system, the other would require airlines to report monthly on delayed and canceled flights, lost luggage and other service problems.

Concedes William F. Bolger, president of the Air Transport Association, the airline industry's trade group, "Airlines aren't enjoying the greatest confidence in the world in Congress, and that's unfortunate."

More and more legislators are using the word "reregulation" to describe what they're considering, even though what they mean by it varies.

There are those who want the airlines to report publicly on the quality of their service. Some want the carriers to be penalized if they fail to meet minimum levels of service. A number want tighter restrictions on flight rules and requirements for better equipment.

A few think all that's needed is for better government enforcement of regulations that already exist. But others say the Civil Aeronautics Board should be reestablished and with it the control it once had over airline routes and rates.

"If the FAA (Federal Aviation Administration) cannot handle our deregulated skies safely, I would support reregulation of the airline industry. Safety must come first," Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., said last April.

"I now think that the airline industry is being run totally by computers for profit and we are not seeing the response to the consumer needs," said Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, at a Senate Commerce Committee hearing last month. "This traveling public is getting very, very disturbed. I have seen it before. Congress will react."

Unclear, though, is how willing lawmakers are to put their angry words into action. Bills that would go dramatically beyond consumer protection efforts — such as one introduced by Rep. Glenn English, D-Okla., to reinstitute the CAB and federal regulation of the airlines — have yet to receive serious consideration.

When the airlines were dereglated by Congress in 1978, the government stopped controlling two things: routes and rates. Federal regulators continue to oversee the most basic safety rules, from certifying pilots right down to approving the fire-retardant materials used in cabins.

The airlines themselves, which initially opposed deregulation for fear that many of them would be driven out of business, now strongly believe that the idea was a good one.

Deregulation supporters note that while fares have dropped since 1978, the number of people flying each year has soared from 275 million to 418 million, and annual U.S. airline passenger revenues have climbed from $18.8 billion to $40.1 billion.

"Airline deregulation is the finest piece of consumer legislation of the past decade," says Clark Onstead, a vice president of Texas Air Corp., which owns Continental, Eastern and several other airlines.

But safety statistics have not looked good in recent months. Reported incidents in which planes came too close to each other increased from 479 through the first seven months of 1986 to 615 for the same period this year. And 615 errors by air traffic controllers were reported for the first half of 1987, compared to 542 in the first six months of last year.

Public complaints about service filed with the Transportation Department rose from 932 in July 1986 to 5,995 last month.

Retired professor from grain science dies at age 87

By The Collegian Staff

Former K-State faculty member John A. Shellenberger, for whom Shellenberger Hall is named, died Aug. 14. He was 87 years old.

Shellenberger, a distinguished professor emeritus, was head of what is now the Department of Grain Science and Industry for 21 of his 26 years at K-State. He retired in 1970.

Well-known for his work in cereal chemistry, he published about 200 technical articles and co-authored a book.

He also took on many short-term assignments while at K-State. Besides working for the U.S. State Department and the U.S. Department of Agriculture, he served as chairman of the 1948 U.S. Delegation to the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization meeting on Grain Conservation.

Before coming to K-State in 1944, Shellenberger was a consultant to the Argentine government. He took the position at the request of the Armor Foundation, a part of the National Research Council. Shellenberger was also active in opening up grain trade markets between the United States and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Among the numerous awards he received for his work are the Outstanding Achievement Gold Medal of the University of Minnesota and the Neumann Medal of the Association of Cereal Research, Detmold, West Germany.

For his contributions to global understanding and cooperation in cereal technology, he was awarded the C.H. Bailey Award from the International Association of Cereal Chemists.

He was also a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

For his service to the University, Shellenberger received the KSU Alumni Medallion and the KSU Gamma Sigma Delta Distinguished Alumni Award.

He is survived by his wife, Annabel, three daughters and four grandchildren.

'Superfund' case settled

By The Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — General Electric and two other companies have agreed to pay nearly $2.7 million, 60 percent of cleanup costs at a New Hampshire toxic waste dump, in a partial settlement in one of the first "superfund" cleanup cases to go through trial.

Friday's agreement follows more than four years of litigation and 10 months of federal court trial in two phases on liability and damages for the one-acre Ottati and Goss site and the adjacent, 5.8-acre Kingston Steel Drum dump in Kingston.

General Electric, Solvents Recovery Service of New England Inc., and Lilly Industrial Coatings Inc. agreed to pay nearly $2.7 million for cleaning up and monitoring water at the Ottati and Goss site, Attorney General Stephen Merrill said.

Under a separate agreement earlier this month, a company found responsible for dumping less than 1 percent of the toxic waste at the site, K.J. Quinn and Co. Inc., agreed to pay $270,000 to the EPA and $30,000 to New Hampshire's hazardous-waste cleanup fund.

"We have by no means closed the case," said Jeremy Korzenick, an assistant state attorney general. "For one, there are other liable parties."

U.S. District Judge Martin Loughlin is considering who will pay how much of the remaining 40 percent of cleanup costs at the Ottati and Goss site.

The judge is also considering the federal and state governments' request to require two other companies to pay for cleaning the Kingston Steel Drum site.

The four companies in the agreements announced Friday generated the waste dumped at the Ottati and Goss site, Korzenick said.

They were among 12 companies and individuals sued by federal and state governments and the town of Kingston, which are trying to recover millions of dollars spent for cleaning up both sites and to collect millions more to finish the job.

The sites are on the Environmental Protection Agency's superfund national priority list. The fund pays for emergency cleanups and governments collect from the responsible parties later.

The EPA in January recommended a $15 million cleanup of the Kingston site. The agency already has spent more than $4 million at the site, mostly to remove 4,400 barrels of hazardous waste in 1982.

U.S. forces chase away Iranian ship

By The Associated Press

MANAMA, Bahrain — U.S. helicopters and warships escorting Kuwaiti tankers out of the Persian Gulf chased away an Iranian warship Monday in the first major confrontation of the U.S. convoy operation, witnesses said.

The mine-damaged Bridgeton and three other reflagged Kuwaiti tankers in the convoy later cleared the Strait of Hormuz, gateway out of the gulf, and a new convoy of three U.S.-escorted tankers steamed through the strait and into the gulf.

In a separate incident, a U.S. destroyer fired a machine gun across the bows of two small sailboats that approached the outbound convoy.

The Soviet Union said it would support the presence of some minesweepers in the Persian Gulf but that all other warships should be withdrawn to defuse the "explosive situation" there.

An Iranian envoy said in New York his nation would cooperate fully with efforts to end the seven-year Iran-Iraq war, and Arab foreign ministers in Tunis urged Iran to abide by a July 20 U.N. Security Council cease-fire resolution.

U.S. warships began on July 20 to escort Kuwaiti tankers reflagged with the Stars and Stripes through the gulf to protect them from Iran, which considers Kuwait an ally of Iraq.

From a Navy UH-1 helicopter circling over the gulf, the approach of the Iranian ship prompted what looked like a full-scale naval maneuver as crews on five U.S. warships went on full alert and manned all deck guns, said Richard Pyle, an Associated Press reporter covering the escort operation in a news pool.

But officers aboard the assault carrier Guadalcanal said there was no overt threat by the Iranian vessel.

It came within 2½ miles of the convoy after 8 a.m. as the Guadalcanal and the frigate Jarrett were dropping out of the convoy, their major task of mine hunting completed.

Ahead of the convoy lay the Strait of Hormuz, which U.S. officers do not consider a high mine threat because of the volume of traffic, including Iranian, that passes through.

"Jarrett was instructed to position herself tactically between the convoy and the Iranian vessel, which is the normal procedure in tactical formation," said Guadalcanal commander Capt. Skip Dirren.

As seen from the air, the Jarrett and the Iranian ship appeared to be less than 500 yards apart, Pyle said.

The Iranian vessel was identified as a 2,500-ton amphibious landing craft, built in Britain. Dirren said it has been seen frequently in the gulf.

But British Broadcasting Corp. reporter Christopher Morris said, "The sudden arrival of the Iranian warship caught the Americans completely by surprise."

Morris, speaking by radio-telephone from a supply ship near the convoy, said the escort

Regents alcohol policy will allow consumption in non-classroom areas

By Debbie Whitson
Staff Writer

Due to recent changes in state laws and regulations, alcohol can now be served on campus. All that remains to be settled is where and when.

On June 25, the Kansas Board of Regents voted to allow alcohol to be served by institutions in non-classroom areas.

The decision was made following a state law passed in early 1987 which permits consumption of alcoholic liquor (all alcoholic beverages except malt beverages containing 3.2 percent or less alcohol) in non-classroom areas on property under control of the Regents.

The policy passed by the Regents states that "use of alcoholic liquor may be permitted under authorized and appropriately controlled conditions and guidelines to be determined by the administration of each school, and approved by the Board."

It also stipulates that alcohol may be served only at functions hosted or sponsored by either alumni associations or endowment associations.

After the initial policy was passed by the Regents, Charles Reagan, assistant to the president, said the administration formed a committee to draft a report detailing buildings to be included in the University's policy.

The committee met several times over the summer and drafted a report, which will be submitted to the central administrative staff for approval this week, he said.

Following staff approval, the report will be taken to the Regents' meeting in September. Upon approval, the policy will be effective immediately.

Some of the buildings and areas included in the rough draft are McCain Auditorium, Farrell Library (Rm 315), Durland Hall (foyer only), Nichols Hall (foyer only), Football Office Building (Big Eight room only), Bramlage Coliseum (hospitality room only), Hollis House (Alumni Association and KSU Foundation) and Weber Hall (Arena only).

Although the Union is also included in the policy, permission for any alcoholic beverage to be served must also be obtained by Jack Sills, acting Union director.

Under the new policy, the Foundation or the Alumni Association must request approval from the president at least 15 days prior to the event. Each sponsor will make arrangements for the provision of alcohol at the event with a temporary permit through the director of Alcoholic Beverage Control or a licensed caterer.

The sponsoring organization will be responsible for assuring that no person under the age of 21 is allowed to consume alcoholic liquor at the event.

The Regents' policy will be an option available to all seven Regents schools. Reagan said President Jon Wefald is in favor of K-State adopting the policy.

Although some universities may choose not to implement the new law, every school must submit a report on the amount of interest in serving alcohol, and the specific areas designated for this use.

Reagan said the president's house and lawn, which are already exempt from the current policy, will remain so under the new policy, thus allowing for liquor at barbecues and the Christmas reception.

Inquiry into death of 3 people begins

By The Associated Press

WELCH, Okla. — Investigators worked Monday to piece together information about a shooting that left a rural Craig County couple and their 18-month-old daughter dead and two of the man's children in custody.

The bodies of Kenneth Clinton Wingfield, 43, his wife, Louise, 36, and their daughter, Crete, 18 months, were found in a trash dump near their farm home about 7:30 a.m. Monday, said Sheriff Jess Walker.

Walker said all three appeared to have been shot once in the head. Officials said more than one weapon may have been used. The bodies were taken to the state medical examiner's office in Tulsa for autopsies.

Walker said the three bodies were found several hundred yards from the residence where the shootings occurred. The residence is north of Welch and about three miles south of the Kansas line.

Authorities in Marshall, Texas, said they were holding Ty Wingfield, 19, identified as Kenneth Wingfield's son from a previous marriage. Juvenile authorities in Texas also were holding Kenneth Wingfield's 16-year-old daughter, officials said.

No charges had been filed in the case Monday.

Harrison County, Texas, sheriff's Capt. Phil Walker said Ty Wingfield was taken into custody without incident Monday morning after acquaintances told authorities he had mentioned the slayings.

Ty Wingfield had a rifle with him when he was taken into custody, Walker said.

Oklahoma law officers, including Oklahoma State Bureau of Investigation agents, were dispatched to the Wingfield house and found the bodies hidden beneath a piece of tin, said Paul Renfrow, OSBI spokesman.

Helen Thomas of Thomas Funeral Home in Welch said the Wingfield family had moved to the farm about one year ago. The family had lived earlier in Payson, Ariz., and Longview, Texas, she said.

Wildcat VISA, MasterCard debut

By Jenny Chaulk
Campus Editor

Easy credit, no hassles, little or no money down.

Although it may sound like a used car salesman's pitch, K-State sophomores, juniors, seniors and graduate students will have the opportunity to establish their own credit history through the K-State Bank Card program.

The program, coordinated by the KSU Alumni Association in conjunction with the First Bank Card Center of Wichita, enables students to obtain a Wildcat VISA or Wildcat MasterCard.

Members of the Student Alumni Board will be distributing card applications in the Union about Sept. 1, said Amy Button Renz, director of membership for the Alumni Association.

"The bank realizes most students don't have a source of income," Button Renz said.

Kathy Peirce, senior in psychology and chairperson of SAB's Bank Card committee, said, "So many students don't ever get the opportunity to get a credit card. This is a good way that most students can get a credit card."

K-State alumni have already had the opportunity to use the credit cards. Button Renz said the Alumni Association started working with First Bank in the fall of 1986 to set up the program.

She said plans were finalized in January, with the first informational

Alumni Association offering easy credit

mailing about the cards occurring in April and May. Information was sent to 56,000 Alumni Association non-member households and 20,500 Alumni Association member households.

As of Thursday, the Bank Card program had generated 2,150 new memberships to the Alumni Association. Gaining new members is the primary reason for sponsoring the program, Button Renz said.

"(The program) allows us the opportunity to provide a benefit of membership to the Association," she said. "It also allows alums to show their loyalty to the University."

Button Renz said 3,500 current Alumni Association members have received the credit cards, which feature a Willie Wildcat emblem. Five hundred people chose to take advantage of the program without becoming members of the Alumni Association, she added.

"We're very excited about the program," Button Renz said. "We had hoped for an initial response of about 5,000, so the response has far exceeded our expectations. We're so pleased so many wanted to take advantage of it."

Other schools across the state are also taking advantage of similar Bank Card programs, said Cheryl Koenigs, marketing projects manager for First Bank.

Koenigs said nine universities and schools in Kansas are involved in bank card programs with First Bank. The programs are a "coming new thing," she added.

"Everybody's got a credit card," Koenigs said. "Doing general mailings to get new card holders wasn't working anymore; the market was saturated. Through a bank card program, you get in with a group whose members have something in common; a sense of loyalty develops."

Koenigs said the Alumni Association makes money from coordinating the program by getting a portion of the cards' annual fee and by getting percentages of cash advances and sales volume. Button Renz said these percentages cannot be released due to a contractual agreement with First Bank.

Button Renz said members of the Alumni Association pay a 16.8 percent interest rate with no annual fee until May 1988, when it will be $15.

Nonmembers of the Alumni Association who choose to obtain a card pay a 17.88 percent interest rate with an annual fee of $18. Should these persons decide to become members of the Alumni Association, Button Renz said, they would be eligible for the lower interest rate.

People pay $25 to stay in jail

MARIETTA, Ga. — It wasn't your typical ribbon-cutting ceremony at Cobb County's new $12 million jail. Several members of the County Commission and assorted other politicians, businessmen and journalists paid $25 for the privilege of spending Saturday night locked up in Navy blue prison uniforms. The event was intended to give the jail's staff a practice run on procedures at the jail, which should get its first real inmates in a couple of weeks.

"This will be a wedding anniversary I'll never forget," said County Commissioner Thea Powell, who observed the occasion from one cell while her husband, George Powell, passed it in another.

Members of the gang of hardened law-abiders were fingerprinted, photographed, handcuffed and led to their cells. Guards in central control towers electronically opened and closed the cell doors from a master panel.

Chief Magistrate Jim Bodiford summarily declared the entire group guilty of "unlawful surveillance" of the detention center and fined them $25 each, payable to the charity of their choice.

Commission on AIDS to meet

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — President Reagan's commission on AIDS will meet in Washington on Sept. 9-10, the White House said Monday.

The 11-member panel, headed by Dr. W. Eugene Mayberry, chairman of the Mayo Foundation's board of directors, will open part of its sessions to public comment by people involved in anti-AIDS efforts, the press office announced.

The agenda for the first meeting of the Presidential Commission on the Human Immunodeficiency Virus will include "an overview of federal agency activities" relating to the problem.

The commission will hear a report from Secretary of Health and Human Services Otis R. Bowen and other officials involved in the federal effort to learn more about the disease and to combat its spread.

The commission "will also hear presentations from organizations in the private sector dedicated to the AIDS efforts," the statement said.

Officials discuss travel policy

McPHERSON — A travel policy for elected and appointed officials was discussed Monday by the McPherson County Commission, in the wake of death of County Treasurer Richard Cobb.

Cobb, who had been in office nearly 18 months, was found dead of carbon monoxide poisoning Aug. 6 in the garage at the home of his parents. Two vehicles in the garage had been left running.

A week ago, a special audit of a motor vehicle fund controlled by the treasurer's office showed that more than $13,000 was unaccounted for. Commission Chairman John Magnuson said Monday that the commission's attorney and the county administrator are still reviewing receipts and other documents related to expenses submitted by Cobb.

Ann Gottberg, the county administrator, said that no other Kansas counties of similar size or valuation have formal policies or review processes dealing with travel.

The proposal under consideration by the commission would call for a written travel request to the administrator for any official taking a trip requiring an overnight stay. They would also be required to submit actual proof of travel-related expenses, and there would be per diem expense provisions in the proposed policy.

Governor borrows for wedding

ALBANY, N.Y. — Gov. Mario Cuomo says he needs a loan to help pay for his daughter's wedding. It's either that or sell souvenir ashtrays.

"I haven't taken out a loan in years," said Cuomo, who makes $100,000 a year as governor.

Cuomo's daughter Maria, 25, plans to marry shoe designer Kenneth Cole in a small ceremony at the Executive Mansion on Oct. 11. During a trip Sunday to western New York, where he spoke at a conference on U.S.-Soviet relations, Cuomo said there might be an alternative to a loan.

"We could have souvenir ashtrays made up and sell them for $100 each," he joked. "On second thought, if you're going to write this, make it $200."

Cuomo refused to say how much the loan was for.

Burnett, daughter write book

LOS ANGELES — When Carol Burnett and her daughter, Carrie Hamilton, were "Under One Roof," it was less than a perfect household: Hamilton was on drugs.

Now, the two are collaborating on a book by the same name by writing alternate chapters on the experience. Hamilton has been free of drugs for five years after undergoing a treatment program, said Rick Ingersoll, a spokesman for Burnett.

The mother-daughter team also is to star in a new movie for CBS called "Hostage."

Hamilton starred in the television series, "Fame," and her mother made a guest appearance on the show last year.

Hussein receives peace award

AMMAN, Jordan — Jordan's King Hussein on Monday was named recipient of the Dag Hammarskjold Award for Peace for his efforts in trying to bring about peace talks with the Palestine Liberation Organization and Israel.

Hussein was named "The Man of Peace" for his "relentless efforts for peace in the Middle East," said the announcement by the Dag Hammarskjold Academy.

Hussein abandoned the effort at joint peace negotiations early last year when relations soured between his kingdom and the PLO. But since then Hussein has often been mentioned as a possible moderate intermediary in approaching a peace process.

The academy is an independent institution set up in 1963 to honor Hammarskjold, of Sweden, the second secretary-general of the United Nations, who was killed in a plane crash in 1961.

Book profits to go to charity

NEW YORK — The Hearst Corp. said Monday it has obtained all publishing rights to a book planned by Mayor Edward I. Koch and Cardinal John O'Connor and predicted the profits — which will go to charity — could reach $1 million.

Frank Bennack Jr., president and chief executive officer of Hearst, said the royalties and his company's earnings would go to Catholic Charities and to charitable projects designated by Koch.

Koch said the book would be controversial, with chapters on abortion and birth control, gay rights and Israel. The mayor and the cardinal have clashed publicly on those matters.

They will write independently, but, "We each will see the other's chapters," Koch said. "It will not be to please one another. Nothing sells like controversy."

Telephone update nears completion

By Patti Paxson
Staff Writer

The final stages of installation of K-State's new telephone system will be completed by the end of the fall semester, said Robert Young, assistant director in University computing and telecommunications.

The new system, the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. System 85 Private Branch Exchange, is costing K-State about $3 million to install, Young said. However, the University will pay about the same basic monthly charges as it has in the past for telephone service.

The project has proceeded in three stages: moving the University telephone lines over to the System 85, rewiring all campus buildings and replacing all campus telephones. The project began during the spring of 1986, Young said.

Young said a primary advantage of the new telephone system is that "moves and changes (involving wiring and equipment) can be done more easily. We can do a lot of the changes less expensively than what Southwestern Bell or AT&T charges. K-State technicians will do the servicing."

The new telephones have such features as touch-tone dialing, built-in speed dialing, built-in speakers, access to more lines and conference calling, Young said. Also, no one can break into a call, as was the case with the old telephones.

Another problem with the old telephones was having to arrange the office around the phones instead of having the freedom to move the phones around the office, he said.

"The new system is less expensive to maintain compared to the old system. The old wiring was too difficult to work around. The new wiring is more uniform and offers new capabilities," Young said.

The switch-over to the System 85 includes an eight-year, fixed-price contract, which protects the University against future price increases and will save money in the long run, Young said.

The new telephone system at K-State is part of a statewide project to update telephone communications in state offices. The University of Kansas, The Wichita State University, Fort Hays State University, the University of Kansas Medical School and all state offices in Topeka will eventually be equipped with the System 85, Young said.

The project is administered by the state's Division of Information Systems and Communications; however, each site is responsible for the installation and servicing of its system.

African mine delays firings

19,000 workers on strike

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — South Africa's largest gold producer put off Monday for two days its threatened firing of 19,000 striking black miners. The death toll from nationwide, strike-related violence meanwhile rose to six.

The strike, by hundreds of thousands of miners, entered its third week.

Bobby Godsell, Anglo American Corp.'s director of industrial relations, said in announcing a delay in the firings that a "significant" number of workers had returned to work. He did not have exact figures on the number who went back.

The National Union of Mineworkers denied there was a large-scale return to the mines.

Godsell told a news conference the decision by some strikers to return showed a growing number of miners believe "the strike has gone on long enough."

Before the news conference, Anglo said it was firing about 7,000 strikers at No. 2 and No. 3 shafts of its Western Holdings gold mine in the Orange Free State because the miners did not return to work by the Monday deadline.

In a later statement, however, Anglo said it was extending the deadline until Wednesday for the 7,000 and for about 12,000 more strikers at two coal and two gold mines "to allow employees more time to consider their options."

The company said the Monday deadlines were designed to "restore production to normal."

Anglo and other companies fired about 9,000 striking workers last week.

The miners strike is legal, but under South African labor law, companies may fire any worker who does not report for work.

Cyril Ramaphosa, general secretary of the union, says it would take the industry six months to hire and train replacements for the 340,000 men the union says are on strike at 45 mines. The Chamber of Mines, which represents the six mining companies targeted by the strike, said Monday it estimates 210,000 miners are on strike at 29 mines.

Three more deaths were reported Monday.

Three previous deaths have been linked to the strike. The union says more than 320 strikers were injured and 300 arrested since the strike began Aug. 9.

Anglo, which produced more than 39 percent of South Africa's gold last year, has been hardest hit of the major mining companies.

It acknowledged losing substantial revenue because of the strike, but none of the mining companies provided figures on the costs of the strike.

Gadhafi vows to secure Waite's release

By The Associated Press

LONDON — The Libyan news agency has reported Libyan leader Col. Moammar Gadhafi has vowed to try to win the release of Anglican envoy Terry Waite, who disappeared in Lebanon on a mission to free U.S. hostages.

In a report monitored Sunday in London, the state-run agency said Gadhafi made the pledge during a meeting with a representative of the Church of England identified only as a Dr. Lacey or Dr. Lyce.

But John Lytle, secretary for public affairs to Archbishop of Canterbury, the Most Rev. Robert Runcie, said the church was not aware of any meeting with Gadhafi.

"We haven't sent anyone to talk with Col. Gadhafi but the Anglican Church is worldwide, so I'm not saying that Dr. Lacey or Dr. Lyce is not an Anglican," he said. "Any intervention that might be useful in bringing about the release of hostages would be welcome."

JANA said the Anglican representative urged Gadhafi to intervene for the release of Waite, who dropped from sight in January, "in the name of the church and humanity."

JANA said Gadhafi "stressed to the representative of the church that he would work for peace and exert all he can for the release of Terry Waite."

No group has claimed to hold Waite. The Church of England expressed "extreme skepticism" on Saturday about a Lebanese magazine report that he would be freed shortly after payment of a $5 million ransom.

In addition to Waite, 24 foreigners are missing and believed kidnapped in Lebanon. They include nine Americans.

UFM classes present variety

By Jennifer Dorsch
Staff Writer

For those students already tired of the regular boring college courses, University for Man, 1221 Thurston St., will be having registration for fall classes at the Union Thursday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

UFM was started in the fall of 1967 by a group of K-State faculty and students who wanted more than the usual campus classes. Eunice Dorst, campus/community coordinator for UFM, said the program here has been a model for similar "free" programs throughout the country.

UFM classes offer a wide variety of topics and are open to anyone.

There is a class fee which ranges from $4 to $10, depending on the content of the class and the number of class sessions. This fall, UFM has a take two classes, get one free offer.

UFM has a $2 registration fee in addition to the class fee. However, full-time K-State students are exempt from the registration fee through an SGA allocation.

UFM's fall schedule includes several classes that have never been offered in this area. The People's Law School is a series of classes conducted by local judges and attorneys to clarify legal mysteries and teach "the kind of law one should know to survive," Dorst said.

Another new class, Socially

Responsible Investing, will examine the impact of investments in companies from a social and environmental viewpoint, rather than solely on company performance.

UFM is trying a new format by offering a weekend workshop, Creating Our Own Reality. The two day class will deal with understanding a belief system and visualizing goals.

The most popular UFM programs are the nature, sports and self courses, Dorst said. Classes in these areas include a Tuttle Creek Tower Tour, Beginning Kung Fu and Dating Relationships.

The classes are taught by volunteers, including K-State faculty, community professionals and others.

Deadline for registration is usually two days before the class. However, early enrollment is encouraged when class materials need to be ordered or when there is a maximum number of participants, Dorst said.

Course catalogs will be available at the Union bookstore.

Registration will also be at the UFM house on Sunday from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. After the scheduled registration times, enrollment may be done at the UFM house by mail or by calling 532-5866.

FACULTY AND STAFF MEMBERS: Don't be left out of the 1987-1988 K-State Campus Directory.

Be sure to get your 1987-1988 K-State Campus Directory listing updated. Personnel Services provides the faculty/staff list for the directory and if individuals have not updated their records, the directory entry is inaccurate. We would like your assistance in updating the faculty/staff listings.

The following information is needed for individual listings: name, home address, campus address, home phone, campus phone, faculty/staff title, and office/department/division.

Please take a few minutes to check last year's directory. If anything has changed, form PER 39 must be completed and submitted to Personnel Services by Aug. 28. Aug. 28 is also the deadline to submit individual "Personnel Appointment" forms (PER 39) for unclassified and classified individuals and GST forms for graduate student employees.

Anyone wishing to withhold his or her name from the directory must submit a letter to Personnel Services by Aug. 28.

If you have questions, please contact Sheila in Personnel Services, Employee Benefits and Records, 532-6277.

Semester promises intriguing issues

After a long and hot summer, I find myself sitting at a table, pen in hand, staring desperately at a threateningly blank pad of paper. The pad was purchased during the first week of my vacation, along with a pen, which when combined, were to produce a series of articles to enlighten and entertain this newspaper's readers. At the rate of one column per week, enough material would have been prepared to handle the coming semester. However, my ambitions — much like a certain ex-presidential candidate's political career — were worthless. With one difference, though, I blame procrastination, not my loins, for my misfortune. Not that there was ever a lack of consequential events to keep me busy during our three months of respite. No, not at all.

To begin with, this summer we witnessed our nation being struck by a terrible disease which, if not researched and cured, could lead to an epidemic of disastrous proportions. I speak, fellow students, of the curious sickness known to a select group of experts as acute selective amnesia. The seriousness of this disease is magnified by the sad fact that it struck at the very top of our constitutionally — established pyramid of power. Yes, I speak of no other than our noble president himself, Hollywood's own Ronald Wilson Reagan.

The poor man was first noticed to suffer of this malady when he was unable to remember being told about any arms shipments to Iran. Later, he also could not recall knowledge of illegal Contra fund-raising by trusted administration aides and advisers.

In summary, this is how the disease progressed. Last November, he assured God-fearing television spectators that, "We did not — repeat, did not — trade weapons or anything else for hostages, nor will we." In March, he told us that despite heartfelt misgivings, his November statements were erroneous. Once again last November, (a bad month for the poor man, I must admit) he was confident in stating no mistakes had been made in the Iran initiative, merely high-risk gambles warranted by the circumstances. In March, once more, he corrected himself by announcing that the Iran initiative was a mistake and there were no excuses.

During the summer, President Reagan also reversed his stance on knowledge of decisions being made to support the Nicaraguan "freedom fighters," by claiming ignorance of Lt. Col. Oliver North's role in the issue.

Luckily though, progress is being made in curbing our gallant leader's sickness. I have heard, from a very credible source, the nation's leading scientists have urged the president to refrain from making statements during the month of November, and to seek a cooler climate during the summer months. The former is to avoid recurring mistakes in a month he has proven to be unstable, and the latter has something to do with the effect of the sun and a diminishing ozone layer on the president's brain.

This summer we also saw the emergence of a national hero. From the frazzled remnants of the infamous Iran-Contra hearings, North became a martyr in the eyes of America. A hard-working and devout soldier, North represents a role model for the American male. Despite illegal fund soliciting practices and lies to Congress, Ollie proved criminal immunity can be achieved by looking the camera straight in the eye and telling Americans how much he loves this country. Thank God Charles Manson didn't have the same idea.

But while Lt. Col. North's popularity reached staggering heights, many Americans were chagrined at the demise of a prominent political career. Presidential candidate Gary Hart, uncontaminated, as he is, by a minimal degree of common sense, provided this nation with an important precedent. Had he sold weapons to Iran, military secrets to the Soviet Union, or diverted government funds to secret Swiss bank accounts, Hart would probably not have received the same publicity as he did early this summer for sleeping with a dizzy model.

But, being the noble person that he is, Hart chose to ignore the free publicity his sexual escapades brought him, and withdrew his candidacy. However, for all those diehard Hart fans out there, rumor has it that he will run again in '92, as soon as he finds a matching Kennedy clone to be his vice president.

Many other interesting things happened this summer, from increasing American involvement in the Persian Gulf to two different peace proposals in Central America. Very recently, American journalist Charles Glass escaped from a Shiite Muslim terrorist group which had kept him hostage for two months. More importantly, though, Donna Rice and Fawn Hall have both recently sold the rights of their stories to television.

Locally, Gov. Mike Hayden is calling for a special meeting of the Kansas Legislature to discuss highway repairs and he appointed a commission to establish the groundwork for pari-mutuel betting in Kansas. Even closer to home, the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications lost its accreditation, which may turn into a nuisance for some students; but then again it may not, for a number of the nation's top journalism schools are not accredited.

So, what does the remainder of the year hold in store for this country? Is Jim Bakker going to give up the church and instead opt for a musical career? Or will he team up with Oliver North for a prime-time sit-com spot? I can see it clearly, Ollie playing the straight man, cloaking himself in injured virtue at the brunt of Jim's flaky puns. Maybe Jerry Falwell will become a candidate for the '88 elections and assassination attempts will become fashionable. I don't know. Reaching into my inexhaustible bag of cliches, I guess only time will tell.

Coffman will provide excellent leadership

University President Jon Wefald made a sound choice Friday when he appointed James R. Coffman provost.

Coffman replaces Owen Koepp, who resigned to return to teaching. Koepp will be a hard act to follow, but Coffman is able to do it.

Coffman offers essential advantages that few other internal — and certainly no external — candidates could have provided. Primarily, he knows this University.

He received all three of his academic degrees from K-State, and he has served as head of the Department of Surgery and Medicine and was dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine until his appointment as acting provost July 1. That kind of experience makes Coffman the most logical choice.

Coffman was appointed acting provost last spring after the four finalists culled from a national search bowed out of contention. Although Wefald could have begun another national search over the summer, it would have been illogical because of the support Coffman already enjoyed.

As Wefald said, a national search would have seemed "rigged" to outside candidates.

In addition to Coffman's experience at K-State, he also knows what a land-grant university is and what it should be. That intuition, especially in these days when agriculture is ever-changing, is vital.

James Coffman should do a fine job in his new capacity.

State should suspend unfair hiring process

Many people found it impossible to get a temporary summer job from the Kansas Department of Transportation. They were not eligible because their names were not on a list the county departments received from the state.

The allegation is that the state asked local Republican leaders to compile a list of those who might be interested in summer work, and send the list to the state departments. The state then sent the list to the local offices. It was not a coincidence that the names on the lists were mostly Republican. People who did not get on the list did not get the jobs.

The Legislative Post Audit Committee was asked to investigate the procedure, but so far it has decline. Some legislatures said an audit would only reveal what everybody knows — the party in power hires on the basis of political affiliation. The committee has two more meetings to decide if the issue is worth an investigation.

The legislatures would do well in remembering it was these types of hiring practices that got President McKinley shot. After the assassination, federal laws were changed to prevent extensive partisan hiring practices.

Hiring on the basis of political affiliation is decriminatory just like hiring on the basis of religious beliefs or ethnic backgrounds — and it is no more acceptable.

Merit should be the most important factor in hiring, and the transportation department — like all departments — would be more efficient if it hired the best people qualified. If laws are not already in place to prevent this from happening, then the Legislature should work to stop the unfair practice.

Media often overlook winners

During the "dog days" of August, when the blistering heat seems to stifle the newsmaking ability of Americans, a most remarkable event occurred this year — two baseball pitchers, not one, were caught with the tools of baseball-scuttling on them in the span of a single week.

For years stories had circulated about foreign objects being hidden on certain pitchers, which allowed them to do certain things to a baseball, which in turn drove certain batters crazy. Even the Kansas City Royals, with an image as clean as their ballpark, signed Gaylord Perry a few years back, apparently on the theory a baseball team needed to have at least one ball-altering expert on its staff if it was ever to gain respectability among the big boys.

Even more amazing than catching the players with "the goods," (sandpaper in both cases) was their and the media's reaction to the revelation. The Phils' Kevin Gross said he was just "fooling with" the sandpaper found in his glove. "I didn't use it," he said.

Joe Nickro, the Minnesota Twins pitcher caught with an emery board and sandpaper on him, became a celebrity worthy of a spot on the David Letterman "Late Night" TV show. Nickro said he inadvertently left his manicure set, the tools of the trade for a knuckle pitcher, in his hip pocket. Other observers hypothesized he had them in his glove and pulled a quick switch worthy of David Copperfield, the magician.

True, both pitchers paid for their "sins" with 10-day suspensions, but Nickro offset his with six whirlwind hours in the Big Apple. He flew first-class, rode in a shiny white limousine, rubbed elbows with television producers, went one-on-one with the king of late-night television, and collected $520 for his troubles. He is now mulling over endorsement offers from an abrasive manufacturer and a manicure company. At this point in his career, what more could an over-the-hill baseball pitcher ask for?

Commentary

Judd Annis
Collegian Columnist

But baseball is a game of winners and losers. For every victory chalked up by a scuffball expert, there is a loss suffered by another pitcher, possibly equally talented. Some younger player struggling to avoid a trip back to the minors sees another victory dance away on a baseball defying the laws of physics in his adversary's hands. The integrity of "America's game" died a little every time a pitcher got away with deliberately scuffing up the ball, and the media seems to accept it as part of the game or a chance to increase its share of the market.

Does the problem lie with the game of baseball or with the media? "We only print the news, we don't make it," is the standard media response. That philosophy has been debated for years and the issue of scuffed baseballs hardly seems worthy of renewing the question. On the other hand, the policing mechanism of baseball caught the culprits and punished them in a meaningful way, so how can we fault the game?

Alan Page, the former Minnesota Vikings all-pro lineman who earned a law degree in his off-seasons, hit the nail on the head a few years back when he observed that organized sports do not build character, but retard the natural development of it. From the moment youngsters start to play organized sports, they have someone else, an umpire or referee, to set the limits of their sportsmanship. Page observed that youths are taught to play right up to the limit set by the official. When they go too far, they are penalized, but they should let the official decide how far is too far.

Public pressure can effect a change in attitude in athletes in organized sports and their fans. But will it ever happen? The baseball player who dives for the flyball and watches the umpire rule it a fair catch knows whether he trapped it or not. He doesn't need "instant replay" to tell him most of the time. How would the fans react if he contradicted the umpire and announced he had indeed trapped the ball? Would his team's fans give him a round of applause for being honest? Would his teammates run him off the field?

It used to be in tennis that if the umpire missed a call in favor of a player, that player would deliberately "waste" the next shot to even things up again. But tennis is not a team sport in the sense of baseball or football, so it is not a perfect example of the acceptance of personal integrity over win-at-all-costs.

Perhaps the best that can be salvaged from the scuff ball incidents is an acknowledgment that organized sports are public spectacles and no more. They are not builders of character or a measure of character, either of individuals or of a team. The participants are no more role models for American youth than the traders of Wall Street. Some are "good people" and some are "bad people", with a regulator of some sort setting the limits of acceptable behavior in both cases.

Real character is built, for example, on the sandlots, where if you cheat you aren't asked to play next time. The same holds true in personal relationships, where if you lie and cheat you are going to find yourself without friends.

So, for the moment let us hope Nickro and Gross suffer a fate even worse than a losing record or a high ERA, and that enthusiasts who plan sports award dinners extend an invitation to Alan Page, an all-pro on and off the field.

State drops Winfield charges

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Three of four criminal charges filed against two former employees of Winfield State Hospital and Training Center have been dropped, Attorney General Robert T. Stephan announced Monday.

The two former employees, Bobby Folkner, 33 and Robert Vardy, 40, both of Arkansas City, had faced charges connected with the alleged mistreatment of patients at the state's largest hospital for the mentally retarded. Stephan said in a statement he dropped the charges because his pre-trial investigation found insufficient evidence to continue prosecution.

A single count each of mistreatment of a confined person and battery against Vardy were dropped. A single count of battery against Folkner was dropped, and he still faces a second count of battery. The charges are misdemeanors.

Stephan said in each case, the principal witness could not say on exactly which day the alleged mistreatment took place, and there were no additional witnesses or physical evidence prosecutors could use.

Stephan also sent a letter to Winston Barton, state secretary of social and rehabilitation services, saying the hospital should improve its abuse reporting procedures.

Specifically, Stephan suggested reports of abuse be filed with SRS officials in Topeka and not through hospital supervisors. He also said employees and others who think they have witnessed patient abuse should be required to fill out detailed forms.

"If we are to salvage something from this experience ... it should be that we learn that our reporting mechanisms for dealing with possible cases of abuse and neglect were very inadequate at Winfield State Hospital," Stephan said in his letter.

The charges were filed in March in Cowley County District Court, but a month later, Cowley County District Attorney Douglas Wright asked Stephan to take over the prosecution of the cases because of an alleged conflict he had with the judge hearing the case.

A third former employee, Martha Cole, 49, of Winfield, was found innocent last month of charges she abused physically abused patients.

Problems at Winfield first came to light in February, when federal inspectors levied allegations that patients at the hospital were being physically abused by some hospital staff members.

Highway killings persist, claim life

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — California's roadway violence claimed its fifth death of the summer when a woman shot in an apparently motiveless attack as she rode on an inner-city street last week died without regaining consciousness.

Shortly after Debbie Ann Scott of Pasadena died Sunday night, another driver was critically wounded in the same streets of south-central Los Angeles, where gang members frequently act out their rivalries in so-called drive-by shootings.

Anthony Bonilla, 20, was shot Sunday night and was in critical condition today, Sgt. John Kinard said. He lost control of the car and crashed. No arrests had been made by early today, Kinard said.

"We have no witnesses, so without being able to talk to him, we don't know whether it was a traffic-related shooting or if somebody fired at him from off the street, or even that it was gang- or narcotics-related," Kinard said.

Scott, 26, of Pasadena was critically wounded Aug. 16 while riding in the cab of a pickup truck in south-central Los Angeles.

Authorities also reported that a highway patrolman was fired on from a truck Saturday, and three people were arrested.

Meanwhile, Gov. George Deukmejian launched a $29 million offensive against the rash of attacks on the state's highways and byways.

FAA chief to review pilot training

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The head of the Federal Aviation Administration will meet in Kansas City Thursday with chief pilots of the nation's airlines as part of a review of pilot training by air carriers.

FAA Administrator T. Allan McArtor said the meeting is part of a "total top-to-bottom reassessment of our pilot training, our crew coordination procedures" by large airlines and commuter operations.

McArtor's remarks were made in an interview Sunday on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley."

Bob Raynesford, FAA regional spokesman in Kansas City, said Monday that about 300 invitations were sent to the meeting, scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m. CDT at the Westin Crown Center Hotel. Raynesford said McArtor, other FAA officials and leaders of aviation associations would meet with reporters after the session.

Jo Ann Sloane, an FAA spokeswoman in Washington, stressed that the meeting was not prompted by the recent Northwest Airlines crash in Detroit that killed 156 people.

Shortly after assuming his duties as FAA chief last month, McArtor announced plans for a nationwide pilot training review. The move came after the FAA initiated an examination of training programs at Delta Air Lines because of several mistakes by its pilots in a period of several weeks, including an incident in which two jetliners came within 100 feet of colliding over the North Atlantic.

"He's looking at things like pilot training, crew coordination and professionalism," Ms. Sloane said. By talking directly with the pilots, she said, "he's trying to get down to the nitty gritty."

She said Kansas City was chosen because of its central location and because it has a regional FAA office.

John Mazor, a spokesman for the Air Line Pilots Association in Washington, said the meeting was a good start but said he hoped McArtor would talk eventually to a broader range of people than the chief pilots.

Chief pilots at the larger airlines, he said, function more as executives than cockpit crewmen.

"What he wants to do is to beef up training and qualifications for pilots, and we certainly would endorse that kind of an effort," Mazor said.

"The only concern we have... is that we would not want this to be a (matter of) simply calling everybody in and giving them a pep talk on, 'Hey, you guys have to listen up and fly right,'" Mazor said.

Evidence confirms Hess' cause of death

By The Associated Press

BERLIN — British authorities declared officially Monday that Rudolf Hess hanged himself, and his family said the 93-year-old last survivor of Adolf Hitler's inner circle was buried secretly. They would not reveal where or when.

The family lawyer said the former deputy fuhrer's son, Wolf-Ruediger, suffered a stroke and was hospitalized in Munich.

Revising an earlier statement, British military authorities said evidence showed Hess hanged himself Aug. 17 with an electrical extension cord in West Berlin's Spandau prison, where he was sole inmate.

British military authorities said previously that Hess was found with "an electrical cord around his neck," but did not mention hanging.

News of a secret burial came initially from Mayor Karl Walter of Wunsiedel, a village in northern Bavaria where the Hess family has a burial plot.

Andrea Hess, wife of Wolf-Ruediger, said her father-in-law had been buried but refused to say more.

"I can confirm that the burial of Rudolf Hess has taken place," she told The Associated Press.

Walter said Hess was "definitely not" buried in his village, where services had been expected Wednesday.

Police arrested about 100 neo-Nazis in Wunsiedel over the weekend for demonstrating and displaying Nazi signs. Many wore swastikas and chanted the Nazi salute "Sieg Heil!" (Hail to Victory).

Walter expressed surprise that Hess was buried secretly. Members of the family had told him they intended to fulfill the former Nazi leader's wish to be buried in the family plot.

He had said earlier he was afraid burial in Wunsiedel would make the village a pilgrimage spot for Nazi sympathizers.

Hess flew to Britain in 1941 on what he described as a mission to make a separate peace between Britain and Germany. He had been in prison since, and was sentenced to life at the Nuremberg trials in 1946 for war crimes.

He was guarded at Spandau in month-long turns by soldiers of the four World War II Allies: the United States, Soviet Union, Britain and France. The fortress-like prison, now to be demolished, is in West Berlin's British sector.

Wolf-Ruediger Hess, 50, was taken to a hospital intensive care unit in Munich after his wife found him unconscious in their apartment Sunday evening, Seidl said.

Business Briefs

Course reviews for CPA exam

A course reviewing the certified public accountant exam will be Sept. 3 to Oct. 31, Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7 to 9:30 p.m. and Saturdays 8 a.m. to noon.

The review includes three sections: "Theory and Practice," "Law" and "Auditing."

Gleim and Delaney CPA Examination Review Manuals, 1987 Edition, are required for each section. Students can register for the review at the Division of Continuing Education office, Umberger 317.

Computer courses stress uses

The needs of professionals, students and children will be addressed in computer courses offered this fall through Continuing Education.

Course topics include "Introducing the Personal Computer," "Using the Personal Computer," "LOTUS 1-2-3" Level 1 and 2, "dBASE III PLUS" Level 1 and 2, "WORDPERFECT" Level 1 and 2, "Understanding and Using WORDSTAR," "Young People and the Personal Computer" and "Business Software."

Funds dwindle; retailers profit

August means higher revenue for Manhattan businesses — a lot higher. The higher revenue, of course, is a direct correlation to the beginning of the fall semester at K-State.

It's the tons of money that students pack to bring with them in the fall. Savings, loans, scholarships, grants, piggy banks and Mom and Dad are all sources for the beginning-of-the-semester monies. But where does that money go so quickly?

Well, there are those trips to Wal-Mart that are oh-so-necessary. And don't forget the checks for tuition, books and August rent.

Even after paying the major expenses, there always seems to be an abundance of money sitting in my ever-so-accessible checking account. But an abundance of money can be any amount over $10 — or the required minimum balance.

During the first month, there always seems to be plenty of money, but be wary college students, for the merchants are more than happy to help lighten your load.

Utilizing innovative marketing ploys, stores tend to call attention to every little thing a student could possibly need. For example, what's a college student without notebooks, pens, a desk, a lamp or even a new car? And what about those multi-colored highlighters that are guaranteed to help improve your GPA? Need to go on? And all of those beautiful displays have big, bright red signs shouting "special" or "discount." Interpretation: "Hey you, buy me!"

Businessmen bless those checking accounts and parents daily. Short of cash? Write a check. I'll hope later that my basic math skills are holding true and that I balance my checkbook correctly.

And now September is around the corner. The rent check will be due, the first phone and electric bill will arrive, and the money will begin to dwindle. Suddenly, I remember that by November I'll be waiting for that Happy Thanksgiving card from Grandma — complete with a $5 check. And by December, I'll be looking around my apartment at those necessities that I bought, wishing that I could have the money back.

So beware students — the lean months are just around the corner and Wal-Mart is just down the street.

Students' August return boosts local retail sales

Christmas in August.

That's how at least one Manhattan merchant describes the local retail climate when K-State students flock back to fall classes.

"It definitely is Christmas in August," said Dennie Anderson, manager of Wal-Mart, 628 Tuttle Creek Blvd. "We'll do the same (business) this week as we do the first week in December," he said early last week.

Not only does Anderson have to hire 30 to 35 additional employees to handle the rush, but store profits in August shoot up nearly 30 percent over July figures.

"We always notice a large increase in sales in August over previous summer months," he said.

So far this month, the store is experiencing a 10 percent to 12 percent increase over August 1986 sales, Anderson said. He speculated that the increase may mean an increased student enrollment this fall. Official enrollment figures are scheduled to be released today.

Tom Whalen, general manager of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, said tax revenues increase notably when students return to Manhattan.

"Obviously, when 16,000 people come back to town it's going to make a big difference in sales tax revenues," he said.

Bill Jacoby, executive director of the Aggieville Merchants Association, said the students' impact is greatest the first 30 days of school.

"It stays strong at least for 30 days," he said. "It stays extremely, extremely strong."

And Aggieville merchants recognize the importance of capturing the student market. The Association plans more promotions during the fall than any other season, Jacoby said.

"We just start high energy stuff," he said. "From now through Christmas, we hit it as hard as we do all year."

Jacoby believes the initial promotions are vital.

"If you're going to capture (the students), you capture them in the first 30 days," Jacoby said.

Perhaps no one knows that better than local radio stations. Ed Klimek, general manager of KQLA-FM, said the listener turnover every fall presents a challenge to all radio stations.

"If you don't have good listener-ship in the university market, your ratings are going to be low," he said.

"One of the big factors is you've got about one-third of the student population new to the school who haven't been exposed to the market," Klimek said. "First impressions are very important."

August rivals December for advertising revenue, he said.

"I would put August and December as our two biggest months of the year," he said. "August is a very, very big time for radio."

While University officials will be anxiously anticipating fall enrollment figures, so will Manhattan merchants.

"Enrollment affects us drastically," Jacoby said. "The average student is going to spend $700 to $1,000 a month. If you take 3,000 students out of the community at $1,000 each, that's $3 million you're losing."

Local cable television services experience significant increases in August.

Dan Hebert, manager of Manhattan Cable TV Services Inc., said cable TV hook-ups increase about 10 percent in August. Most of the new subscribers are students, he said.

"We bring in additional people from outside systems (to handle the demand)," Hebert said. All permanent employees concentrate on new hook-ups, and about six extra employees are hired to accommodate the rush.

Harry Watts, district manager-community relations for Southwestern Bell out of Salina, said new telephone connections increase three-fold in August over July.

In July 1986, 853 new access lines were installed compared to 2,466 in August. In September 1986, 688 new lines were installed, Watts said.

Town Center's planners aim to retain shopper's money, revitalize downtown sector

By Janet Swanson
Agri/Business Editor

Two-thirds of the money spent by area shoppers is being spent out of town. A fact that the Manhattan Town Center is intending to reverse.

"Forest City looked at the amount of money that was leaving Manhattan and found that only a third of it was staying in town," said Mickey Thompson, advertising and marketing director for Forest City. "We intend to keep that money that was leaving here."

More than 10 years of planning and $24 million will culminate with the opening of the Center on Oct. 26.

Forest City Development of Cleveland and JCP Realty, subsidiary of J.C. Penney Co. Inc., of New York are partners in the development.

"The support we have received from the community has just been incredible," said Susan Valentine, group marketing and advertising director for Forest City.

The Center, the first enclosed retail shopping center in the area, will feature 88 retailers and a food court with seating for 500.

"I think, if anything, we need to strengthen the food court area and add a children's clothing store," said Thompson.

The mall's search for a large restaurant has encountered stumbling blocks, said Thompson. Most require a market of 250,000 before adding a branch, but the mall's projected market is 180,000.

"We want some type of cafeteria-restaurant that will serve a full line, including alcohol," she said.

Retail space in the mall is more than 70 percent full, 20 percent more than what Forest City considers successful for a grand opening.

"We are right on target. You never open at 100 percent," said Valentine.

—Susan Valentine

Although some of the stores will be moving from downtown to the mall, Thompson said it will be an incentive for the remaining downtown merchants.

"It will cause some vacancies at first, but it will also create more traffic in the downtown area," said Thompson.

She added that a proposal to construct the mall on the outskirts of town was dropped because of the negative impact it would have on the downtown area.

"We see it as an evolution of downtown," Thompson said. The 80,000-square foot building will be anchored by J.C. Penney and Dillard's, with the possible addition of a third anchor at a later date. Negotiations are in process with Sears for the creation of that third anchor.

"We hate to say that anything is definite until we have something on paper," said Thompson.

Should a third anchor be contracted, Thompson said that construction on the addition would probably wait until next February to avoid large-scale construction during the Christmas season.

The complex, built on a 36-acre site, is expected to employ 640 people full- and part-time.

Shops presently leasing space in the mall are: Amigo's, Better Homes & Gardens, Brass Buckle, Braun's Fashions, Burke's Shoes, Butterfield's, Card Shark, Carousel, Claire's Boutique, Corn Dog on a Stick, CPI Photo Finish, Dillard's, Foot Locker, Gordon's Jewelers, Hot Dogs & More, Inside Scoop, J.C. Penney, Kay Bee Toys, K-G Men's Store, Kinney Shoes, Lane Bryant, Lerner, The Limited, Little Kings, Mastercuts, Maurice's, Merry Go Round, Mrs. Powell's, Musicland, The Nut Hut, Original Cookie, Payless Shoe Source, Petland, The Picture Show, Regis Hair-stylists, Royal Optical, Runza, Salutations, Sbarro Italian Eatery, Scotts LTD, Seiferts, Sports Page, Ups-n-Downs and Waldenbooks.

Staff/Jim Dietz

Burton Garrett, employed by E. Dunn and Sons Inc., installs the letter "D" of the Dillard's department store on the outside of the Manhattan Town Center. Dillard's is one of the two anchor stores in the mall, which is set to open Oct. 26.

Jury chosen in Anderson case

Trial beginning in district court

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A federal jury of five men and three women was picked Monday to hear an insurance company's claim it should not have to pay the children of Lorna Anderson Eldridge under a life insurance policy she took out on her first husband before he was killed in 1983.

Attorneys for New England Mutual Life Insurance Co. and lawyers for four children of Eldridge and the late Martin K. Anderson will deliver opening statements to the jury Tuesday morning, then begin calling witnesses.

The witness list, read to the jury Monday, sounded like a who's who from the highly publicized Lorna Anderson-Rev. Thomas Bird case in Emporia, which was the subject of a television mini-series aired earlier this year.

Bird is among scheduled witnesses, along with other principals in the case and law enforcement officers who investigated it.

Judge Dale E. Saffels of Kansas City, Kan., who is hearing the insurance case in federal district court here, said he expects the trial to continue into next week.

This is a civil case, with New England Mutual suing Eldridge, alleging fraud and deceit on her part. The company contends she purchased the insurance policy because she planned to murder her husband or cause him to be murdered.

New England Mutual is asking the court to declare the insurance policy void so it does not have to pay $120,000 in death benefits provided under its provisions. The policy also was to pay an additional $150,000 if Anderson died by "accidental bodily injury."

Anderson was murdered in a field south of Manhattan in November 1983. His wife, who has since remarried, was charged last May with first-degree murder in his death. A trial is pending.

Eldridge is serving a 5½- to 18-year prison sentence after pleading guilty in August 1985 to two counts of criminal solicitation to murder her husband. However, prosecutors have said neither of the plots resulted in Anderson's death.

Bird was convicted of first-degree murder in the 1983 death of his wife, Sandra, and of criminal solicitation to commit first-degree murder in an unsuccessful plot against Anderson. He is serving a life prison term.

Testimony in his trials pointed to a love affair between Bird and Anderson when she worked for him when he was a Lutheran pastor in Emporia.

Eldridge waived her claim to the benefits of the insurance policy last November, but asked that the money be paid to the couple's four children — four girls ranging in age from 6 to 13.

The girls were in court briefly Monday with their grandfather. They were introduced to the prospective jurors, then allowed to leave. The attorney for the children said they would not return for the rest of the trial.

Saffels ruled last Friday he would not bar Edward A. Hund of Wichita, the attorney for the Anderson children, from introducing evidence which might link Eldridge to the murder of her husband.

Hund cautioned jurors during Monday's selection process to concentrate on the civil case before them and not to become "bound up in the drama" of the publicized Emporia case.

During questioning by Saffels, all of the jurors said they were aware of the Anderson-Bird case through news media accounts, but promised they could render a fair verdict in the civil case.

Terrance Crebs of St. Louis, lead attorney for the insurance company, was assured by jurors that they had no prejudices against insurance companies and that the prospect of seeing insurance policy benefits paid to four children would not influence their judgement.

Spending outpaces income for two consecutive months

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Consumer spending, bolstered by brisk auto sales and exceptional air conditioning costs, soared 0.9 percent in July for the second month in a row, more than twice as fast as incomes grew, the government reported Monday.

The Commerce Department said that personal income was also up, but more modestly: 0.4 percent in July compared to 0.3 percent gains in May and June. It was the biggest income gain since a 0.6 percent advance in April.

With the growth of spending far outpacing the growth in incomes, Americans dipped deeper into their savings to make up the difference.

Personal savings, the ratio of savings to after-tax income, fell to 2.8 percent in July, down from 3.3 percent in June and from the 4.3 percent rate for all of 1986.

"The consumer has adapted very well to not saving any money," said David Wyss, chief financial economist for Data Resources Inc. in Lexington, Mass. "One may wonder how long this can continue, but it appears low savings rates will be with us for a while."

Despite the low savings, Monday's report was greeted by economists as a strong sign for the economy and an indication that the nearly five-year-old economic expansion is still continuing.

Consumer spending makes up roughly two thirds of the gross national product.

"We've got a rebound in consumer spending going, but a small one," said Sandra Shaber, an economist with the Futures Group, a Washington consulting business.

"But we should be cautious. This rebound is self-limiting. We have the low savings rate, high debt burdens and small wage gains. For many people, incomes are not even keeping up with inflation," Ms. Shaber added.

Inflation for the first seven months of 1987 has been running at an annual rate of 5 percent, based on the consumer price index.

Analysts said that the heat wave in many parts of the nation this summer contributed to the brisk spending figures as electricity bills surged.

Automobile sales also remained high, as dealers offered price and financing bargains to clear their lots before the introduction of 1988 models.

The two months of 0.9 percent consumer spending increases followed a 0.2 percent gain in May. The twin gains were the highest since a 2.3 percent surge in February.

Personal consumption spending, which includes nearly everything except interest payments on debt, rose at an annual rate of $25.6 billion in July following an increase of $26.9 billion in June.

In July, Americans were spending at the equivalent of an annual seasonally adjusted rate of $2.99 trillion, up from $2.97 trillion in June, the agency said.

Purchases of durable goods, items expected to last three years or more, increased $5.9 billion from June to July to an adjusted annual rate of $418 billion. It is this category that includes automobiles.

In June, durable good purchases had increased $9.8 billion, for an annual adjusted rate of $412 billion.

Purchases of nondurable goods increased $5.9 billion in July to an annual adjusted rate of $992 billion.

Purchases of services, a broad category which includes everything from electricity costs to housing and restaurant meals, rose $14.5 billion in July to an annual rate of $1.23 trillion.

Americans' disposable, or after-tax, income increased 0.4 percent in July after creeping down 0.2 percent in June.

Former House Speaker writes from experience

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Former House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, in his candid new autobiography, calls Robert Kennedy a "self-important upstart," Mikhail Gorbachev a "very appealing" but dangerous man and Ronald Reagan a bad president who would have made a great king.

"Man of the House: The Life and Political Memoirs of Speaker Tip O'Neill," is a string of blunt assessments and anecdotes that spans nearly 60 years in politics.

O'Neill talks about his first dip into politics, campaigning for Alfred E. Smith's presidential election in 1928 as a high school freshman in Cambridge, Mass., through his 34 years in the House, the last 10 as speaker. He retired this year at age 74.

The Massachusetts Democrat praises his longtime adversary, President Reagan, for his wit, sense of humor and extraordinary communication skills. "He's the best public speaker I've ever seen. With age, I'm beginning to think that in this respect he dwarfs both Roosevelt and Kennedy," O'Neill writes.

But the former speaker attacks Reagan not only on his policies but on his handling of the job.

"Ronald Reagan lacked the knowledge he should have had in every sphere, both domestic and international," O'Neill wrote.

"Most of the time he was an actor reading lines, who didn't understand his own programs. I hate to say it about such an agreeable man, but it was sinful that Ronald Reagan ever became president."

"But let me give him his due: he would have made a great king."

He calls former President Carter "the smartest public official I've ever known" on the issues but who failed because he refused to learn the ways of Washington.

O'Neill places much of the blame on Carter's staff, who he said treated Congress like the Georgia Legislature.

"As far as (chief of staff Hamilton) Jordan was concerned, a House speaker was something you bought on sale at Radio Shack," he writes, chastising Jordan for giving the O'Neill family back row seats at a 1981 inaugural gala.

Discussing Soviet leader Gorbachev, O'Neill says: "He's a very appealing guy, which is what makes him so dangerous. The Russian leadership may have affected a new and more sophisticated style, but the Soviet bear remains as aggressive and unpredictable as ever."

O'Neill praises the late John F. Kennedy, whom he replaced in the House in 1952 when JFK won a Senate seat, but reveals a deep rift with the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy.

"We weren't friendly, and to be blunt about it, I never really liked him," O'Neill writes. "To me he was a self-important upstart and a know-it-all. To him, I was simply a street-corner pol."

O'Neill says that in the 1950s, Robert Kennedy told a senator he was considering challenging O'Neill for his House seat.

Falwell shifts donations

By The Associated Press

LYNCHBURG, Va. — The Rev. Jerry Falwell has acknowledged that more than $6.7 million in contributions to his political organizations was spent on his religious ministries during the past three years but says the transfers were appropriate.

"I think that most people are giving because I signed the letter," he said. "They could care less if the project was being administered by whatever arms of the Jerry Falwell ministry enterprise."

However, many of those who contributed to his political groups would not have given directly to his religious organizations, Falwell told an overflow crowd of about 4,000 during his regular Sunday service at Thomas Road Baptist Church in Lynchburg.

The local News & Daily Advance reported the fund transfers in its Sunday editions, saying it obtained the information from federal and state agencies. Falwell said he also gave the newspaper information.

"I think it is something that is overdue for all the ministries. I think generally, it was a very fair presentation of what we gave them," he said.

Internal Revenue Service regulations do not prohibit such transfers unless the recipient of the funds has misled the donor.

The newspaper reported that slightly more than $6.7 million was taken from Falwell's political organizations, the Moral Majority and Liberty Federation.

Casualty's name remains enigma after 15 months

By The Associated Press

NEVADA, Mo. — The mystery remains 15 months after a man was struck and killed by a car as he stood on U.S. 54 near the Missouri-Kansas state line.

The marker on his grave in Newton Burial Park shows only the day he died — May 11, 1986.

"We tried everything we could, but we hit a blank wall each time," Highway Patrol Trooper E.J. Newman, the accident investigator, said of efforts to identify the victim who is listed only as John Doe.

"This is the first time I've ever encountered anything like this and it really bothers me. I'd like to get it solved, identify him and close the case," Newman said.

He said the man died shortly after midnight in the westbound lane of U.S. 54 about a half mile from the Kansas border. Newman said witnesses reported seeing the man standing in the road staring at the ground. The witnesses said they turned their car around to go back and help the man but he had been hit by the time they returned.

The victim's wallet contained only an advertisement for a Joplin trucking firm and a slip of paper with a woman's name and an address. Efforts to trace the woman through the Tulsa, Okla., address failed.

Newman said the victim's fingerprints were sent to the FBI in Washington, but that also turned out to be a dead end. "He was never in trouble and never in the Army, or the FBI would have had his fingerprints," Newman said. "The prints are usually your best hope if he's not a local guy."

"We tried everything we could, but we hit a blank wall each time."

—Trooper E.J. Newman

A description of the victim — about 30 years of age, 5 feet 10, about 160 pounds with brown hair and blue eyes, and several scars — and a photograph and composite picture were distributed nationwide. Authorities hoped — and still do — that someone would report a missing person who matches description.

"There have been quite a few that were close," Newman said. "It looked real good at one point. I was just sure we had it, but at the last minute it turned out not to be him."

"I keep thinking that someday someone who was close to him will call," Newman said. "He's got to belong to someone. It's amazing someone hasn't reported him."

"But when I started working the case, I was amazed at the number of people who go unidentified each year. There are people like that — loners who travel around the country with no identification."

Prison conditions violate civil rights, newspaper reports

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Department of Corrections and U.S. Justice Department officials met for two hours Monday to discuss possible problems with conditions at the state's maximum security prison.

The private meeting centered around the findings of a Justice Department report released to state officials in June, according to a statement Corrections Secretary Richard Mills released after it finished.

Corrections officials have declined to make the report public, but the Kansas City Times has reported it alleges conditions at the Kansas State Penitentiary may violate prisoners' civil rights.

Among the allegations is that health care at the 116-year-old institution is inadequate, the Times has said. Larry Cowger, special assistant to Mills, would not comment on the report.

Mills and several corrections officials met with John Petersen, Gov. Mike Hayden's legal counsel; Ben Burgess, U.S. Attorney for Kansas; and two Justice Department attorneys, said Cowger, who attended the meeting.

"The meeting today was the first step towards addressing the concerns raised by the Justice Department," Mills said in his statement. "We had an opportunity respond to their concerns and to provide some updated information concerning conditions at the penitentiary."

Mills said in his statement that "further discussion" will take place, and Cowger said additional meetings with Justice Department officials may be scheduled.

Kathy Peterson, Hayden's press secretary, said the federal officials wanted updated information because the report stemmed from a tour of the penitentiary in April 1986.

"That was the only thing resolved because of the meeting," Mrs. Peterson said.

According to published reports, a consultant hired by the state after the report was completed said in a study that the penitentiary's medical care was inadequate and its medical staff needed to be doubled.

Mrs. Peterson said the state could face a federal lawsuit, but added that Justice Department officials had not yet threatened to file one.

The state already is operating under a 1980 federal court decree in which it promised to make improvements at the prison. The agreement stemmed from several complaints filed by inmates in federal court.

Civil Rights pioneer dies

Rally planner, 75, remained active

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Bayard Rustin, the civil rights pioneer and activist who organized the Washington rally at which Dr. Martin Luther King gave his "I have a dream" speech, has died. He was 75.

Rustin died Sunday at Lenox Hill Hospital, where he had undergone surgery Friday for a ruptured appendix, said Norman Hill, president of the A. Philip Randolph Institute.

Rustin, co-chairman of the institute, went to the hospital with stomach pains on his return from a trip to Haiti. He had gone to Haiti with a labor group to assess the prospects for democratic change there, said Hill.

A pioneer, planner and thinker of the civil rights, peace and labor movements all his adult life, Rustin survived a major heart attack in 1971 and continued to campaign actively around the world against violence and injustice.

"He had boundless energy. He danced and sang at his 75th birthday tribute," said Hill.

In May he led a delegation of the Citizens Commission on Indo-Chinese Refugees on a tour of refugee camps on the Thai-Cambodian border.

That same week he was among the signers of an American Federation of Teachers' manifesto on the need to teach democratic values to school children.

Arrested more than two dozen times during a life of activism, Rustin also came under fire from radical blacks during the upheavals of the 1960s and 1970s for counseling against violence and black separatism.

"I'm prepared to be a Tom if it's the only way I can save women and children from being shot down in the street," he said when he was taunted for walking the streets of Harlem to help cool the riots of 1964.

Rustin was jailed for 2½ years as a conscientious objector during World War II and was an early foe of America's war in Vietnam.

New York's Mayor Edward I. Koch called him "absolutely fearless."

"He taught us love and he gave us peace," said Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan, D-N.Y., who said the 1963 Washington rally Rustin orchestrated "changed the nation."

Rustin's activism dated from his high school years in West Chester, Pa. He was born there March 17, 1910, one of 12 children, and was raised by his grandparents.

Rustin recalled that traveling as a member of a state championship football team, he was refused service at a restaurant and thrown out. "From that point on, I took the conviction that I would not accept segregation," he said.

He attended Wilberforce University in Ohio, Cheyney State Teachers College in Pennsylvania and City College of New York from 1930 to 1935, and was later awarded several honorary degrees.

Living in Harlem in the late 1930s, he supported himself by singing in nightclubs with entertainers like Josh White and Huddie "Leadbelly" Ledbetter.

Rustin participated in the first Freedom Ride against segregation in 1947, and wound up doing 30 days in a North Carolina chain gang.

In 1955 he went to Montgomery, Ala., to help King organize the bus boycott, a landmark victory for the civil rights movement.

His organizational skills brought 200,000 people to the 1963 march on Washington and King's mesmerizing speech at the Lincoln Memorial.

Coalition plans anti-nuclear waste rally

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A group opposed to the state's membership in a regional compact for the disposal of radioactive waste has scheduled a rally on the Capitol grounds for the first day of a special session of the Legislature.

The Kansas Coalition on Nuclear Waste is having the rally Aug. 31 to urge lawmakers to debate Kansas' participation in the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact, said Laura Menhusen of Jewell, the group's president.

Gov. Mike Hayden has called the special session to have lawmakers consider a comprehensive highway program, and he has said he wants legislative leaders to limit the debate to highways to avoid a protracted session. Hayden plans to appear at the rally, which begins at 9 a.m. on the north steps of the Capitol.

"We're encouraging people to call their legislators and ask that it be discussed during the special session," Menhusen said.

In 1982, Kansas joined the compact, which also includes Arkansas, Louisiana, Nebraska and Oklahoma. Under federal law, a host state for a regional dump must be selected by the beginning of next year. The compact has already chosen a developer, U.S. Ecology, of Louisville, Ky., to build a site.

The compact has sparked opposition in Kansas, where officials and some residents have said they think the state has a good chance of becoming the host state for a dump.

During the 1987 Legislature, attempts to pull the state out of the compact failed in the Senate, and a withdrawal measure did not get out of a House committee.

Richard Martin, new director of McCain Auditorium, began his position at K-State on July 27. One of Martin's main goals is to get students not only going to the programs, but also understanding them. Martin believes the arts play an important role on campus.

Martin working way west

By Jim Dietz
Collegian Reporter

Since working in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics more than ten years ago, Richard Martin has slowly worked his way west.

Martin began his duties as the new director of McCain Auditorium July 27.

A native of Memphis, Tenn., he received his bachelor's degree in Slavic languages and literature from the University of Chicago, and his master's in Slavic linguistics in Russian literature from Columbia University. He spent the last 11 years as manager of the Artists Series at Pennsylvania State University.

Prior to working in Pennsylvania, Martin selected the cultural events that American exchange students attended while in Leningrad.

McCain's director began trek in USSR

Martin has a strong belief that the arts play a very important role on a campus.

"The students need to have an opportunity to see what is going on in the arts, from this country and abroad," Martin said.

One of Martin's main goals is to get students not only going to the programs, but also understanding them.

"It's a chance one will never have again to experiment with things that you might come to like," Martin said. "The more one goes, the more one knows."

He said he is not looking to make any immediate changes at McCain; rather, he will wait and observe the program.

"What might look strange or unusual now might make eminently good sense six months from now given the situation," Martin said.

It is more important to bring the knowledge, the skills and the experience from outside to change the program if any are needed, Martin said.

As far as Martin's new environment is concerned, he is quite pleased, he said, and he believes K-State is generally a good university and is even somewhat underrated.

Martin said he considers McCain Auditorium a fine facility with a good program schedule already in place.

He also said he is looking forward to working with the McCain Development Board.

"(They are) a dedicated group of individuals who are willing to give of their time and resources to make the arts work," Martin said.

Governor replaces Carlin's appointees

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Revenue Secretary Harley T. Duncan announced Monday appointment of Republicans John R. Luttjohann as director of taxation and Terry Dean Hamblin as director of property valuation.

Luttjohann and Hamblin replace Democrats Carol Bonebrake and Vic Miller, appointees who served under former Democratic Gov. John Carlin.

Both Luttjohann and Hamblin are attorneys and certified public accountants. They will join the Revenue Department on Sept. 18 and will be paid identical annual salaries of $54,000.

Miller, a former state representative and now a member of the Topeka City Council, resigned as property valuation director last December before Republican Gov. Mike Hayden took office. Duncan has been directing the property valuation division the past eight months in addition to his duties as head of the Revenue Department.

Bonebrake said Duncan informed her when he was appointed revenue secretary by Hayden on June 5 that she would be replaced. Nothing else was said about her leaving, she said, until last Friday when Duncan informed her she was being replaced.

Duncan, a Democrat, served under Carlin but was retained by Hayden on an acting basis from January until June, when the new Republican governor decided to keep Duncan as his permanent revenue secretary.

"I did not resign," Bonebrake said in an Associated Press interview. "I didn't ask why I was being replaced. He (Duncan) just said I was being replaced. He did not ask for my resignation and therefore I did not give it."

Bonebrake said that to the best of her knowledge her dismissal "doesn't go any deeper than that I am a registered Democrat."

"Nobody particularly likes to lose his or her job, but that's the game's played this way," she said. "I went in with my eyes wide open. At best these are four- or eight-year jobs and I've been here eight."

Bonebrake, former attorney for the property valuation division who has headed the tax division the past four years, said she plans to enter private law practice in Topeka.

Luttjohann, a member of a private Topeka accounting firm since 1979, served as a corporate income tax auditor in the Revenue Department in 1978-79. He is a 1978 graduate of Washburn University and earned his law degree from Washburn in 1983.

Hamblin, who lives in Derby, has been in private law practice there the past four years, but formerly was associated with a Topeka accounting firm. A member of the Derby School Board, Hamblin is a 1978 graduate of Emporia State University and earned his law degree from Washburn.

President to sell adoption as 'alternative'

By The Associated Press

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — President Reagan, after moving to stop the use of federal money for abortion counseling services, named a federal task force Monday to sell adoption as an "alternative for pregnant women."

"Americans are a warm-hearted, caring people, and for years, American couples have reached out to embrace children who otherwise would grow up without a stable family life," Reagan, himself an adoptive parent, said in a statement released here.

"We must expand and broaden our

Reagan's goal is to decrease abortions

efforts to make sure that America's family-less children are adopted," said the statement. "We must do all we can to remove obstacles that prevent qualified adoptive parents from accepting these children into their home."

But in describing the work of the task force, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, briefing reporters at a seaside resort hotel while Reagan continued his vacation on a mountaintop ranch north of here, acknowledged that the pro-adoption initiative was also a part of Reagan's anti-abortion campaign.

"It is true that adoption is an alternative to abortion," the spokesman said. "We want to make sure that there aren't (federal) rules and regulations that hinder that process."

Fitzwater added, "I think it's fair to say it's part of the family values initiative" that Reagan alluded to early this month during an appearance before right-to-life activists gathered in the Old Executive Office Building next to the White House.

On that occasion, Reagan pledged to work as hard as possible for pro-life causes. He also announced a series of regulations, proposed by the Department of Health and Human Services, which would have the effect of denying the use of federal tax dollars for abortion counseling and referral services by some 4,500 family planning centers.

Fitzwater said Monday that the process of adoption in this country "cries out for some kinds of solution in a number of areas."

The task force, composed of officials from a host of federal agencies and departments, will focus on "barriers to adoption," the spokesman said.

"Up until now," Fitzwater added, "the federal government has not really taken a good and comprehensive look at this problem. This is not designed to correct a problem within government. It is designed to correct a problem within society."

Reagan's son Michael is adopted. The president has another son, Ron, and two daughters, Patti Davis and Maureen Reagan.

Kate Michelman, executive director of the National Abortion Rights

Action League, said the government should not be spending money, time and energy promoting one reproductive option over another.

"Adoption is a viable and important option for women facing an unplanned pregnancy, but it is only one," she said. "Women should not be intimidated or pressured into adoption or abortion or foster care or any of the options. They have to be supported to come to the decision that is best for them and their family."

Michelman said many women find adoption a difficult choice and said carrying a pregnancy to term can be life-threatening for teen-agers.

Condemned killer says he's innocent up until execution

By The Associated Press

ANGOLA, La. — An accountant convicted of killing his secretary to cover up an embezzlement gave the thumbs-up sign Monday as he died in Louisiana's electric chair.

Sterling Rault, who once claimed two cousins came back from the grave to rape and kill Jane Ellen Francioni, maintained his innocence in a two-minute final statement that dealt mainly with his Christian beliefs.

"I would like the public to know that they are killing an innocent man at this time. I am only transferring from death row to life row with eternal life."

—Sterling Rault

He was the eighth man executed in Louisiana this summer and the 87th in the United States since the U.S. Supreme Court allowed the reinstatement of the death penalty in 1976.

Rault, 36, was condemned for raping, shooting and slitting the throat of Ms. Francioni, 21, of Slidell, in 1982 and then dousing her body with gasoline before setting it on fire.

Prosecutors said Rault killed Ms. Francioni because she knew he had embezzled $84,000 from the Louisiana Energy and Development Co. in New Orleans, where they worked, and feared she would tell someone.

"I would like the public to know that they are killing an innocent man at this time," Rault said.

"I am only transferring from death row to life row with eternal life, as Life Row Ministries' many members have taught me," Rault said. "Even as I sit in this chair, I intend to stand tall for Christ."

He blew a kiss and mouthed the words "I love you" to his aunt and spiritual adviser, Sister Mary Rault, a Roman Catholic nun. She responded in kind.

Rault had given several accounts of the night of the murder.

He originally told arresting officers that he and Ms. Francioni were kidnapped by two masked men who raped and killed her.

At his state Pardon Board hearing, Rault said he recalled nothing of the events preceding his arrest and contended someone must have drugged him.

Later, under hypnosis, Rault said Ms. Francioni was shot accidentally when his deceased cousins appeared to rape the woman and slit her throat.

In yet another version, Rault told his defense attorney that Ms. Francioni pulled a gun on him and was accidentally shot during a struggle. He said when he realized she was dead, he cremated her in accordance with previously expressed wishes, according to court documents.

Report shows national abortion decline

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA — In the wake of the nation's first reported decline in abortions, federal health researchers have set out to learn why.

A new report from the national Centers for Disease Control says 1,268,987 legal abortions were performed in the United States in 1983, the latest year for which figures were available. That was down 2.7 percent from the 1,303,980 reported in 1982.

It was the first reported decrease since national abortion record-keeping began in 1969.

The CDC, in its latest Surveillance Summaries report, drew no conclusions about the decrease.

"We're now working on analysis," said CDC reproductive health specialist Dr. Hani Atrash. "We can't conclude anything on the basis of just the numbers we had."

One possible reason is that the demand for abortion may have simply peaked, Atrash said. "A higher number of women have been sterilized over the years, and they don't get pregnant anymore, so they have no need for abortions," he said.

The CDC report noted that another abortion statistic began falling two years earlier; the nation's abortion rate peaked in 1980 at 25 abortions for every 1,000 females 15-44, slowing to 24 per 1,000 in both 1981 and 1982 and slowing again to 23 per 1,000 by 1983.

"It could be that more women are using contraceptives these days, so there are less unwanted pregnancies," Atrash said.

In the coming months, CDC researchers hope to further analyze their statistics about the women who had abortions in 1983.

The District of Columbia reported the nation's highest abortion rate in 1982 and 1983 — greater than 100 abortions per 1,000 women between ages 15 and 44. West Virginia reported the lowest rate — six abortions per 1,000 women 15-44.

Although data were received from health officials in all 50 states and the District of Columbia, the CDC noted that the number of legal abortions reported to federal officials is probably lower than the number actually performed. In 1982, The Alan Guttmacher Institute, which does its own studies on abortion trends, reported 17 percent more abortions than did the CDC.

The CDC reported that along with the number of U.S. abortions, the percentage obtained by teen-agers is also on the decline. Teen-agers had 27 percent of reported U.S. abortions in 1983, down from 29 percent in 1980.

White women were, statistically, less likely than minority women to have abortions. In 1983, the CDC reported, there were 497 abortions for every 1,000 live births by blacks or females of other races, compared to 302 abortions per 1,000 live births by white females.

Former K-Stater now foreign pro

By Chris Wilhelm
Sports Writer

Renee Whitney, one of K-State's outstanding volleyball players during the last several seasons and one of the Big Eight Conference's most touted female athletes, is now playing professional volleyball in Switzerland.

Whitney, who was attending the University until her jump into the professional leagues in October 1986, is currently playing for the Hefti Sports Leysin volleyball team.

The club league Whitney's team belongs to is the B-league, with the order of teams being decided on team records at the end of the previous season. Each of the Swiss teams is allowed two foreign players. Whitney and her coach, a native of Holland (who also plays), are the two foreigners on the Hefti Sports Leysin team.

Although she was home in Manhattan over the summer, Whitney has returned to Switzerland to prepare for the upcoming season which begins in mid-October. Whitney kept herself busy over the summer conducting summer volleyball camps for high school students. She said she really enjoys working with kids and she loves volleyball so it is "just natural" for her to continue doing it.

In her first year as a professional, Whitney was extremely successful as a setter and a hitter. "I was very pleased with my performance, as was the rest of my team. I was able to contribute right away and I was satisfied with my play," Whitney said.

Whitney's biggest problem in playing in the foreign league came with her inability to speak French. "It is frustrating sometimes not being able to express myself the way I want to. It really makes me miss the convenience of being at home (in the United States)."

The first thing that lured Whitney away from K-State in the middle of the semester was the chance to travel.

She said by playing volleyball, she could afford to live in Europe and experience different things. She said a friend had informed her of an opening on one of the teams. Whitney got in touch with the coach and the team signed her immediately.

"It is frustrating sometimes not being able to express myself the way I want to. It really makes me miss the convenience of being at home (in the U.S.)...I'll play in Switzerland this year and possibly next year, but after that things are kind of up in the air."

—Renee Whitney

The team provides Whitney with a place to stay, a car, a free education at the American University in Switzerland (which would cost about $20,000 a year) and "a little bit of spending money."

Although other teams are allowed to fill vacancies in their foreigner positions with Americans, Whitney is the only American presently playing in the Swiss league.

Whitney has been provided with an apartment in the mountains. She described her new home by saying, "It's beautiful and the weather is always great."

When questioned about the possibility of staying overseas for any length of time, Whitney said, "I'll play in Switzerland this year and possibly next year, but after that things are kind of up in the air."

Although Whitney is finishing up a degree in education, she has considered a move to coaching after she has finished school.

Staff/Brad Fansher

After being red-shirted his first year and sitting out most of last year with an injury, K-State running back Maurice Henry, who was described by

Head Coach Stan Parrish as one of the more talented running backs in the conference, hopes to become one of the best in the Big Eight.

Tailback anxious to 'bust loose'

By BILL LANG
Sports Writer

Upon arrival to the K-State gridiron in the fall of 1985, from Salina Central High School in Salina, Maurice Henry has been anxious to "bust loose."

That "bust loose" attitude has fueled his desire to become one of the elite running backs in the Big Eight.

"I've been waiting for a long time for this and I finally feel that this year will be my best," Henry said. "I was red-shirted my freshman year and was injured (with a broken bone in the right foot) most of last year."

The wait continues. During last week's drills, Henry suffered a slight pull of the hamstring and sat out a few days.

"It's kind of frustrating," Henry said. "But I feel I'll be back and then I'll be ready to bust loose."

Head coach Stan Parrish described Henry as one of the more talented running backs in the conference.

"If he's healthy, he can be one of the better backs in the Big Eight," Parrish added. "He's strong, fast and just a phenomenal athlete. He could be a big plus for us."

During his freshman year, he garnered the title of "Best Overall Conditioned Athlete," the first freshman to do so since 1980.

This spring he was the strongest running back on the bench press, pressing 438 pounds. This is impressive for a man who weighs in at 230 pounds and stands 6-1.

Henry expressed the same outlook for himself as Parrish did.

"I feel that if I am healthy, I can be one of the better backs in the Big Eight," Henry said. "We have a good line this year and they'll be creating a lot of holes for us. With the passing game getting better it'll push the defense back and allow us to run for more."

For Henry, the team's goals come first, although he would like to add his name to the list of yard-gainers before he leaves Wildcat-land.

"We need to keep everybody healthy first," Henry said. "If we can get the blocking we need, the yardage will pile up and then the wins will soon follow."

Richmond stars abroad

By Chris Wilhelm
Sports Writer

K-State basketball standout forward Mitch Richmond learned a lot over the summer in Yugoslavia, but he's glad to be home.

Richmond was a member of the United States basketball team at the World University Games in Zagreb, Yugoslavia.

Entering his senior year at K-State, Richmond was the United States' leading scorer, averaging more than 15 points per contest. The Americans won easily in the early games but were beaten in the championship game by the Yugoslavians, 100-85.

Richmond saw the trip as a learning experience. He had never been overseas before and he found life in Yugoslavia much different than that of life in the U.S. The biggest difference that Richmond noted was in the food.

"I had a good time over there, but I never adjusted to the food," Richmond said. "You would ask a waiter if they had something, he would say yes and then he would bring you something else."

Another difference Richmond noted was the lack of television programming aimed at the adult population. He said there were only two stations in Zagreb and he wasn't fond of either one of them.

"One of the stations was for three-year-olds and the other station wasn't worth watching either."

Richmond and the rest of the American team spent much of their free time either sightseeing or watching the other sporting events. The Americans were able to travel around the countryside on trains taking in the scenery. When he wasn't being a tourist, Richmond was able to watch such sports as rowing, volleyball and water polo.

When talking about the basketball team's overall performance, Richmond sounded pleased.

"The United States team played well. I really enjoyed playing with B.J. Armstrong (Iowa, guard) and Sean Elliot (Arizona, forward). They are really good players,"

K-State forward Mitch Richmond was a member of the United States basketball team at the World University Games in Yugoslavia.

Richmond said.

The Wildcats will be facing Troy Lewis of Purdue and Matt Bullard of Colorado, two of the members of the U.S. team who Richmond thought were outstanding players.

Richmond said drug testing was performed on all of the athletes and none of the American group tested positive.

The head coach of the American team, Mike Krzyzewski of Duke University, really didn't need to make any major changes with Richmond, as the K-State defense and the American team's defense were virtually the same.

"The style of ball that we were playing over there (in Yugoslavia) wasn't really any different than what we play at K-State and the defense was the same so there really weren't that many changes," Richmond said.

Games prepare U.S. athletes

By The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — The United States enters the final year of Olympic preparation in excellent shape on the track and in the pool. Chances are also bright in gymnastics, volleyball and about a dozen less-publicized sports.

But in three of the most popular sports — basketball, baseball and boxing — a quick fix is needed.

The United States won 369 medals, including 168 gold, in the Pan American Games, which concluded Sunday. But only one gold came in the boxing ring, by Kelcie Banks, while Cuba won a record 10 titles.

And no gold was won in men's basketball and baseball.

"I don't think we need to panic," said Roosevelt Sanders, coach of the U.S. boxing team, which was 2-9 in matches against Cuba.

Banks said he felt fighting the Cubans would provide international seasoning and be beneficial "down the road, especially at the Olympics."

Losing to Brazil in one of the most stunning basketball losses the American men ever have suffered also could be helpful for the trip to Seoul. Georgetown Coach John Thompson, the Olympic team coach who attended some of the Pan Am team's games, doesn't figure to have a squad that will allow 120 points to opponents.

But what Thompson must have in Seoul is another big, strong center to back up David Robinson. He also needs some 3-point shooters to take advantage of the long bomb the way Brazil's Oscar Schmidt did in the final.

The U.S. baseball squad, a collection of collegiate stars, gave the world champion Cubans their first loss in 20 years of Pan Am play. They also gave the Cubans a scare in the gold-medal game before falling 13-9.

Because the Olympics will be held in September, none of the collegians drafted by major league teams next June can play for those organizations until after the 1988 season.

The best pitcher in the tournament, reliever Cris Carpenter, is a No. 1 draft pick of the St. Louis Cardinals. He is faced with the choice of turning pro, returning to the University of Georgia as a punter or delaying his professional career to play in the Olympics.

The U.S. volleyball squad has won the 1984 Olympics, the World Cup, world championship and Pan Am Games, an unprecedented sweep. The team will be the favorite over the Soviets, Cubans and China.

The women's basketball team won here despite the absence of three of its stars, all out with knee injuries. With Cheryl Miller, Cindy Brown and Kamie Ethridge in the lineup, the Americans will be formidable in Seoul.

So will the gymnastics teams, although they don't figure to win many gold medals. The Soviets, Chinese, Japanese, East Germans and Romanians are the powers of the sport.

As usual, the U.S. team was overpowering in the pool and on the diving boards. Despite sending a young team composed of third- and fourth-place finishers from the national championships, the United States won 27 of 32 gold medals.

The depth of American swimming, particularly among the women, is impressive. The East German women will get a severe challenge from the Americans in Seoul. The U.S. men should be nearly as successful as they were in Los Angeles, despite better competition.

Greg Louganis will culminate his extraordinary diving career at Seoul, where he will be heavily favored to win off both the springboard and platform. Kelly McComick and Michele Mitchell have beaten the Chinese and Soviet divers in the past.

Molitor hopes to extend tear

By The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Each day, as his hitting streak grows longer, Paul Molitor of the Milwaukee Brewers faces a new pitcher with one idea in mind — stopping him.

Some pitchers have been tougher than others. Mike Boddicker of Baltimore, for example, held Molitor hitless in three trips on Aug. 13 before he was lifted for reliever Tom Niedenfuer.

Molitor hit a two-out homer in the ninth off Niedenfuer to keep the streak going.

After getting Monday off, Molitor will try to extend that streak to 39 games Tuesday night when the Cleveland Indians and the American League's most regularly rocked, pitching staff come to County Stadium.

"You just focus on who you're going to face rather than who you'd rather not face," Molitor said.

Ken Schrom, 5-10, will start Tuesday for the Indians, and he's one pitcher, according to the numbers, who hasn't given Molitor much trouble. Molitor was 2-for-3 with two doubles and three RBI against Schrom in a series last week, and he is 3-for-6 with five RBI this season against the right-hander.

"I've had some success against Kenny, but he's had his days where he's given me trouble as well. It will just be a matter of getting ahead in the count and getting some good pitches to hit."

The Indians' other scheduled starters are Rich Yett, 2-5, and Scott Bailes, 6-6. Molitor hasn't faced Yett this season and is 1-for-4 against Bailes. In last week's series against the Indians, Molitor was 10-for-20. But, in the opener of the series against Bailes, his only hit off the left-hander was a third-inning bunt single.

Molitor currently is hitting .371 but, because he missed 44 games in the first half of the season with a variety of injuries, he does not have enough plate appearances to be listed among the league's leading hitters. Wade Boggs of the Boston Red Sox leads the American League with a .361 average.

Molitor would need 502 plate appearances to qualify for the batting title. He currently has 315 at-bats and 364 plate appearances with 38 games remaining.

"There is a possibility if I play regularly the remainder of the season I could qualify," Molitor said.

Reagan's speech broadcast to rebels

President pledges continued support

By The Associated Press
SAN JOSE, Costa Rica — President Reagan told Nicaraguan rebels in a broadcast on a clandestine radio station Monday night that the United States will continue to support them "until the people of Nicaragua are guaranteed basic liberties."
"The journey's end is 'Nicaragua Libre' (Free Nicaragua)," the president said in an unprecedented broadcast over the rebels' "Radio Liberation."

Reagan's three-minute taped speech in English, which was followed by a Spanish translation, began at about 6:30 p.m. and was jammed by the leftist Sandinista government in Nicaragua but heard faintly in neighboring Costa Rica. Residents in parts of Managua, the Nicaraguan capital, said they could hear a few words of the Spanish translation under the jamming but could not understand them.

The president, a former broadcaster who communicates regularly with the American people via radio, taped the message Saturday at his ranch 20 miles north of Santa Barbara, Calif., said presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.
Radio Liberation had announced on its 6 p.m. news program the speech would be carried three times

"Hopes will be measured against reality in Nicaragua and promises will be measured against peace."
—President Reagan

Monday night and twice early Tuesday.
Reagan said a peace plan signed by five Central American presidents in Guatemala on Aug. 7 "calls for sweeping political and social change to take place in Nicaragua."

But he called into question Nicaragua's commitment to that agreement.
"Hopes will be measured against reality in Nicaragua and promises will be measured against peace," Reagan said.
"The signing of the Guatemala peace plan was an important act of faith. But our faith must be tempered by realism, because faith without realism will not end in peace but in disillusionment," he said.
The president noted that in signing the peace plan, Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega promised to respect human rights and political and religious freedom in his country.

"But like you," Reagan told his listeners, "I also know that the civil war in Nicaragua began when the Sandinistas promised you democracy but failed to meet that commitment."
Radio Liberation, which broadcasts news and music from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. daily, is frequently jammed in Nicaragua. Its point of origin is unknown and in the best of circumstances its transmissions are often scratchy and difficult to hear.

Groups defend college costs

Private universities disagree with study

By The Associated Press
WASHINGTON — An unpublished U.S. Department of Education study that concludes the total cost of a bachelor's degree is 54 percent higher at private colleges than public campuses is triggering a battle between higher education groups and the Reagan administration.
Private college leaders long have argued that despite their sharply higher tuitions, overall costs at private institutions were on a par with the real costs of public higher education, including all state appropriations and subsidies.
But a paper prepared by Duc-Le To, a research associate in the Department of Education's Office of Educational Research and Improvement, estimates that the full institutional cost of a bachelor's degree at all U.S. campuses in 1983 was $24,713, with the four-year cost averaging $18,474 at public colleges and $28,386 at private ones.

To suggested that the reason public colleges cost less is because they enroll more students, including part-timers, and put them in larger classes. He said the most efficient size of a university "may be somewhere beyond 20,000 students" — a scale that few private campuses match, or want to match.
"I think people should recognize I didn't consider quality of the degree in my paper. High cost doesn't necessarily mean inefficiency," To said in an interview.

The study's critics say it is riddled with errors and simply the latest ploy by Secretary of Education William J. Bennett to stir up public resentment of rising college costs.
"It's really a dog," said Elaine El-Khawas, the American Council on Education's vice president for policy analysis and research. "It's full of mistakes and debatable assumptions."
Allan W. Ostar, president of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, said the study "is poorly done and a disservice to everyone who is interested in understanding higher education. ... I deplore this attempt to drive a wedge between public and independent institutions."
Chester E. Finn Jr., the assistant secretary of education for research, defended the paper, which he said was still being edited. Finn said he was postponing a press seminar on the study that had been tentatively scheduled for next Friday.

Finn said the paper, "Estimating the Cost of a Bachelor's Degree: An Institutional Cost Analysis," contained "an interesting and important discovery (that) does go contrary to the conventional wisdom. We can't tell you why that gap is there, but as far as we can make out it is."
To, a native of Taiwan who holds a doctorate in economics from the University of Pittsburgh, derived his figures from the Higher Education General Information Surveys (HEGIS) that the Department of Education conducts each year. He estimated the cost per credit hour of educating undergraduates, then multiplied that by the 120 hours needed for a bachelor's degree.
But To's critics said the HEGIS figures often omit how much states spent on construction, faculty pensions, security and other costs at public campuses.

Celeste drops out of presidential race

By The Associated Press
COLUMBUS, Ohio — Gov. Richard Celeste on Monday said he has decided against running for the Democratic nomination for the 1988 presidential race.
Celeste, with his family nearby, made the announcement at an afternoon news conference at the Governor's Mansion in suburban Columbus. He said he concluded a presidential bid at this stage would cost too much money and take too much time from running the state.
Celeste had announced in the spring that he was considering running for the nomination.
Since then, he said, he had talked with advisers and other supporters and decided he could spread the state's message better if he remained governor.

Celeste estimated that a presidential campaign would cost $6 million and an investment in time that "would be so substantial that Ohio's message would be overshadowed."

Celeste, 49, is among a handful of Ohioans who have expressed interest in the 1988 race. Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, says he is considering a presidential race, but only if he can retire a debt from his unsuccessful 1984 race. Rep. James Traficant, D-Ohio, said last week that he had authorized formation of a committee to explore a presidential bid.

Kidnappers release tape

By The Associated Press
BEIRUT, Lebanon — Kidnappers holding two West Germans released a four-minute videotape early Tuesday showing hostage Alfred Schmidt pleading with Bonn to free a suspected Lebanese hijacker in return for their freedom.
"We ask the government of Germany to seriously consider the release of Mohammed Ali Hamadi so our release may be possible," Schmidt, a 47-year-old engineer, said in the tape, which was delivered to a Western news agency in Beirut.

Schmidt appeared to be reading in German from a three-page, handwritten statement in a relaxed voice.
He was kidnapped in Moslem west Beirut Jan. 20, three days after West German businessman Rudolf Cordes, 53, was abducted on the city's airport highway.

Schmidt and Cordes were seized shortly after Hamadi, 22, was arrested in Frankfurt for possession of explosives. The United States had pressed for his extradition to face charges of air piracy and murder in connection with the 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner to Beirut.
The Bonn government on June 24 rejected the U.S. request to extradite Hamadi, and announced it would try the Lebanese in West Germany.

Superpower summit unlikely

By The Associated Press

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — Reagan administration officials said Monday that another U.S.-Soviet summit would be unlikely unless the superpowers were in virtual agreement on a treaty to eliminate intermediate-range nuclear weapons.

Chief presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater emphasized anew that "there have been no contacts with U.S. officials" indicating that Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev wants to meet with President Reagan in Washington following a visit to the United Nations in New York in September.

Fitzwater and State Department spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley also said that Gorbachev was not expected to visit the U.N.

But Fitzwater said Gorbachev has a longstanding invitation to visit this country, and "we don't want to send too negative a message" in response to possible overtures by the

Officials say nothing implies Soviet leader to visit Reagan

Soviets.

"We've never set any conditions," he said. "I think it is generally recognized by both sides, however, that the most natural basis for a summit would be the completion of the arms control talks."

The administration comments came amid speculation about a possible third summit between President Reagan and Gorbachev, triggered by a Los Angeles Times report Sunday that the Soviet leader wanted to meet with Reagan, even in the absence of an agreement to eliminate whole classes of intermediate-range, or INF, missiles.

At a briefing for reporters who accompanied the president to California for the president's annual summer vacation, Fitzwater said U.S. officials were taken aback by the Times story.

The newspaper, in its Monday editions, noted the State Department denial of the earlier story indicating a possible Reagan-Gorbachev summit in Washington.

But, citing "non-Soviet sources familiar with U.S.-Soviet contacts," the paper reaffirmed that the United States government has been advised through private channels of Gorbachev's plan to attend a General Assembly session at the United Nations in September, and that the Kremlin leader would be prepared to follow that with a meeting with Reagan in Washington.

"We don't have any foundation for those stories," Fitzwater said. "There's no indication that the general secretary (Gorbachev) has made any overtures towards coming in September, and no contacts have been made that we're aware of."

Fitzwater indicated that Reagan is not interested in another summit with Gorbachev unless a nuclear arms reduction pact is virtually signed, sealed and delivered beforehand.

He noted that Reagan has given Gorbachev an open-ended invitation to come to the United States but said "we have not received a response to that."

While no strings were attached to the invitation, the spokesman said, "I would say that if any summit is held in the United States, it would be associated with the signing of an arms control agreement."

U.S. and Soviet arms negotiators have been meeting regularly in Geneva, but an agreement on banning U.S. and Soviet shorter-range missiles in the INF class apparently is hung up on a dispute over whether 72 Pershing 1A missiles held by West Germany would be covered by such a pact.

A senior U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the administration does not want a repetition of the ill-starred U.S.-Soviet summit at Reykjavik, Iceland, last October, when Reagan and Gorbachev held serious discussions about major reductions in nuclear arsenals.

Those talks collapsed when Reagan refused to accept Soviet attempts to limit his "Star Wars" missile defense program.

Ten Soviet teen-agers arrive in United States

By The Associated Press

FREEPORT, Maine — A group of Soviet teen-agers arrived Monday in Samantha Smith's home state to continue the citizen diplomacy the Maine schoolgirl began in 1982.

The 10 Soviets, who are traveling around the East Coast at the invitation of the Samantha Smith Foundation, stopped first at the headquarters of outdoor outfitters L.L. Bean Inc., the mail order store whose retail center has become a tourist mecca.

Later, the youths traveled to the Capitol in Augusta, where they and a group of American students paid tribute to Samantha.

Samantha, 13, died with her father Aug. 25, 1985, in a fiery plane crash two years after she traveled to the Soviet Union in the name of peace.

She gained international attention when she wrote a letter to Soviet leader Yuri Andropov in December 1982, expressing concern about war between the superpowers.

Andropov replied in a letter pledging that his country never would be the first to use nuclear weapons. At his invitation, Samantha and her parents visited the Soviet Union in the summer of 1983.

Arriving in Freeport en route to a weeklong camping stay near the central Maine coast, the children from Lenin-grad spent an hour browsing and buying at Bean's.

Tatyana Nikitina, 16, who said she was "looking for sports shoes for my sister," recalled meeting Samantha four years ago at Camp Artek on the Black Sea.

She said seeing "so many people with open faces and open hearts" brought the memory of the meeting freshly to her mind.

Halfway through an 11-day tour that has already featured stops in Washington, D.C., and Boston, Miss Nikitina said she and her friends had a keen interest in the United States.

The girl and her companion, 15-year-old Tatyana Turikova, said their families were happy about the visit. Speaking through an interpreter, they said their mothers instructed them not to "fool around."

Court ends textbook case

Ruling may be appealed

By The Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — A federal appeals court has thrown out a case in which seven families alleged their First Amendment rights were violated by public school textbooks they said offended their Christian beliefs, the state attorney general said Monday.

However, a lawyer for the families said he would appeal the case to the U.S. Supreme Court.

State Attorney General W.J. Michael Cody said he had been advised of the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals by the court's clerk, and that the case had been sent back to U.S. District Judge Thomas G. Hull "with instructions to dismiss it."

"We are very pleased," Cody said of the appellate ruling.

In an earlier ruling, Hull had ordered the Hawkins County Board of Education to pay the families for private school tuition and other expenses, totaling more than $50,000.

The court of appeals threw out the damages.

Hull ruled Oct. 24 that the school board violated the families' civil rights by ignoring their religious beliefs and requiring their children to read the assigned texts or leave school.

Michael Farris, who represented the families, said in a telephone interview that the decision by a three-judge panel of the Court of Appeals in Cincinnati would be appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

"We always viewed this level of the decision as just a whistletop on the way to an ultimate decision by the U.S. Supreme Court," said Farris, who represents Concerned Women for America, a group that supports the families.

"There is absolutely no support in legal precedent for such a narrow, limited view of the First Amendment," Farris said.

But lawyer Timothy Dyk, retained by People for the American Way to represent the Hawkins County Board of Education, called the Court of Appeals decision "a wonderful decision. I think it's a great triumph for the public school system."

Dyk said reversal of Hull's decision "will allow them (public schools) to go about their business the way they have for generations."

The parents sued the board in 1983, claiming that the required Holt, Rinehart, Winston books violated their beliefs by teaching evolution, secular humanism, the occult and other anti-religious beliefs.

The parents listed more than 300 objections to the Holt reading series, including passages from "The Diary of Anne Frank," which was said to instruct that all religions are equal in God's eyes, and from "The Wizard of Oz," said to contradict the Bible's lesson that all witches are bad.

The lawsuit also objected to passages in stories by Margaret Mead, an anthropologist, science writer Isaac Asimov, and Hans Christian Andersen, famed writer of fairy tales.

Rebecca Hagelin, spokeswoman for Concerned Women for America, said the parents did not object to the stories as much as they did to what she called recurring themes of feminism, the occult and other beliefs.

Two legislators ask for compact debate at special session

By Staff and Wire Reports

TOPEKA — Two House Democrats are urging their colleagues to allow debate on the state's membership in a regional low-level radioactive waste compact during the special session of the Kansas Legislature, which begins Aug. 31.

Representatives Kathleen Sebelius, 56th district, and Delbert Gross, 111th district, sent letters in mid-August to all 125 House members, asking them to pass a resolution allowing debate on the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact issue.

Gross and Sebelius said they want the issue considered during the special session because it will be too late to consider it during the 1988 Legislature, which convenes in January. Their letter noted that a host state for a regional dump must be chosen before then because of congressional deadlines.

"This is not a partisan issue, nor is it a parochial issue," Gross and Sebelius said in their letter.

The compact has sparked opposition from some officials and residents who think Kansas has a good chance of becoming the host state for the dump site. The compact comprises Arkansas, Kansas, Louisiana, Nebraska and Oklahoma.

During the 1987 Legislative session, attempts to pull the state out of the compact failed in the Senate, and a withdrawal measure did not get out of a House committee.

Gov. Mike Hayden has repeatedly said he thinks staying in the compact is the state's best alternative for handling its low-level radioactive waste. But he has said only the Legislature has the ability to pull the state out of it.

"We agree with his assessment, and we feel that the matter requires our review in the special session," Gross and Sebelius said in their letter.

Hayden called the special session to have lawmakers consider a comprehensive highway program. He and Republican legislative leaders have said they want to limit the special session's agenda to avoid a protracted session.

"I think they have some genuine concerns about the issues raised by the compact," said Joe Knopp, 67th district representative and House Republican leader.

Radon tests detect dangerous levels

By Judy Lundstrom
Special Projects Editor

Water may not be the only contamination problem in Riley County.

The atmosphere could be tainted as well, according to an ongoing survey by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment and the Environmental Protection Agency.

About 21 percent of the 1,000 Kansas homes screened for radon last winter and spring showed levels in excess of the action level of 4 picocuries per liter set by EPA, said Craig Schwartz, KDHE radiation control inspector.

In Riley County, nine of 25 homes tested — 36 percent — exceeded the action level.

Schwartz said the agencies surveyed the private residences to determine whether radon posed a health threat in the state. Nine other states in the country are undergoing similar tests, he said, and an additional seven will begin testing this winter.

Agents find radiation in houses

Radon, an odorless, radioactive gas, results from the breakdown of uranium and is found naturally in soil, rocks and building materials, Schwartz said. Outdoors, the gas is diluted to concentrations that are not high enough to cause concern. But in enclosed areas, he said, the gas can accumulate to dangerously high concentrations.

EPA officials believe exposure to high levels of radon cause between 5,000 and 20,000 lung cancer deaths each year in the United States.

The EPA has established comparative health risks based on individuals spending 75 percent of their time in a dwelling for 70 years, Schwartz said.

Residences with a radon level of less than 4 picocuries per liter could pose a health risk equivalent to smoking about eight cigarettes a day or having more than 200 chest X-rays per year, according to the EPA.

Exposures in this range are considered average or slightly above average for residences, Schwartz said.

Levels of 4 to 20 picocuries per liter are considered above average for residential structures, he said, and could pose a health risk similar to smoking one pack of cigarettes a day.

Radon levels between 20 and 200 picocuries per liter are considered "greatly above the average for residential structures" and could pose a health risk similar to smoking two to four packs of cigarettes a day, Schwartz said.

"Action should be taken within several months to reduce the radon level as much as possible," he said.

One of the levels detected in Riley County was 25.5 picocuries, the second highest reading in the state. The highest was in Johnson County with a level of 27.2 picocuries, Schwartz said.

Other states tested and the percentages of residences in which radon was detected above the action level were Alabama, 6; Connecticut, 19; Kentucky, 17; Montana, 9; Rhode Island, 19; Tennessee, 16; Wisconsin, 27; and Wyoming, 26.

While state officials believe the high radon levels indicate a significant health hazard, others see the tests as just another cancer scare.

"Radon has been around forever," said John P. Lambert, K-State director of public safety. "It's nothing to be alarmed about. People should be aware of it and be cautious, but not get alarmed."

Lambert said radon tests are not conducted in buildings on campus.

"Since we're not in these buildings 24 hours a day, testing here isn't necessary," he said. Furthermore, he said, the budgets don't cover radon testing.

Schwartz said the households tested last spring were randomly selected by a computer and were taken in the lowest livable area of the homes for two days under closed conditions in an attempt to record the maximum indoor radon levels.

The results, he said, are considered a screening measurement and are not necessarily a reliable measure of the average annual radon level to which a family is exposed.

Schwartz said one of the reasons for higher radon levels in homes today is because homeowners are practicing tighter ventilation control, which forces the gas to accumulate inside.

While some radon comes from the materials in a house, the majority comes from the soil and seeps into homes through foundations and cracks, he said.

Reducing the radon levels in a house is a fairly simple process that involves providing more ventilation and sealing cracks, Schwartz said.

KDHE and EPA will complete the study this fall and winter with testing of an additional 1,600 residences, he said.

Saudis censure Iranian terrorism

Iran vows to stage rallies

By The Associated Press

JIDDA, Saudi Arabia — Saudi Arabia called Iran's government a "group of terrorists" Tuesday and said its forces would deal firmly with any Iranian attempts to attack this nation's Moslem holy places or its vast oil fields.

In Tunis, meanwhile, Arab League foreign ministers decided to give Iran until Sept. 20 to accept a United Nations Security Council resolution calling for a cease-fire in its 7-year-old war with Iraq.

"Saudi Arabia has enough defense capabilities to repulse any Iranian aggression," Interior Minister Prince Nayef warned Tuesday.

"In the past the Iranians tried to attack eastern Saudi Arabia and had one of their warplanes shot down. We will not hesitate to deal similarly with any aggression."

Nayef, a brother of King Fahd, announced a get-tough policy to head off any demonstrations by Iranian pilgrims in the Saudi holy city of Mecca, where hundreds died in clashes with police last month.

His comments came hours after a senior Iranian cleric, Mahdi Karoubi, said pilgrims from Iran would continue to stage political rallies in Mecca. Karoubi was quoted by Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Cyprus, as saying such rallies were a political obligation for all Moslems in addition to the religious rituals.

Iran's ambassador to the United Arab Emirates, Mustafa Haeri, dismissed the impact of a possible U.N. arms embargo as trivial and said Iran was testing new missiles and was capable of blocking the Strait of Hormuz.

Haeri said in an interview in Abu

Dhabi that Iran continued to buy weapons on the free market despite a loose Western embargo imposed since the Iran-Iraq war broke out in September 1980.

A government official in Tehran, the capital of Iran, meanwhile denied accounts by reporters and U.S. sources of an encounter Monday between U.S. warships and an Iranian warship, saying the reports were designed to show off military power. IRNA did not identify the official.

Kuwaiti tankers flying the American flag have been navigating the gulf under U.S. naval protection.

There were conflicting reports on movements of Kuwaiti tanker movements. Shipping sources said a new convoy sailed into the gulf Monday, but the owners denied it.

Nayef warned Tuesday that Iran would not hesitate to shoot down any Iranian plane that attacked the kingdom's Eastern Province, site of the world's largest oil fields.

In June 1984, Saudi warplanes shot down an Iranian warplane over the province, shortly after Iran and Iraq began attacking each other's seaboard oil shipments.

Iran's Parliament speaker, Hashemi Rafsanjani, has called on the world's Moslems to overthrow Saudi Arabia's ruling family and seize its oil wealth.

Nayef said Iranian activists last month tried to seize the Grand Mosque of Mecca.

He said Saudi security forces were prepared to "strike firmly and decisively against any attempt by Iranian pilgrims to manipulate the pilgrimage season for political purposes."

But Nayef said the kingdom would not "reciprocate terror with terror."

Nayef said Iranian pilgrims now will be investigated before being admitted to the holy places. Iranian pilgrims are usually the largest single group going to Mecca.

Saudi Arabia has been the key U.S. ally since the Islamic revolution in Iran ousted the pro-American Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi in 1979.

First day figures show enrollment increase of 596

By Collegian Staff

K-State's enrollment tentatively increased for fall 1987.

First day figures were up 596 from last year's first day figures, said Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement.

Enrollment as of Monday was 14,912, as opposed to a year ago when enrollment was 14,316, Krause said. Final enrollment numbers will be computed on the 20th day of classes, Sept. 21, when night classes and off-campus enrollments will be added.

"If our historical pattern of enrollment increase between preliminary headcount and 20th day finals holds, the University should comfortably exceed 18,000 head-count this fall," Krause said. Final enrollment for fall 1986 was 17,599.

The increase of close to 600 students is "the result of a tremendous mass of effort by everyone," Krause said.

He attributes the successful recruiting and retention effort to the admissions representatives, a publications system, colleges which concentrate on academics, increased funding for scholarships by the KSU Foundation, and the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce.

On the 20th day of classes Krause will examine final enrollment figures, compare them to past figures, and set goals for the following year.

Hart refuses to discuss plans

NEW YORK — Gary Hart returned Tuesday from a three-week vacation in Ireland, stopping at an airport in New York just long enough to refuse comment on reports that he may rejoin the presidential race.

"I'm not going to make a statement here today or anywhere else today," Hart said as he was met at Kennedy International Airport by about 100 reporters and photographers.

Shielded by police and airport security guards, Hart told the crowd: "After I get a chance to get together with my family and find out more about the events that have transpired in the last few days, I'll have something to say, but I'm not going to make any other statement here today."

The former Colorado senator, who quit the campaign May 8 after The Miami Herald reported he spent part of a weekend with actress-model Donna Rice, then brushed past the reporters and onlookers and ignored further questions.

On Friday, Hart left a rented cottage in the fishing village of Oughterard to avoid reporters after his former campaign manager, Bill Dixon, said that it was "likely" the former senator would rejoin the presidential race.

Lunch not in violation of Act

EMPORIA — The Lyon County Commission did not violate the state Open Meetings Act when members had lunch June 4 with three people at an Emporia restaurant, the attorney general's office has ruled.

The attorney general's report said an agent investigated the complaint filed by Donald C. Krueger, an Emporia lawyer, but found that the commissioners and other men did not meet at the restaurant to discuss business.

Krueger filed the complaint after hearing two of the men lunching with the commissioners ask about zoning requirements.

He was critical Tuesday of the attorney general's finding but added, "I would hope that this has put the county commission on notice that the good old days of conducting business in private are over and that the public arena is the only place to conduct business."

The report was sent Friday to Lyon County Attorney Rodney Symmonds, who made the findings public.

Kansan to appear with Carson

ELLSWORTH — A 105-year-old Ellsworth resident is to appear as Johnny Carson's guest today, and her friends expect her feistiness to enliven the "Tonight Show."

Mildred Holt, who flew to California Monday, was unimpressed with the glamour of Hollywood.

"I'm not excited about it at all," she said from her hotel room.

"They talked me into it, and here I am waiting for Wednesday to come so I can go back to Kansas. I wouldn't live here for anything — it's too big."

After Mrs. Holt turned 105 July 17, her friend Dorothy Grothusen sent a letter to the "Tonight Show." The producers then had some trouble getting in touch with Holt to ask her to appear on the show.

Friends said she spends most of her time outside the home she shares with her daughter, Catharine Merydith, playing bridge, tending her rose garden or traveling to Alabama to visit another daughter. When she is home, she crochets afghans and helps care for her 103-year-old niece.

"She's just an amazing woman," Grothusen said. "She says, 'I'm to ornery to die.'"

Governor stuck in elevator

NEW YORK — New York's governor, who'd just done an interview with CNN's Larry King, got into an elevator at the Penn Plaza building with his wife and 12 other people. The elevator got stuck on the way down.

"Everything was out but the light," said Cuomo aide John Iaccio. "It was pretty hot in there."

"The governor was the governor; he kept everybody cool and at ease," Iaccio said. "At one point, he started singing 'Getting To Know You.' It broke everybody up."

When rescue workers arrived, they told the trapped group to force open the doors to see if they were near a floor and could climb out, said Iaccio. The group found, however, that they were stuck exactly between the first and second floors.

Told they had to get the doors shut again before the elevator could be moved, Cuomo grabbed the doors and proceeded to get his left hand slammed between them.

"He's in some pain," said Cuomo press secretary Gary Fryer on Tuesday.

Emergency workers eventually lowered the elevator manually, freeing the group after more than half an hour.

Bolshoi Ballet sees Disneyland

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Dancers and musicians of Moscow's Bolshoi Ballet put on their Mickey Mouse caps and took a break from their Los Angeles engagement for a look at entertainment American-style.

The artists, wearing mouse-ear caps, ran to have their pictures taken with park employees dressed as Mickey and Minnie Mouse.

The Mickey Mouse character was a familiar memory from childhood, said Galina Ulanova, 78-year-old ballet master of the troupe. She said through an interpreter that Monday's trip was her fourth to Disneyland.

"A great deal has changed since I was last here 10 years ago," she said. "There are a great number of people and many new buildings, but this is a very interesting adventure."

"Washington was not like this," she added, referring to an earlier stop on the Bolshoi's U.S. tour.

Reporters were limited to talking to the ballet master and Andris Liepa, a principal dancer. But Liepa refused to answer any questions after one reporter asked him about the defection to the West earlier this month by four Romanian circus acrobats.

Former hostage to give talk

DENVER — Charles Glass, the ABC correspondent who escaped from captivity in Lebanon last week, will make his first U.S. speaking appearance Sept. 22 at a meeting of the Economic Club of Colorado.

The journalist, who escaped from his Moslem captors earlier this month, will address members of the business organization at the Westin Hotel here, club executive director Terry Kalil said Monday.

Glass, 37, was abducted in Beirut on June 17. He said he escaped by slipping out of his shackles while his guards were sleeping, unlocking the door and sneaking down several flights of stairs to the street.

Kalil said that at Glass's request, she would not release information on his fee.

"His feeling was that if it was discussed it would be misinterpreted in the Middle East," she said. "He is concerned that if we talk about whether or not he is being paid, people holding hostages in Lebanon might say, 'Let's grab a few more hostages and we'll show how capitalistic these Americans are.'"

Don't be left out of the 1987-1988
K-State Campus Directory.

Be sure to get your 1987-1988 K-State Campus Directory listing updated. Personnel Services provides the faculty/staff list for the directory and if individuals have not updated their records, the directory entry is inaccurate. We would like your assistance in updating the faculty/staff listings.

The following information is needed for individual listings: name, home address, campus address, home phone, campus phone, faculty/staff title, and office/department/division.

Please take a few minutes to check last year's directory. If anything has changed, form PER 39 must be completed and submitted to Personnel Services by Aug. 28. Aug. 28 is also the deadline to submit individual "Personnel Appointment" forms (PER 39) for unclassified and classified individuals and GST forms for graduate student employees.

Anyone wishing to withhold his or her name from the directory must submit a letter to Personnel Services by Aug. 28.

If you have questions, please contact Sheila in Personnel Services, Employee Benefits and Records, 532-6277.

Director forecasts activities

By Jenny Chaulk
Campus Editor

Construction of the Bramlage Coliseum is right on schedule if not a little bit ahead, said Charles E. Thomas, newly-named director of the coliseum.

Thomas, who was the associate director of The Sun Dome at the University of Tampa in southern Florida, began his duties as of Aug. 1. He said the coliseum should be fully operational by July 1988. The original completion date of the facility was October 1988.

Activities to take place in the coliseum will be decided by Thomas, who is in charge of achieving maximum use of the building. He said he will be contacting local, state and regional agencies and organizations in order to promote the building.

Thomas said some of the planned uses for the coliseum include trade shows and a wide variety of family entertainment. Thomas said he also wants to use the facility to attract concerts and rock shows appealing to the students.

"Students are hungry for the larger rock acts that Topeka and Kansas City attract," Thomas said. "I feel that by using the building to attract that type of entertainment, it will also be attracting more and more students to K-State."

The coliseum will be the fourth largest in the Big Eight conference.

Its capacity will be 13,500 for sporting events. About 14,000 seats will be available for entertainment events. The 500 additional seats will be located on the floor of the coliseum.

"Facilitating the use of the building with other events, along with the regular men's and women's basketball season, is what really makes a building good," Thomas said.

Kelly Briggs, Manhattan, bulldozes dirt from the interior of the Fred Bramlage Coliseum. Construction should be completed in July 1988.

Blue Key faces difficulty in getting oath amended

By Deron Johnson
Editor

Although the K-State chapter of Blue Key has asked the national office to remove pledges of God and country from its constitution, the organization's national leader said similar requests in the past have met with overwhelming opposition.

The local chapter voted last spring to suspend references to God and country after a column by Scott Miller appearing in the Jan. 28 Collegian criticized the honorary fraternity's constitution.

Richard F. Reichert, national administrative officer, said the K-State chapter is the only one in the nation currently experiencing controversy over its constitution. Reichert, whose office is based in Emporia, said the K-State chapter contacted him last spring regarding the change.

"My suggestion is for them at the national convention to submit their request," he said, adding the convention is scheduled for 1988.

The K-State chapter isn't the first to request striking religious elements from the constitution, he said.

"Back in the early 1970s, I would say it came up a couple of times," said Reichert, who has been associated with Blue Key for nearly a quarter of a century.

He estimated that at that time the national chapter was "about 95 percent against" removing the references. He wouldn't predict if the request would have more success in 1988.

Reichert stressed that the national office allows local chapters to maintain autonomy. Rarely will the national chapter interfere with the local ones, he said.

"I think the local autonomy is very high," he said. "The national lets the local do what it wants to do on the local level."

The K-State chapter recently elected Steven Johnson, senior in agricultural economics, as its president. He succeeds Kelly Welch, a spring graduate.

Johnson, who served as student body president during the 1986-87 academic year, said he is assessing the situation before determining what needs to be done. He said he wants to meet with Welch another time before the chapter's meeting Sunday.

"If they've got it wrapped up and they can hand us the proposal, then it's pretty much taken care of," he said, adding the group's immediate priority is sponsoring Homecoming Oct. 17.

Court rules warnings adequate

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — A federal appeals court ruled today that warnings of the hazards of smoking on cigarette packs are sufficient to protect tobacco companies from lawsuits stemming from smokers' sickness or death.

The suit against Liggett and Meyers and Liggett Group Inc. was brought by the heirs of Joseph C. Palmer of Newton, who died in 1980 at the age of 49. He smoked up to four packs of L&M cigarettes daily for 23 years, according to the suit.

The Liggett and Meyers appeal stemmed from a federal judge's ruling in April 1986 that health warnings on cigarette packages do not protect tobacco companies from lawsuits.

In a long-awaited ruling, the 1st

U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said that in requiring the warnings, Congress intended to fulfill an educational purpose but also intended to continue the free flow of trade without harm to the national economy.

The court also said that many precedents set by other cases where people were harmed by dangerous products did not necessarily apply because "cigarette smoking, at least initially, is a voluntary activity."

The Palmer suit blamed his death on smoking and claimed the defendants were negligent in failing to provide adequate warnings about the risks of smoking. The companies claimed the federally required warnings about the hazards of smoking shielded them from liability.

County should assist people hurt by landfill

The good news came July 17 for residents living by the Riley County landfill.

That was the day the Kansas Department of Health and Environment ordered the landfill to shut down because of water contamination problems in the area. Residents had been fighting the problem since the first contamination was detected in November 1985.

Then came the bad news.

The landfill will stay in operation until a new form of waste disposal is instituted for the county. And the deadline for the new system is July 1990 — nearly five years after the contamination was discovered.

Riley County commissioners began to address the issue last April, when they approved a water district to supply city water to the affected residents. Now, four months later, they are still taking bids for construction of the system.

In the meantime, residents are hauling their water from Manhattan. To assist them, the county has provided them with 5-gallon water coolers.

How convenient.

While residents wait for their new water system, the county is at work devising a closure plan for the landfill, as ordered by KDHE.

Fine and dandy. But why wasn't a closure plan already devised? According to KDHE regulations, every licensed landfill in the state must have a closure plan on file from the day it opens. The Riley County Landfill was licensed by KDHE in 1976, and has never had such a plan. Yet KDHE has continued to license the site each year.

It's no wonder Moehlman Bottoms residents are frustrated. In addition to watching their land value rapidly deteriorate, they are being plagued with calls from water purification salesmen and companies who want to test their water. Some residents have said they are ready to pack up and leave.

But they can't afford to. The contamination has ruined more than just their water.

July 1990 is 34 months away. The least the responsible parties could do is show some sort of effort to alleviate the situation as quickly as possible.

All deserve applause for higher enrollment

The news is out — enrollment figures for the fall semester at K-State are up. The University deserves a round of applause for its successful recruiting and retention efforts.

Thanks to new programs implemented by a gung-ho, forward-thinking administration, people are once again recognizing the University as one of the best "buys" in the state. The administration has put much effort into improving both recruitment and retention. But, the individual colleges have also worked with the administration in coordinating the recruitment effort. Without everyone working together, the numbers would not have been so astoundingly positive.

Numbers in all quadrants of the University are on the rise, including new student enrollment — up nearly 1,000 — residence hall occupancy, and sorority and fraternity pledging numbers.

Now that the University has achieved success in the numbers game, their attention must focus on improving the quality of education offered to the students they have attracted to campus. This is the surest way of retaining students and attracting more students for the future.

Bring back the purple Pride built through activities

"All right, team, we've got an important game ahead of us. I want to see everyone fired up and ready to go! You've got to be a participant, not a spectator! Now, give it everything you've got, and let's go!"

If you've ever been involved with any kind of organized sport, no doubt you've heard some variation of those words at one time or another. It's called a pep talk. It's designed to motivate the hearer into some desired course of action, chiefly through emotionalism. Most coaches don't phrase it in quite those delicate of terms, but you get the idea. Well, here's a little pep talk of my own, to get you psyched up for the year ahead.

First, let's talk purple. You know, your school colors: purple and white. What, no purple in that dresser drawer? You'd better remedy that right away. Go out and get some appropriate K-State clothing. And I don't care what you've heard, it's not "uncool" to wear shirts from your own school. Purple pride used to be legendary, and it's high time we brought it back. If you're not sure where to shop for this new wardrobe, consult Professor Donnert in nuclear engineering. He's our campus expert on proper K-State dress. Oh, by the way, that obnoxious "Beak 'em Hawks" shirt...well, it's got to go.

Now that you're wearing the proper uniform, you can't sit on the sidelines watching other people play the game. It's time to get on the field. You can even pick your position. I'm talking about involvement. There are countless ways to get involved on campus. In your living group, there are offices, committees and councils you can serve on. In student government, students serve on committees, judicial boards, the student body president's cabinet or Student Senate. In the colleges, there are college councils, honor societies, ambassadors, magazine staffs and professional societies. There are also ethnic societies, church groups and clubs for almost every imaginable interest. Intramural competition is provided for dozens of individual and team sports. Wallyball, anyone?

Maybe it's OK to sit on the sidelines and watch part of the time, when you're watching K-State athletics. Have you bought your football tickets yet? Why not? The football team is never any good, you say? Well, I'm sorry, my fair-weathered friend, but you've missed the point entirely. Disregarding the fact that the football team has a chance to be good this year, you're cheating yourself by not attending the games while you have this chance.

There's a lot more to going to a college football game than being able to say, "the 'Cats won." You're supporting your own college football team. You're having fun with your friends, listening to the band, eating hot dogs and nachos, drinking pop (straight, of course) and hopefully getting to experience that burst of excitement when the 'Cats score a touchdown. And you certainly don't have to be a sports freak or a football expert to enjoy it. You may have other opportunities to watch football games later on, but never again like this. Now, when you're dressing for the game, make sure you pull something from that new purple wardrobe of yours. Nothing looks better than a student section beaming purple.

Of course, since we are attending college, we need to get psyched up for classes. After all, a degree is what we're all after, and our coursework should have top priority. But it is possible to get so absorbed in our coursework that we miss out on the various other learning experiences that college offers us. To paraphrase Mark Twain, "Don't let schoolwork get in the way of your education."

Now I could ramble on for hours about all the different things there are to do on campus. In addition to the activities I've already mentioned, there are concerts, plays, movies, convocation speakers, McCain events...the list goes on. My point is you need to get off your duff and look for what interests you. Look through the phone book, make a few calls or just ask somebody. I'm not suggesting that you should try to get involved in all these activities, or even a large number of them. Certainly don't get so involved that your coursework suffers. But I do suggest you take advantage of the opportunities that college offers you. You have chances here and now that you may never have again. Don't let them slip by.

OK, team, hit the field.

Blue Key problems

Editor,

As a native Kansan who has done a lot of traveling throughout the United States, the issue of Kansas leadership has bothered me for some time. K-State's Blue Key chapter seems as good an example as any. The issue over whether to profess belief in God and country as an organization is the supposed controversy.

The real issue is that of Kansans being able to decide for themselves what they want. In practice, Kansas makes a decision, then sits patiently by, waiting for a nod of approval from either the East or West Coast before proceeding.

Kansas has natural resources, money and some of the smartest people in the country. The problem is our leadership. Our local institutions support organizations like Blue Key.

I know enough Kansans to observe that membership problems are not caused by hangups concerning the belief in God and country. Blue Key members and leaders are simply scared of the opinions of those in other parts of our nation.

The least they could do is change their color name. Members have shown their true color, and it is yellow.

Contra affair

Editor,

After weeks of Iran-Contra hearings we must all feel somewhat like a hungry person, finishing a huge meal, yet unsatisfied. There is, however, a radio program which brings it all into focus.

"Contragate: The Secret Team," is a two-hour program featuring Daniel Sheehan, chief attorney for the Christic Institute. He discovered a secret U.S. "intelligence" team. It has operated with and without presidential approval for the last 27 years. Its present members include Richard Secord, John Singlaub, Oliver North, and Albert Hakim. More important, however, are two figures that thus far eluded the limelight, Thomas Clines and Theodore Shackley. This team assassinated political leaders and innocent civilians, smuggled drugs into the United States and used the profits to supply arms to "anti-communist" regimes.

The team began in 1959, after Castro threw out Batista and his business partners in Resorts International, a mafia business worth millions in gambling and prostitution. Then Vice-president Richard Nixon started an NSC "Project 40" in order to reclaim U.S. influence in Cuba. The mob offered to help. Their tools were assassination and sabotage.

Although unsuccessful, the team changed and grew as it moved on to Laos, Vietnam, Chile, Iran and most recently, Central America. While there, they literally bombed the drug king Von Pao's competition off the map.

Shackley was also a partner with Hakim, Secord, and Edwin Wilson the man who got 54 years for selling weapons to Khadafy. They stopped the investigation with Wilson, however, letting the others escape prosecution. The man responsible? Frank Carlucci.

If you would like to hear the program, contact your public radio station.

Editorial misleads

Editor,

Recently, I read several articles concerning the lack of black faculty members on the K-State campus. I am sure we need to do more to attract qualified black faculty members. However, to label K-State faculty as "basically all white male," as a Collegian editorial did, is stretching the claim too much. I checked with the affirmative action office recently and counted about 150 researchers and professors listed under the minority faculty category. This number may not be too large, but certainly it is not negligible on a campus the size of K-State. Among those listed are some of the most distinguished scholars working at K-State.

I believe sincere efforts to locate qualified female and minority faculty members are constantly being made at all levels of hiring. I was chair of a search committee not too long ago, and I can tell you the process is not easy. You have a fair chance of telling that an applicant with a name such as "Fung Yee-Chak" is a minority member, but if you have an applicant with a name such as "Lynn Smith," you have no way to tell if the person is a male, a female, a black or a white — and you are not supposed to ask directly, either.

Testing for radon simple

Inspector suggests measures

By Judy Lundstrom
Special Projects Editor

When it comes to radon testing, homeowners can take action on their own.

Testing a residence for high radon levels is a simple and inexpensive process, said Craig Schwartz, radiation control inspector for the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

The EPA has authorized approximately 100 companies throughout the country to conduct the tests for homeowners at a cost of $15 to $20, he said.

Schwartz said homeowners should be leery of non-certified companies who offer to conduct the tests.

"Some of these companies are really questionable," he said. "We recommend they use the listed companies."

The tests are conducted by exposing a small canister of activated charcoal to the atmosphere under closed house conditions in the lowest livable area of the home, Schwartz said. After two days, the canister is sent to EPA's radiation laboratory in Montgomery, Ala., for analysis.

Homes that indicate radon levels of less than 4 picocuries per liter are not much of a concern, he said. Exposures in this range can present "some risk" of lung cancer, he said, but reduction of levels this low may be difficult, and often impossible, to achieve.

For radon levels of 4 to 20 picocuries per liter, action to reduce the level should be taken within a few years, he said.

If the levels are between 20 and 200 picocuries per liter, action should be taken within several months to reduce the level. Levels of more than 300 picocuries per liter require immediate action to reduce the level, Schwartz said.

In the event action is necessary, the best way to reduce radon levels in a house is to increase the ventilation, Schwartz said. Another way is to patch cracks in the foundation, where the gas can seep in from the soil.

Additional information on radon and actions which can reduce high radon levels can be obtained from the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, Air Quality and Radiation Control, Topeka, Kansas 66620.

Enrollment figures may peak in 1989 for Kansas colleges

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The enrollment increase of the 1980s in Kansas' public and private colleges is expected to peak during the 1989-90 school year, then begin receding in the next decade, the Legislative Educational Planning Committee was told Tuesday.

The Legislative Research Department, which makes enrollment projections, said actual enrollment in the six regents universities, Washburn University, medical and veterinary medicine schools, Kansas Technical Institute, community colleges and private colleges was 139,856 during the 1986-87 school year.

The researchers' projections, which use census data to estimate how many college-age people there will be in Kansas in a given year, showed the state can expect to have about 143,100 college students in 1989-90.

The total will build to that peak from estimates of 141,160 this year and 141,720 in 1988-89. After the peak year, the projections show the college enrollment declining to 141,800 in 1990-91 and to 139,300 in 1991-92.

Julian Efird, a research department staffer who works with the educational planning committee, said more accurate projections are expected next year, when newer census data is expected to be available.

He said this year's projections for the committee are based on somewhat dated census figures, some of them going back to 1970.

Actual Kansas college enrollment totals for all schools prior to this past year included 137,286 in 1982-83, 138,491 in 1983-84, 137,157 in 1984-85 and 137,548 in 1985-86.

Historically, about 85 percent of the total enrollment are undergraduate students and about 15 percent are graduate students. That ratio is expected to continue under the projections.

Charlie Partlow, director of the hotel and restaurant management program, has seen an increase in work and also in his job title with the addition of hotel management to the program.

Partlow becomes part of plan for hotel, restaurant courses

By Jim Dietz
Collegian Reporter

Though the environment has changed little, the job has changed considerably for Charlie Partlow, the new director of the hotel and restaurant management program.

The program has increased its title and curriculum to include hotel management in order to better prepare for the future.

"According to the United States Commerce Department, the hospitality industry will be the nation's largest by the year 2000," Partlow said.

Partlow added that with more leisure time and more disposable income, traveling and eating out is becoming almost a necessity.

"That's why our program is so important," Partlow said. "People have the right to expect competent professional management in these facilities."

The hotel and restaurant management program is also emphasizing hospitality skills, which seem to be an important concept in the American market place today, he said.

This fall is the first semester students will be working at the University Inn as a part of the hotel operations class. The class requires them to spend 96 hours of work at the hotel, including observation and hands-on experience. The students will work under the managers and departmental supervisors of the University Inn.

Partlow, raised in Blytheville, Ark., received his bachelor's degree at Mississippi State University in foods and nutrition. He did his graduate work at Southern Mississippi University in institutional administration. After getting his master's, he worked as a manager for ARA Services, a contract food service in Atlanta.

In 1984, he began his doctorate work at K-State and finished it this summer just before his position took on another facet.

Partlow plans to strengthen the bonds between the program and the Marriott Corp., which owns a nationwide chain of hotels and resorts, by tying Marriott into other courses in hotel and restaurant management.

The ties with Marriott are also beneficial because of internships.

"They've told us they will place students just about anywhere in their conference centers and hotels in the United States," he said.

Motion for new Bird trial filed after more evidence revealed

By The Associated Press

EMPORIA — An amended motion seeking a new trial for former Emporia minister Thomas Bird on his conviction in the 1983 death of his wife was filed Monday in Lyon County District Court.

The motion filed by Monte Miller, Bird's court-appointed attorney, seeks the new trial on the basis of newly discovered evidence that it says indicates Sandra Bird may have committed suicide.

Judge Gary Rulon will hear the motion on Sept. 1.

Mrs. Bird was found dead in the Cottonwood River near Emporia in July 1983 in what was first ruled to be a traffic fatality.

But in 1985, after Bird had already been convicted of solicitation to commit murder in an unsuccessful plot to kill the husband of his secretary, Bird was convicted of first-degree murder in the death of his wife.

The former secretary, Lorna Anderson Eldridge, pleaded guilty to solicitation in the unsuccessful plots, and earlier this year she was charged with the first-degree murder of her first husband, Martin Anderson, slain in Geary County in November 1983.

That latest charge against Mrs. Eldridge came just before the broadcast of "Murder Ordained," a CBS-TV mini-series portraying a love affair between her and Bird and the slayings of their spouses.

The motion seeking a new trial for Bird says the state failed to disclose information to the defense at the time of his murder trial.

In the amended motion, Miller said the Kansas Bureau of Investigation interviewed potential witnesses in 1984 about the possibility that Mrs. Bird committed suicide. That information was not included in written reports provided to Bird's attorney prior to the trial, the motion said.

Miller also claims that the KBI told the witnesses that the information about suicide was not relevant because the possibility of suicide had been ruled out.

"Introduction of this evidence could reasonably have resulted in the acquittal of ... Thomas Bird," Miller said.

Last week Rulon granted Miller's motion ordering County Attorney Rodney Symmonds to provide the defense with any KBI reports of interviews with witnesses about the possibility that Mrs. Bird committed suicide.

Witnesses expected to testify at next week's hearing include the Rev. Charles Smith and his wife, Caroline, of Richmond, Va., and the Rev. Al Boysen and his wife, Patricia, of Memphis, Tenn. The court certified them last week as material witnesses in the case to ensure their return to Kansas for the hearing.

Bird's lawyer said that Mrs. Boysen and Mrs. Smith had heard Mrs. Bird speak of killing herself.

Mrs. Bird's body was found in the river near her overturned car below the Rocky Ford Bridge southeast of Emporia. Subsequent investigation after Anderson was slain led to Bird being charged with murdering his wife.

He is serving a life term on that conviction, along with 2 1/2 to seven years for criminal solicitation.

Flags signal danger

Physician develops indicator

By The Collegian Staff

Kansas' heat and humidity are weather conditions to be reckoned with, especially for people who exercise outdoors.

So, to indicate heat stress conditions, Dr. Guy Smith, sports medicine specialist at Lafene Student Health Center, and his staff have begun flying flags.

"I see a lot of people out running when they shouldn't be, because it's not safe," Smith said.

A new flagpole located on the north side of Ahearn Field House is the home for four flags. The colors of the flags indicate relative heat stress conditions. Blue indicates low risk, yellow indicates moderate risk, red indicates high risk and black indicates extreme danger.

The flags may be changed three times per day: 11 a.m., 2:30 p.m. and 4:30 p.m.

Smith said Lafene purchased a heat stress meter in 1986. The meter provides a numerical index to heat stress conditions by evaluating readings on wet ball, dry ball and radiant heat thermometers.

Smith said it is important to measure all variables relating to heat, not just the temperature. These variables include humidity, sunlight, radiant heat and the cooling effect of the wind.

Smith said he had wanted to get the heat stress monitor in service in the summer of 1986. Problems erecting the flagpole, however, delayed the first flying until Thursday.

"I think it (the heat stress monitor) is a real good idea," Smith said. "It's a nice, simple service to provide to recreational athletes. And there are a lot of recreational athletes."

You're never too old to quit blowing smoke.

No matter how long or how much you've smoked, it's not too late to stop. Because the sooner you put down your last cigarette, the sooner your body will begin to return to its normal, healthy state.

City commissioners discuss proposed renovation projects of service center, Sunset Zoo

By Candy Leonard
Government Editor

Expansion and remodeling plans for the Sunset Zoo and Riley County Seniors' Service Center were the main topics at the work session of the Manhattan City Commission Tuesday.

Zoological Planning Associates Inc. presented its long range plans for the Sunset Zoo. Mike Rice explained to commissioners the proposed remodeling plan, which makes use of existing facilities to help bring the Zoo up to the standards necessary for accreditation.

According to city officials, the first step in accreditation was the removal of the animal shelter. A new animal shelter will be built as part of the Quality of Life bond issue. The second step is to fence in the Zoo grounds and upgrade some of its facilities.

"We're not increasing the Zoo space-wise," Rice said. "This plan is just a more effective use of the land."

Rice said the master plan prioritizes the modifications and will require $3.2 million in capital investment. Through a comparison study, he said the attendance potential of the "new zoo" would be 120,000 visitors annually.

Rice's plan also suggests for commissioners to consider an admission fee. Based on a fee structure of $1.50 for adults and $0.75 for children, the zoo could generate approximately $200,000. Rice said he wanted to get some feedback before he comes to the commission for final approval.

Marguerite Carlson, director of the Seniors' Service Center, told commissioners that either programs would be cut back or the building would have to be enlarged. She said the Center plans on serving half of the 5,000 older adults in Riley County this year with its programs.

Carlson said she has worked in conjunction with the Council on Aging and they want to consider adding an additional 9,000 square feet to the current structure at 412 Leavenworth.

"We want the Senior Center to be the focal point for aging in Riley County," Carlson said. "Our committee believes we should be planning for an intermediate size center."

Mayor Klingler suggested the group look into alternative sites for their programs, yet continue to offer its core programs, such as instruction on microcomputers.

Carlson said "it would be difficult to be at two different sites." The group would like to request funds from the 1989 budget.

City Manager Mike Conduff mentioned the possibility of a block grant, in which up to $400,000 can be applied for. He suggested that the issue of additional parking could not be resolved until the completion of the downtown re-development.

The parking situation for the new mall was the final agenda item of the commissioner's session. Ed Mulcahy, of JBM and Associates in Kansas City, made recommendations for the Town Center's parking areas and those in the surrounding business district.

Mulcahy's strategy for control of the parking situation include: no parking time limits on the Town Center site, remove the 3-hour limit on the public lots west of 3rd Street, eliminate over-night parking and place a 2-hour limit on Poyntz Avenue.

SO COOL

Story by Susan Staggenborg
Photography by Andy Nelson and Steve Wolgast

The dog days of summer are upon us. It's hot, you're hot. The Good Humor man is nowhere in sight, and you want something cool and light.

Ice cream sounds good, but you crave something lower in calories, sugar, butterfat and additives — not to mention price.

The easiest homemade alternatives to commercial frozen desserts are sherbets, sorbets, granitas and ices.

Sherbets and sorbets are low-calorie cousins of ice cream. Ice cream is rich with cream, milk and sometimes eggs, as well as sweeteners and flavoring.

Sherbets, sorbets, granitas and other ices are water-based desserts made with fruit or fruit juices and sweetener, with gelatin added for smoothness.

Sherbet usually contains less than 2 percent butterfat. Ice cream can have anywhere from 10 percent to 20 percent butterfat.

Sherbets contain 180 calories to 270 calories; sorbets and ices, 96 calories to 250 calories.

Sorbet is the French word for sherbet, which counts as one of its few ingredients milk or egg white (or unflavored gelatin) to help coax it into a smooth, snowy texture.

Ice or granita, the Italian ancestor of sorbet, contains only coarsely mashed or pureed fruit or fruit juice, water and a sweetener. Ices are coarser in texture than a sorbet.

Nouvelle cuisine chefs are said to be responsible for the rebirth of ices and sherbets and the use of the word sorbet.

The two have become increasingly popular as Americans strive for natural flavors and low-fat foods in their diets.

Sorbets or sherbets are as easy to prepare as traditional ice cream. All that is needed is an ice cream maker, electric or hand-cranked, or a metal pan to do the freezing job.

Follow the directions of the ice cream maker, and adjust the amount of salt suggested to get the desired consistency of sorbet.

Sorbets are not limited to fresh fruit. When fresh fruits are out of season, canned varieties work just as well and take on a different taste and feel when blended into a sorbet.

A few hints for the perfect sorbet: Taste before freezing. If the mixture seems too sweet, add a little lemon juice or other tart flavoring. If it's too tart, add more sweetener. (If using sugar to sweeten, be sure it is dissolved before adding.)

The smooth, silky texture of a sorbet depends on slow freezing in an ice cream maker or on several beatings with a mixer while freezing. The less salt used in the ice cream maker, the longer the freezing time and the finer the texture of the sorbet.

The coarse texture of an ice is achieved by fast freezing in an ice cream maker. More salt in the ice cream maker will result in a faster freeze and a grainy, icy texture.

For best flavor and texture, transfer sorbets and ices to the refrigerator for about 30 minutes to soften slightly before serving.

Sorbets and ices do not keep well, and after a period of being frozen they tend to crystallize and lose their textures.

Sorbets may be made without the use of an ice cream maker.

Still-freezing is a technique used for a quick and smoother sorbet.

Slow freezing is a technique used to produce a smoother sorbet. Placing the mixture into a large metal bowl and stirring and re-freezing will create a sorbet of the smoothest texture.

Quick freezing is a method used to produce a coarser texture. The mixture is placed into a square metal pan and frozen. The mixture is then beaten with a mixer until light and foamy and returned to the freezer again.

Sorbets are a new introduction to the low-calorie dessert. They are easy to prepare in your own kitchen and are also available at local supermarkets.

To cool off or to simply satisfy a craving for something light and icy, look no more for the Good Humor man. Look for sorbets.

2 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
Small strawberries or raspberries and tiny mint leaves for garnish.

Mix gelatin and sugar in a medium saucepan. Stir in water. Let stand to soften gelatin. Stir over low heat until gelatin is completely dissolved. Remove from heat and cool to room temperature. Stir in strawberry puree, cranberry juice cocktail and lemon juice.

Pour into the canister of ice cream maker and freeze, following manufacturer's directions, or still-freeze.

Cover canister and freeze until firm. For longer term storage, pack in freezer containers, allowing one-half inch head space for expansion.

Transfer sorbet to the refrigerator to soften slightly before serving.

SPARKLING LEMON-LIME SORBET

1 envelope unflavored gelatin
¼ cup sugar
1 cup water
1 cup ginger ale
½ cup fresh lemon juice, strained
½ cup fresh lime juice, strained Tiny lemon or lime wedges or twists for garnish

Mix gelatin and sugar in a medium saucepan. Stir over low heat until gelatin is completely dissolved. Remove from heat and cool to room temperature. Stir in ginger ale and lemon and lime juices. Pour into a 9-inch square metal pan. Freeze until firm. Spoon into a chilled metal bowl and beat with chilled beaters until light and foamy. Return to the freezing pan, cover, and freeze until firm.

Transfer sorbet to the refrigerator before serving to soften slightly.

YIELD: About 4 cups.

VARIATION: For a minty, citrus flavor, increase water to 2 cups and omit ginger ale. After gelatin is dissolved, add ¼ cup loosely packed mint leaves and simmer over low heat for 5 minutes; strain. Let cool to room temperature, then proceed as above.

Food for thought: Cooking needn't be dull

Welcome to the world of food: A favorite subject of many, especially me.

Did you ever wonder about how often people think of food?

We wake up every morning and look through half-empty, stale boxes of cereal. That alone can be a monumental task early in the morning.

Lunch rolls around and you have thought about food more than once already because your stomach reminds you that the stale Cocoa Pebbles aren't going to cut it. You look longingly at your tuna sandwich for lunch and decide you have to stop meeting like this.

Dinner time is another story altogether. Going out to eat or staying at home will be determined by the contents of the wallet.

Stick with me and this column could provide some hints about cooking that you have never heard of. You'll learn about a new and strange fruit that you thought the grocer looked over when throwing out rotten produce.

You'll find out ways to cook with leftovers and learn a few tips that would put your grandmother to shame. You might even get a laugh out of it all. So, welcome to the strange and funny world of food.

Farmers Market

Let me introduce to you our first funny fruit from the farmers market. It's small, fuzzy and tastes a little like a strawberry. It's of Chinese descent and named after a New Zealand bird. I'm talking about the Kiwi fruit.

Kiwi is considered a berry and has a melon-type texture. They can be eaten by peeling off the fuzzy brown skin and slicing to enjoy the sweet and juicy fruit inside.

Kiwi can be added with other fruits and are used as an edible garnish.

The fruit should be bought when it is ripe and firm (but not rock hard). It is best if you allow the kiwi to ripen in a brown paper bag a few days. Then let the kiwi out of the bag and enjoy.

Practical Pointers

Have an extra chicken lying around? Zip up that chicken by rubbing inside and out with Italian salad dressing and bake uncovered in a 350 degree oven. Turn it once then brown and remove when other side is brown. What a way to give chicken an Italian accent.

Did somebody forget to refill the ice cube tray, or is the ice maker broken? Need those extra "cubes" to cool your drink? Try filling empty foam egg trays with water and freezing for extra ice cubes in a pinch.

Another idea for those of you who like to bake. Dragging out the flour and attempting to "dust" the inside of the pans before baking, try dusting with granulated sugar. Your cakes and breads will no longer need a stick of dynamite to get them out of the pans. The sugar will also give your cakes a light sugary glaze.

Scholarship funds established

A scholarship has been established to assist members of K-State's golf team.

The Milton L. David Memorial Golf Scholarship will be awarded annually to a recipient recommended by the athletic department. Friends and family of David have donated more than $10,000 to permanently endow the fund.

David was president, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Development Planning and Research Associates in Manhattan. He was an avid golfer and a member of K-State's Presidents Club.

The Eugene A. Friedmann Development Fund honors the long-time K-State professor who served as head of the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work for 20 years. The fund was created by friends, alumni and colleagues and will provide support for colloquiums and other departmental purposes.

Friedmann is recognized as a scholar in the area of social gerontology and is widely known for his work on retirement issues.

Nuclear Society gives awards

The American Nuclear Society has awarded scholarships to two K-State students.

Jess Gehin, senior in nuclear engineering, and Robert Reichenberger, junior in nuclear engineering, were each awarded $2,000 by the Society. They are among 10 recipients nationwide to receive the awards.

Criteria for selection was based on written essays, academic credentials and involvement in extracurricular activities.

K-State graduate honored

A doctoral graduate in physics from K-State has been awarded the highest honor the Board of Curators in the University of Missouri system can bestow on a faculty member.

Marvin R. Query was named as a Curators' Professor at the University of Missouri, Kansas City. He was selected because of his national and international reputation for physics research, scholarship and creative activity.

"He (Query) worked on his Ph.D. dissertation with KSU Regents' professor Dudley Williams," said Chander Bhalla, head of the physics department. "Query has given colloquium talks in the department and has encouraged good students to come to Kansas State University."

Freshmen get scholarships

Four K-State freshmen are among 15 Kansas college students receiving full academic scholarships this year through the Congressional Teacher Scholarship Program.

The federally funded $5,000 awards are for students pursuing teaching careers at the preschool, elementary and secondary levels. Recipients are eligible for the annual award for up to four years.

K-State recipients are Thomas B. DeStasio Jr., Cimarron; Christopher S. Kemp, Pretty Prairie; Bradley Piroutek, Smith Center; and Kirk S. Schuler, Nortonville.

Two arraigned in murders

By The Associated Press

WELCH, Okla. — The teen-age son and daughter of a Welch rancher were arraigned Tuesday on three counts of first-degree murder in the slayings of their father, stepmother and infant half sister.

Prosecutors and investigators said the three family members were killed after church Sunday, apparently following a family argument.

Investigators found the bodies of Kenneth Clinton Wingfield, 43, his wife, Louise, 36, and their daughter, Crete, 18 months, in a trash dump near their rural home near the Kansas border in northeastern Oklahoma about 7:30 a.m. Monday, said Craig County Sheriff Jess Walker.

Ty Delbert Wingfield, 19, and his 16-year-old sister, Holly Wingfield, were charged as adults Monday in Craig County District Court in Vinita with three counts of first-degree murder.

Wingfield was being held in the Craig County Jail while his sister was being held in a juvenile facility in Claremore after they were returned from Texas, said Assistant District Attorney David Poplin.

The teen-agers were arraigned Tuesday afternoon before District Judge Jess Clanton, who scheduled an Oct. 5 preliminary hearing.

Ty and Holly Wingfield's mother and Clint Wingfield were divorced about eight years ago, relatives said. Their mother, Judy Wingfield Blewitt, died at her home in Idabel of an apparent drug overdose on Dec. 30, 1983, officials said.

Albert Hunt of Strawberry, Ariz., Louise Wingfield's brother, and Tom Kincannon of Payson, Ariz., the elder Wingfield's cousin, said Ty Wingfield had problems with drugs in the past.

Kincannon said Clint Wingfield called his own father in Arizona on Friday and told him he had found drug paraphernalia in the barn on the 360-acre farm they had purchased about a year ago.

The couple and their young daughter, members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, commonly known as the Mormons, had returned home from church shortly before the killings, officials said.

The older children lived with the family but did not attend church regularly. Ty Wingfield had recently been discharged from the armed services because of a bad back and was to attend Northeastern Oklahoma A&M College in nearby Miami, Harrison County, Texas, Sheriff Bill Oldham said Ty Wingfield was located after the parents of his former girlfriend called authorities and said he had driven to their Hallsville, Texas, residence and told them about the killings.

Oldham said Holly Wingfield apparently drove alone to Marshall, Texas, about 40 miles west of Shreveport, La., in another vehicle. He said she was arrested Monday afternoon.

Branded beef attractive for new diets

By Staff and Wire Reports

Beef programs have joined the competition to catch the consumer's attention by adding brand name beef products to grocery stores' meat departments.

Branded beef is a retail cut produced by a packing house that puts its company name on the package. Similar to brand name programs for poultry and pork, branded beef is an attempt to guarantee consistency and quality to customers who buy the product. Most stores already carry brand name pork and poultry.

The program is not new, said Dell Allen, professor of animal sciences and industry. Rather, similar items were in production from the mid-1920s to the 1950s. The programs surfaced again in 1978 when the Certified Angus Beef Program started using branded beef products as a "breed identity," he said.

Allen said the different target groups of consumers, those who wanted "lite" beef products and those who wanted easy convenience products, prompted the program's return.

The Wichita-based Excel Corp. is one of the most successful packing Branded beef products may be trying to get their beef too lean if they are aiming at the diet-conscious segment of consumers, according to Dell Allen, professor of animal sciences and industry. Palatability can be adversely affected beyond a certain point.

plants to use the branded beef programs, Allen said. The Excel packing plant produces items for the consumer who wants both high quality beef products and convenience, he said.

Sales of the branded products are fair, said Butch Buchenau, meat department manager of the Dillon's store, 632 Tuttle Creek Blvd.

"It's a new process that's been taking time," he said. "It has a different appearance. I'd say 95 percent of the people who have tried it have been satisfied."

Buchenau said the Dillon's store has been selling branded beef products since last March. The boneless cut is shipped from Excel in a vacuum-sealed package and sells for about the same price as regular meat. Guaranteed for seven days in the refrigerator, the meat does not need freezing.

"It's a new process that's been taking time," he said. "It has a different appearance. I'd say 95 percent of the people who have tried it have been satisfied."

—Butch Buchenau

In the Dillon's store located at 2700 Anderson, Bill Hale, meat department employee, said a lot of the branded beef items had to be cut back because of the lack of demand for the products.

"The fillets sell good, but the other items are slow movers," Hale said. Coupon incentives are used to help sell the products.

Contrary to Buchenau, Hale said the price per pound is higher and the coloring is "not as good as cuts made in the store."

Producers of branded beef may try to get their beef too lean if they are aiming at the diet-conscious segment of consumers, Allen said, though the Certified Angus Beef Program tries to maximize the marbling degree.

Marbling refers to the even distribution of fat flecks or streaks in meat, affecting juiciness, flavor and tenderness, said Michael Dikeman, professor of animal sciences and industry.

Beyond the threshold for marbling, palatability is adversely affected, said Dikeman.

"There are some branded beef programs that are pushing that threshold," he said. "There are some that are even below it."

One of the reasons marbling is important is as a safeguard against consumers who overcook or improperly cook beef, Dikeman said.

Hayden strikes back at highway foes

By The Associated Press

ARKANSAS CITY — Gov. Mike Hayden struck back at oil marketers and truckers who oppose his comprehensive highway plan Tuesday as his 22-city tour of the state neared its end.

Hayden got a warm welcome in Arkansas City, on the next-to-last leg of his tour, but he was met by a small group of chanting protesters in Winfield, his first stop of the day. He traveled to Winfield, then to Arkansas City, Sedan and Iola.

Acknowledging some truckers and oil marketers who don't like motor fuels tax increases he has proposed to pay for a highway program are "speaking from the pocketbook," Hayden said his approach still is the fairest way to finance new road construction.

Hayden justified proposed increases in truck registration fees in his plan by saying, "Wear and tear on our roads is caused primarily by the weight of the vehicle."

In Arkansas City, Hayden spoke to a friendly crowd of about 150 people, mostly businessmen. The crowd was about the same size in Winfield, but it included about a dozen women and children who held banners protesting his plan and chanted, "Budget your money; we budget ours," and "We need our future."

Hayden will make four more stops

Governor nears end of statewide visits

this week to finish the tour. He goes Thursday to Colby and Junction City and Friday to Concordia and Salina.

Hayden was accompanied Tuesday by Secretary of Transportation Horace Edwards and the chairman of the two legislative budget committees, Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Lenexa, and Rep. Bill Buntin, R-Topeka. U.S. Rep. Bob Whittaker, who represents 25 counties in southeast and southcentral Kansas, also showed up.

Hayden has called a special session of the Legislature for Monday to have lawmakers consider his plan.

Under the proposal, the state Department of Transportation would spend $1.71 billion on new construction and $5.58 billion overall on all of its operations over nine years.

The state's gasoline and diesel taxes would increase by five cents a gallon and its vehicle registration fees by between 50 percent and 100 percent. The state also would issue almost $1.3 billion in bonds, and the motor fuels taxes and vehicle registration fees would be adjusted annually for inflation.

In Winfield, Sandra Peters, of Oxford, told Hayden she thinks the program will create a heavy burden for taxpayers.

"To me, it's economic suicide," Peters said. "Why build new highways that will have to be repaired and repaired and repaired?"

However, Hayden and Edwards said the state needs the plan if it is to keep up with its maintenance needs. Edwards said the state Department of Transportation will need about $400 million over the next nine years just to finance its current programs.

Hayden also said he could not sell his program to the full Legislature if it did not have unified support in southeast Kansas, which would receive several major road improvement projects. Whittaker said southeast Kansas lawmakers who didn't support the plan were "traitors."

Hayden said, "How can I sell this to a guy from Brewster or a guy from Phillipsburg if a legislator from southeast Kansas won't even vote for it?"

Hayden was about an hour late to the Winfield meeting because his plane was diverted to Wichita because of a landing gear problem. It landed without incident in Wichita, and he was driven to Winfield.

Wichita's mayor takes new post

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Mayor Bob Knight has been hired as development director of the Wesley Foundation, one of the nation's 10 largest health care foundations.

Knight, 47, will direct the organization's fund raising, coordinate foundation volunteers and direct other projects, foundation president Duane Dyer said Monday. He is scheduled to start his new job Sept. 1.

Knight said he took the job because he thought it would allow him the flexibility to accomplish his administrative and ceremonial mayoral tasks along with working full time for the foundation.

In May, Knight and First Securities Co. of Kansas said they had agreed to allow him to take an indefinite, unpaid leave of absence from his investment banker's job.

First Securities President Ray Reed said demands of both jobs made it difficult for Knight to continue in both his banking and mayoral positions and that the situation wasn't fair to the city or to First Securities.

Knight is paid $12,500 a year as mayor, a part-time position that several former mayors say has expanded in scope to require 45 to 60 hours each week.

ELIGIBILITY FOR CARE AT LAFENE STUDENT HEALTH CENTER

1. Health fees are established upon the recommendation of the Student Senate with approval by the Board of Regents.
2. All students who are enrolled and attending classes during a regular semester or summer session who have paid health fees are eligible for care.
3. Those enrolled in Special Courses, for varying periods of time, who have made previous arrangements for health care coverage at Lafene are eligible for care. (Lists of these students must be furnished prior to being seen at Lafene.)
4. Only students, who have paid the health fee, may elect to have their spouse also covered at Lafene; however, they must pay the spouse fee within 10 days of the time their own health fees are paid. (Children cannot be seen.)
5. Emergency care, prior to referral, will be given anyone who comes in.
6. Students enrolled in 6 hours or less, electing not to pay the health fee during the Fall or Spring semesters, who wish to be seen, will be charged $20 for each office visit. This charge continues until the full health fee has been exceeded, then that student will be afforded the same privileges as the regular fee paying student for the remainder of that semester.
7. Students who were enrolled in the Spring and pre-enrolled for the Fall semester but not attending summer school may pay $15 and be eligible for care during the summer. This fee may be paid within 30 days prior to summer registration and ends the day classes begin. A late fee of $20 will be accepted for the remainder of the summer.
8. Health fees are good until 12 o'clock the night the next semester begins.

NOTE: In addition to the above mentioned fees, there are minimal charges for certain supplies and services and the charges are subject to change without prior notice.

Pilots association asks Dole to step down

Request called ludicrous

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The nation's largest pilots association called Tuesday for the resignation of Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole in the wake of increasingly stringent federal air safety standards.

"Hers has been a failed administration from start to finish," said

John Baker, president of the 260,000-member Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association. "We believe she was not qualified when appointed and she surely hasn't grown in the job."

A letter-writing campaign against Dole is planned and the group was to place an advertisement in USA Today this week calling for her to step down, said Baker, a former deputy administrator of the FAA.

"We're going to use what political muscle we can muster and turn up the heat on Washington and the White House," he said.

Department of Transportation spokesman Bob Marx called the allegations "ludicrous ... without any basis in fact, particularly when you consider the fact that Secretary Dole has made safety her top priority from the day she walked into the job."

The Federal Aviation Administration, an arm of the department, heightened restrictions on small planes flying near Los Angeles International Airport after an Aug. 11 near-collision between an American Airlines jet and a private plane.

The pilots' group is seeking an injunction against the FAA's decision to expand the Terminal Control Area around the airport, and the case is scheduled to come before an appellate court in October, Baker said.

The department plans to expand or impose TCAs in major airports across the nation as part of a program to improve safety.

Newly appointed FAA Administrator T. Allan McArdor implemented the Los Angeles change. The association contends that the change will reduce air safety through increased congestion and a heavier workload for air traffic controllers.

Baker also attacked McArdor as "someone with no civil aviation background who has been in town three weeks and is announcing solutions to all our problems."

The FAA had no comment, said agency spokesman Bob Buckhorn in Washington.

'Cat tailback 'hanging in there'

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Tony Jordan, K-State's record-setting tailback, in his own words is "just hanging in there."

That's not "just hanging in there" as in barely making the team. It's "hanging in there" as in waiting for some good luck and breaks to come his way. And as the Wildcat football coaching staff sees it, waiting for the respect and recognition he so largely deserves.

One example of how Jordan's luck has been running came during last year's game against Iowa State at Ames. The 6-foot-3, 220-pound senior from Rochester, N.Y., set a K-State record with 218 yards on 25 carries. Jordan's efforts eclipsed the old mark of 200 yards set in 1979 by L.J. Brown against Air Force.

But Jordan's performance — which came in a 48-19 losing effort to the Cyclones — was overlooked by the Big Eight Conference. Offensive player-of-the-week honors instead went to Oklahoma quarterback Jamelle Hollieway for his efforts in a win against Colorado.

The latest example of Jordan's luck — or lack thereof — came on his recent journey from his hometown to Manhattan for the start of football practices. A 1,300-mile trip that normally takes 24-25 hours took Jordan 3½ days. The trip included three car breakdowns and cost Jordan about $250 in repair bills.

Jordan had just gotten his car, a 1977 Cadillac given to him by his uncle, out of the repair shop where the engine and transmission had been replaced.

"I got about four hours away from home and the back end went out on me. My uncle works on cars...he drove down and fixed what was wrong, so there was no problem there 'cause it was kind of close to home," Jordan said.

"Then I got as far as Painesville (Ohio), which is right before Cleveland, and it broke down again," he added. "At first, the guy at the gas station couldn't really figure out what was wrong with it. Then later on in the day they found out it was the fuel pump."

Jordan had to get the fuel pump, which added to his problems because

Staff/Andy Nelson

K-State running back Tony Jordan's Cadillac broke down three times on the way to Manhattan and has been the source of much pre-season he had to drive the car to get it. None of the dealerships in the area had the part for his auto, so Jordan ended up going to a junkyard.

"They had the part, and I took it back to the place where they detected the problem, and they put it on for me and it didn't work. It was a faulty part. So we called another place, they had the part and they put it on."

Jordan was once again on his way and made it as far as Lawrence, when lightning — in the form of car trouble — struck again. This time the muffler fell off. To add to the situation, it was raining hard.

But just as running backs often improvise when carrying the ball, Jordan managed to fix the faulty muffler.

"I took some hangers from my clothes, wired it up and made it to Manhattan, finally," Jordan said.

Luckily, Jordan didn't run into any fly-by-night gas station attendants during his trek to Manhattan. As a matter of fact, Jordan said the man in Ohio who tried all day to get Jordan's car operating only charged him $10 for his time and effort.

Jordan has been the subject of much pre-season hoopla concerning the Wildcat football team, but the fifth-year senior is not bothered by the media attention.

"I don't mind. I'm not worrying discussion. Jordan said the hoopla doesn't concern him because he believes in hard work and is unconcerned about personal publicity.

about all (the recognition)," Jordan said. "I'm not one who wants to be in the paper or be the front-runner and all that. It's cool. What I get I appreciate; what I don't, it's no big deal."

One person who has recognized Jordan's value is Coach Stan Parrish. After Jordan ranked fifth in the Big Eight in rushing and led the 'Cats with 738 yards on 202 carries last season, Parrish grounded "Air Parrish" this year in favor of the running game.

"That made me feel good. That's something you've got to be proud of, for someone to say, 'Hey, this guy is good enough. We can put the ball in his hands and let him run with it.' It gave me a sense of pride," Jordan said.

Jordan will be counted on tremendously as the Wildcats plan to favor the ground attack in 1987. But until the fourth game of last year when Jordan gained 115 yards against Texas Christian, he was just another name and number.

After TCU, Jordan's patient attitude was finally rewarded by being allowed to start in the last seven games.

"Coaches have a hard job deciding what to do and who to play. I'm not complaining or anything," Jordan said.

"I just hung in there."

Big Eight team wins over China

By The Collegian Staff

Plagued no longer by poor shooting and numerous turnovers, the Big Eight Conference select basketball team has a shot at winning the gold.

Led by the overall play of K-State forward Charles Bledsoe, the Big Eight team defeated the Liaoning Province team from China, 101-81, Tuesday morning in the Beijing (China) International Tournament.

Bledsoe scored a team-high 25 points on 12 of 13 shooting from the field plus one free throw, while adding eight rebounds to lead the select squad to its third victory in four games in the tourney.

Joining Bledsoe in double-figure scoring was Iowa State's Gary Thompkins with 18 points and Colorado's Scott Wilke with 15 points. The team shot 62 percent from the field.

Bledsoe, in the Big Eight's last game against Malaysia scored only six points, but went three-for-three from the field.

With its 3-1 tournament record and by way of the Czechoslovakian team defeating Poland, the Big Eight team claimed top honors in its pool of teams.

The select team will now play the China national team at 3:30 a.m. Thursday (CDT).

If the select squad wins that contest, it will advance to play the Soviet Union for the gold medal in the tournament.

Rounding out the scoring for the team were Oklahoma State's Royce Jeffries with nine points, Missouri's Mike Sandbothe also with nine, Kansas' Mark Randall with eight, K-State's Steve Henson with six, Kansas' Archie Marshall with six and Colorado's Keith Lee with five.

Nebraska's 6-foot-7 redshirt freshman Beau Reed did not score.

Parrish changes for team's sake

"We'll be throwing the ball getting off the bus." — Stan Parrish, 1986.

"Although it hurts me to do it, Air Parrish is somewhat grounded." — Stan Parrish, 1987.

After a frustration-filled 2-9 season where K-State was outscored by its opponents by over a 3-1 ratio, Parrish has decided a change of strategy is in line. Air Parrish is temporarily out of orbit.

This year's K-State team will be one built around the running game, particularly the talents of tailback Tony Jordan. Parrish has made it clear he believes Jordan is the main strength of the team and won't hesitate to hand the ball to the 6-foot-3, 220-pound tailback 20-25 times per game.

"He's bigger, stronger, faster and more competitive than last year," Parrish said of Jordan, who gained 738 yards on 202 carries last year. "A lot of people, particularly the pros, are interested in watching him."

Taking a look at the talent on the K-State roster, the switch in emphasis appears to be a good one. Parrish has taken a hard look at the talent on his football team, swallowed his pride a bit and made the changes he believes are necessary to give the Wildcats a chance in the powerful Big Eight Conference.

"Although it's not what we would like to do, that's what being a coach is," Parrish said. "You can go down the drain trying something that's not going to work."

The supposed wide-open passing attack certainly didn't work for K-State last year. The Wildcats exceeded 200 yards in passing offense only once last year — in the 41-7 loss at Texas Tech.

A strong proponent of the passing game, it wasn't easy for Parrish to switch. But Parrish did change and deserves credit for doing it.

Mid-week Commentary

TOM PERRIN
Sports Columnist

With the offense sputtering, the K-State defense paid the price in the Missouri game, spending too much time on the field and losing stamina late in the game.

After that game, Parrish said he started making the gradual shift to the running game. Throughout the final four games of 1986, the change was underway. Jordan was getting increasingly more carries, including 35 for 218 yards (a school record) in a 48-19 loss at Iowa State.

Now, after the completion of spring drills and through nearly three weeks of pre-season practice, the new plan is well-entrenched. K-State has been transformed into a run-oriented football team.

But don't get the idea that the passing game has been assigned a permanent place in the scrap heap. Parrish still believes in the pass and projects K-State will throw around 20 times per game this year.

To take advantage of K-State's quickness on the offensive line and mask the lack of size and inexperience, Parrish intends to use more play-action passes rather than dropping back.

All things considered, it looks like Parrish and the coaching staff have made plenty of positive changes that will help bring K-State back to respectability. Just how close to respectability the Wildcats can be remains to be seen.

Pre-season 'Husker controversy

Thomas equipped with 'short fuse'

By The Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Broderick Thomas knows he shouldn't have resisted police officers who took him in for failure to pay a fine, University of Nebraska football Coach Tom Osborne said Tuesday.

"He's an emotional guy," Osborne said of the outspoken defensive end.

"Broderick's not a bad person but he's got a short fuse," Osborne said. "He's got a lot of pride."

"He obviously should have gone along (with police)," Osborne said. "I've told him that, and he knows that."

"Broderick's not a bad person, but he's got a short fuse."

—Tom Osborne

Thomas was booked into Lancaster County Jail on two counts of resisting arrest Monday evening after a struggle with four officers at his apartment and five officers at the jail, police said.

Osborne said he would have to get more details as the case develops before deciding whether any disciplinary action against Thomas is in order. Meanwhile, Thomas will practice with the team, Osborne said.

Osborne said he wouldn't second-guess police handling of the situation. He said there is a perception that an athlete "can get away with murder," and he is sometimes concerned about "reverse discrimination" that may hold athletes to a more severe standard than other young people.

Two police officers went to Thomas' apartment at Monday around 9 p.m. to arrest him on a county bench warrant for failure to comply with a court order to pay a fine for violating a traffic signal.

Thomas told the officers he had just paid several fines and had payment receipts in his car, said Lt. Lyle Roberts. The officers checked the receipts but they did not pertain to the warrant the officers were serving, Roberts said. Thomas still refused to go with the officers and two additional officers were called to the scene, Roberts said.

Osborne said Thomas told him he offered to drive his own car downtown and pay the fine, but he refused to accompany the officers.

After a struggle with the four officers, Thomas was handcuffed, put in leg restraints and taken to jail, Roberts said.

Osborne said Thomas should have complied without resistance.

At the jail, Thomas was put in a holding room, where all suspects are placed before being booked into jail, and the handcuffs and leg restraints were taken off. After about an hour, authorities let him out to make a phone call, Roberts said.

Thomas tried to make a call but apparently could not get through. He then sat in a chair, became upset and started kicking the chairs, Roberts said. Three correctional officers and two police officers struggled with him and put him back in the holding cell, Roberts said.

Osborne said Thomas had been pulled from practice recently and sent to pay some past due fines.

Attorney's passes not Big 8 violation

By The Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — There were no violations of NCAA or Big Eight Conference rules when attorney-agent Art Wilkinson was on the sidelines at Nebraska football games, Coach Tom Osborne told reporters Tuesday.

Responding to recent news accounts centering on Wilkinson's activities, Osborne said he never knew that Wilkinson was on the sidelines, doesn't approve of his having been there and has since told him so.

"I think Art assumed a few things. He got a little bit pushy," Osborne said.

Osborne said he had checked NCAA and Big Eight rules and was confident there had been no violations.

"Having someone like Art on the sideline is not a violation of NCAA rules. It's not a violation of Big Eight rules," Osborne said.

He said there wouldn't have been a violation if Wilkinson, as alleged, had talked with NU running back Doug DuBose on the sidelines. A violation attaches when a player signs with an agent to represent him. Osborne said he urges agents not to contact players until after the regular season.

Osborne said he talked Tuesday to Wilkinson, a Philadelphia attorney and sports agent, and told him he didn't want him on the sidelines at future Nebraska games. He said Wilkinson told him he had been on the sidelines for one Cornhusker game in 1985 and for three in 1986, using two sideline passes and two press passes.

Osborne said Wilkinson told him a photographer gave him a press pass and an assistant coach gave him a sideline pass. Osborne said Wilkinson told him he didn't recall who gave him the other passes.

Mike Earle, assistant director of NCAA publicity, said allocation of sideline passes and control of people on sidelines are decision for the host school.

"I think Art assumed a few things. He got a little bit pushy."

—Tom Osborne

Wilkinson had struck him as an honest agent and a good person, Osborne said, but Wilkinson was never given any special status or recommendations with players.

"I've never told a player, 'You ought to sign with Art Wilkinson,'" Osborne said.

Of 40 Nebraska players drafted in the last five years, Osborne said, Wilkinson represents ex-Cornhuskers Mike Rozier, Tom Rathman and Brian Davis, and also has worked with Shane Swanson and Tony Holloway.

Wilkinson said the initial story on his activities resulted from the jealousy of other agents over his success in recruiting players.

He said Wilkinson had never been his personal agent in any context, although Wilkinson was present when Osborne met with representatives of the Houston Oilers in late 1985 to discuss a possible $600,000 offer to coach the pro team. Wilkinson also was a consultant to NU during an investigation last year by the NCAA.

300 Titanic artifacts to go on display

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The more than 300 objects recovered this summer from the wreck of the Titanic will be neither sold nor held privately, but displayed around the world, organizers of an international expedition said Tuesday.

"We have a lot of respect for the people who died" on the luxury liner, said Robert Chappaz of France, an expedition organizer. "Titanic was a kind of link between Europe and the United States, and it's part of our common history. It belongs to the people of the world."

Artifacts also will be shown on a television special this fall, expedition officials said at a news conference.

Under the terms of the expedition's covenant, objects recovered "may never be sold," said Robert Slavitt, the expedition's lawyer. "No way, no time, no place, no how."

The expedition's investors will receive proceeds from the television program and sales of tickets to view the collection. Ticket prices would be such that "a family of six will be able to afford it," said George Tulloch, another organizer.

Following a world tour, the Titanic collection will be placed in a museum or other institution for long-term display, they said.

Despite criticism that the expedition was desecrating the resting place of the 1,513 people who died when the Titanic sank in 1912, a statement released by the expedition said the exhibit would be "a lasting, respectful memorial."

Earlier this month the Senate passed a resolution barring the sale or display-for-profit of Titanic artifacts. Although Slavitt questioned the vote's significance, Tulloch said the collection would be displayed in the United States on a non-profit basis, if necessary.

The Titanic was first located in 1985 by a U.S.-French expedition led by Robert Ballard, a senior scientist at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution in Massachusetts. He later used a small submarine, Alvin II, and a small camera-carrying robot sub, Jason Jr., to explore the wreck, and his film became a National Geographic television special on cable station WTBS.

The latest expedition also will be the subject of a television program, a two-hour live special to be broadcast

Oct. 28. The program will be narrated by actor Telly Savalas and feature the opening of a small purser's safe.

Objects recovered thus far from the debris scattered around the wreck include 160 dishes, four bottles, seven pieces of furniture, a propeller, a chandelier, a bronze cherub that once held a light on one of the ship's grand staircases and a leather satchel containing jewels, bank notes and coins.

Credit card use influences credit rating

By Janet Swanson

Charge it.

Being able to say those two simple words is a convenience for some and a pitfall for others. And for students, credit cards often are perceived as the gateway to economic freedom.

But students should be fully aware of what they're getting into, a campus official advises.

"About one-third to one-half of the people who have cards use them for convenience, and that's great if you pay the balance in full at the end of the month," said Sue Jenkins, assistant director of the Center for Economic Education.

The one-half to two-thirds who fail to make their monthly payments lose all the benefits the cards offer, she said.

"If you just use it as a convenience, it's like a free loan for 30 days. The monthly statements can also provide a system of record keeping, and the cards can establish a credit rating," said Jenkins.

Credit ratings are important to create, but she said students should be sure to create a favorable one.

"Credit ratings are not only based on payment history, but (on) income as well," said Jenkins. "They are a good idea, but could be dangerous and detrimental to the student's credit ranking."

While two out of three families have a non-mortgage debt averaging $5,000, one-half of all credit card accounts are more than 30 days overdue.

Annual percentage rate, annual fee and grace period are three criteria to consider when choosing from the 15,000 credit cards offered, she said.

The annual percentage rate is the interest rate charged on purchases made using the card. Annual fees and grace periods vary, but she said the average fee is $25 to $35 and grace periods last 25 to 30 days from the purchase date.

Jenkins' office has a variety of resource materials and sources to help charge card owners.

"I had a call from a lady who had gotten a late notice for a house payment that she thought had been paid," she said. "She felt that the late charge was excessive, and we were able to put her in touch with someone who could help."

A WEEK AT KANSAS STATE

At 12:01 a.m. on a Sunday morning in October 1986, a camera shutter was clicked. What happened during the next 192 hours was called AWAKS (A Week at Kansas State).

Former Kansas State University photographers were given the opportunity to return to campus to make pictures of college life in the '80s as it existed for one week during October.

Kansas State has numerous alumni photographers in positions of prominence throughout the country. Some 30 alumni and nearly 15 current student photographers made up the AWAKS shooting team. The result of exposing 1,900 rolls of black-and-white and color film with more than 68,000 exposures is a 10-by-14-inch coffee-table book to be published in September 1987. You can relive the experience of attending college in the 1980s at the nation's first land-grant institution through the pages of this special edition.

New-home market rising

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — What could make home builders happier than the recent jump in the construction of single-family homes? Buyers with bucks who want more than just your basic four walls and a roof.

The number of single-family homes built in July increased an impressive 5.7 percent over the previous month, according to Commerce Department figures released last week.

What the figures failed to show is that these are not the ticky-tack starter dwellings of a previous generation.

Increasingly, consumers in the new-home market are affluent and, often bolstered by two incomes, are looking for the Jacuzzi in the bathroom and the trash compactor in the kitchen.

The share of new homes being bought by "trade-up buyers" — people who already own homes but who are looking to upgrade their living quarters — is larger than ever before.

The National Association of Home Builders says two-thirds of the estimated 1.16 million single-family homes built this year will be designed to serve this trade-up market.

Underscoring the trend, the average price of a new home has increased dramatically in the last few months, said Michael Carliner, an economist with the Washington, D.C.-based association. "That's not because the price of housing is up, but because the houses that are selling are the high-end houses."

For example, the median price of a new home sold in June was $110,000, up substantially from the $91,200 median price of a new home a year earlier. "Nearly all the increase is because people are buying bigger, fancier houses," Carliner explained.

Builders have had to respond by adding space and amenities. "We're putting in all the bells and whistles," said Paul Mashburn, president of Viking Builders Inc. of Winter Park, Fla., near Orlando.

Outside the house, landscaping has become more elaborate. "It's no longer give 'em 12 shrubs and a tree," Mashburn said.

What this all means for builders is larger dollar volume and more detail.

Roger Glunt, president of Glunt Building Co., Inc., in the Pittsburgh suburb of Turtle Creek, Pa., said he is adding stone fireplaces, custom cabinetry and plaster moldings to his homes.

Smaller builders like Glunt are likely to be in a better position to adapt quickly to the changing needs and desires of home buyers. Carliner said the smaller custom builders are in line for a larger share of activity than the big companies that produce low-end homes.

The recent rise in interest rates from a nine-year low of 9.47 percent in March is unlikely to deter most new home buyers. "Most new home buyers are not just on the margin of being able to pay for a house," Carliner said.

Small community seeks own location

By The Associated Press

LEONARD, Okla. — Exactly where in the world is Leonard?

Residents of this tiny community south of Tulsa will have a precise answer when the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration finishes a three-month project to chart the movement of the North American continental plate.

The Oklahoma Geophysical Observatory in Leonard is one of six places across the nation selected for the project.

NOAA scientists are using an 18-foot-diameter dish antenna and several radio receivers to track 18 distant quasars, or quasi-stellar objects, in space, said Bob Perkins, chief engineer of the project.

By comparing the arrival time of radio signals from the quasars with readings at the other five observation places, the agency will be able to precisely measure distances between the six points and determine if the North American plate is warping or is rigid.

Highway plan examined

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Transportation Secretary Horace Edwards has cautioned critics of Gov. Mike Hayden's $1.7 billion highway program not to see "hobgoblins" such as graft, corruption and undue influence in the proposal.

"It is regrettable if we get into a dialogue that is so unsavory," Edwards said Monday night after hearing more than 30 of the 100 people attending a forum in the Sedgwick County Courthouse speak about the program.

Hearing the parade of witnesses were 14 of the area's 18 state representatives and five of its six senators.

Rep. JoAnn Pottorff, R-Wichita, chairman of the county's legislative delegation, said she could see no way that the total delegation would support the governor's program.

"In the end, however, I see us working together and supporting a highway package," said Pottorff, who will try to mold a unified approach for the delegation to address a plan. That probably won't happen, she said, until legislators go to Topeka for the special session beginning Monday.

Wichita forum draws 'parade' of people to hear legislators

After the forum, Rep. Henry Helgeson, D-Wichita, said he thought it was time for legislators of both parties "to publicly support the governor's proposal or a comprehensive road program similar in scope and magnitude."

"A good road program won't ensure economic development, but a poor road system surely will stymie any economic recovery for our state," Helgeson said.

Speakers against the governor's program often cited the cost, the fear that high tax and fee increases would drive business out of state and the fear that little new money would be available for other essential state programs.

Some witnesses pointed to the $30 million bond attorney fees built into the highway package as one of the "hobgoblins" that Edwards later referred to.

Other speakers raised the specter of political friends making excessive money on highway contracts raised or the possibility of Kansas money going to out-of-state contractors.

To finance his program, the governor has proposed a 5-cent increase in motor fuels taxes and 25 percent to 100 percent increases in registration fees, adjusted annually to reflect inflation.

"I don't like pledging so much for one program without knowing what we can afford for other programs," said Margaret Miller, who represents the elderly on a community organization.

"Modify the plan to an affordable program," said Pat Lehman, secretary-treasurer of District 70 of the Machinists' union.

Backers of the comprehensive plan dwelled on the economic benefits, driver convenience and safety.

Among those who spoke in favor were Sedgwick County Commissioner Mark Schroeder; Wichita Mayor Bob Knight; Terry Scanlon, former director of the Kansas Department of Economic Development; and retired truck driver Harry Dyke.

Passage of the proposed program, said Schroeder, would be a signal that "Kansas is willing to bid for business and jobs."

Knight said an improved road system would give more people better access to Wichita's medical facilities.

Frank Woodman Jr., owner of a small construction firm, said the program would cost him more money in expenses but urged support of it and an end "to bickering over who gets the benefits."

Several members of the Machinists' union, including Gregory Ohmes who is president of its retirees club, said that while it supports some improvements, it objects to the high cost of the governor's plan.

Leader proposes joint U.N. meeting to discuss funds

By The Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev today proposed that leaders of the 15 nations on the U.N. Security Council meet to discuss how money saved from disarmament could be spent on economic development.

The Kremlin chief made the suggestion in a message read by Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Vladimir F. Petrovsky to the 140-nation International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development.

"It would be useful to discuss in principle the problems of disarmament and development at a special meeting of top leaders of member states of the U.N. Security Council," Gorbachev said in the message.

The Soviet leader also proposed that the United Nations create an international fund into which member states would place money saved through disarmament.

The United States has expressed opposition to a linkage between the issues of disarmament and development and refused to send any representatives to the current conference, which began Monday and runs through Sept. 11.

Gorbachev referred to the U.S. action, saying: "Obstacles erected by the opponents of disarmament on the road towards the conference have confirmed once again the interdependence of disarmament and development and the urgency of the task."

He also repeated the Soviet government's accusation that the United States and West Germany are blocking progress on arms control by insisting on retaining 72 Pershing 1-A rockets stationed in West Germany and armed with American warheads.

Caller fakes bomb threat

By The Associated Press

ARCADIA, Fla. — A bomb threat forced temporary evacuation of an elementary school Tuesday when three brothers exposed to the AIDS virus arrived for their second day of class under court orders.

Later, a caller to the school administrative offices simply said "boom" and hung up, said DeSoto County Sheriff Joe Varnadore. After the first call, the school was searched, nothing was found and routines were resumed, said Larry Browning, school superintendent.

"We'll get to the bottom of this, particularly if they call again and I'll press charges," Browning said, calling the incidents "hurtful to the school district, the children and the taxpayers."

He said tracers were being put on school telephone lines.

Elsewhere, a school board 50 miles away has voted to bar another child who tested positive for the AIDS virus, and parents in a Tennessee community are threatening a boycott of school if a young AIDS carrier is admitted.

Arcadia's Memorial Elementary School has been the subject of protest rallies and parents' calls for a student boycott since a federal judge ruled that the Ray brothers — Ricky, 10, Robert, 9, and Randy 8 — have the right to attend classes with other children.

Many parents fear their children could be exposed to acquired immune deficiency syndrome by the brothers. Physicians maintain the virus that causes AIDS cannot be passed on through casual school contact; the brothers have no symptoms of AIDS.

On Tuesday, 380 children showed up for class and more than 300 stayed home. On Monday's opening day, 337 students showed up.

The first bomb-threat call was received at 8:03 a.m., just as the Ray boys arrived. As on the first day, police were guarding the grounds.

Some parents who had taken their children to school decided to take them back home after the first threatening call, said Principal Donald Knoche.

By midafternoon, there had been no other incidents. "It's been real quiet; we've had a good day," Knoche said then.

DeSoto school officials barred the brothers, all hemophiliacs, from class last fall after they tested positive for antibodies to the AIDS virus. Their parents, Louise and Clifford Ray, filed a discrimination suit and on Aug. 5 a federal judge in Tampa ordered the school board to reinstate the boys.

Doctors said they probably were infected through blood plasma-based products they were given, so their blood would clot in case of injury.

Heirs seek money

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Lorna Anderson Eldridge was the first one to ask about getting a new life insurance policy for Martin K. Anderson, but it was her late husband who actually bought the policy and owned it, the agent who sold the policy testified Tuesday.

Chris Kimble of Emporia, the agent, said Lorna Anderson, who has remarried, signed none of the documents required to purchase the $270,000 policy in the spring of 1983, some six months before Anderson was killed.

Kimble was the first witness at a trial to determine validity of the policy and whether the company that issued it, New England Mutual Life Insurance Co., must pay the proceeds from that policy to the four children of Martin and Lorna Anderson.

New England Mutual claims the policy was obtained by fraud and should be invalidated. It alleges deceit was involved because Lorna Anderson intended to kill Anderson or have him killed in order to collect the money.

Eldridge first made claim for the money herself immediately after Anderson's death, but last fall renounced her claim and said the money should go to the children — four girls ranging in age from 6 to 13.

Kimble testified Eldridge came to him in April 1983 — three months after a previous $300,000 policy on Anderson's life lapsed because of failure to make premium payments — and said Anderson needed his insurance reinstated because she feared he was considering committing suicide.

Kimble said he gave her an application form. Several days later, he testified, Anderson discussed the insurance matter with him at a meeting of a civic club of which both were members. After that, Anderson made application for a new policy, which was issued about a month later after he took two physical examinations.

Asked if Lorna signed for anything in connection with the issuance of the policy, Kimble replied, "No, sir."

He also testified that all the papers needed to issue the policy were in proper order, and that all payments were made on the policy until Anderson was killed 5½ months later, on Nov. 4, 1983.

Anderson also paid $30 for an additional $100,000 for one month's coverage when he went on Army Reserve summer duty in 1983, Kimble said, although that was a temporary arrangement and he later tore up the check.

Kimble said he only had a few contacts with Anderson between selling him the new policy and his death.

Another witness Tuesday, Daniel R. Carter, 39, of Emporia, testified about his love affair with Lorna Anderson during the summer of 1982, and his involvement in an effort initiated the next year by Lorna to hire someone to kill Anderson.

Under questioning by Edward Hund of Wichita, the attorney for the Anderson family, Carter confirmed that all his dealings with Lorna Anderson regarding soliciting a person to kill Anderson came three months or more after the $270,000 insurance policy was issued.

In his opening statement Tuesday, Hund said Martin Anderson bought life insurance to provide financial security for his dependents, and whether his wife plotted his murder to try to collect on that policy is irrelevant to the insurance company's duty to pay off on the policy.

"Marty Anderson believed in life insurance, he was aware his four children wouldn't have the level of support if he wasn't around, and despite any secret plan or design on his life he obtained this replacement policy," said Hund.

However, Terrance Crebs of St. Louis, the attorney for New England Mutual, argued Eldridge, who is in prison for plotting the murder of her first husband and is under a murder charge for his death, was instrumental in obtaining the policy on Anderson's life and her intent to kill him or have him killed constituted fraud which invalidates the policy.

Hund said the policy provided for $60,000 in whole life insurance, $60,000 in accidental life insurance and $150,000 in term life insurance — a total of $270,000, if Anderson's death was accidental.

"We're not here to defend Lorna Anderson," Hund told the jury of five men and three women selected Monday to hear and decide the civil suit brought by the company, which is seeking to have the insurance policy voided.

Health official adds 2 to staff

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Stanley Grant, secretary of Health and Environment, today announced the appointments of two people to oversee his department's disease prevention efforts.

Richard L. Parker, 58, will administer the agencies epidemiological programs, which include immunization and statewide monitoring of diseases.

Parker currently is the state epidemiologist and a bureau chief in the South Carolina Department of Health and Environmental Control and was on the staff of the national Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta for 20 years. He will join the Kansas Department of Health and Environment on Oct. 1.

Cindy Wood, 33, was appointed state epidemiologist. She previously was an assistant professor in the University of Kansas School of Medicine's Department of Preventive Medicine.

Supreme Court nullifies rule

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Supreme Court has abolished a rule that allowed lawyers who passed bar examinations in other states to begin practicing in Kansas without taking the state's bar exam.

The court abolished the rule effective

July 15. Supreme Court Justice Richard Holmes, the liaison between the court and the State Board of Law

Examiners, said Monday the court abolished the rule to keep the profession's standards high in the state.

Lawyers who passed bar exams in other states previously only had to file a motion with the state Supreme Court and meet a short list of requirements.

Holmes said about 25 applications were pending under the old rule, and those lawyers will be allowed to practice without having to take the Kansas bar exam. The court normally receives about 35 such applications each year.

GREAT COMMISSION CHURCH

Statement of Faith:

We believe the Bible to be the inspired, the only infallible, authoritative Word of God.

We believe there is one almighty, perfect and true God: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, eternally coexistent personalities of the same essence.

We believe in the deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, in His virgin birth, His sinless life, His substitutionary death, His bodily resurrection, His ascension to the right hand of the Father and His personal return in power and glory.

We believe in the personality of the Holy Spirit, and in His ministry of convicting and regenerating sinful men, and indwelling, sealing and empowering believers.

We believe in the fall of man from the state of innocence in which he was created to one of total depravity in which he is devoid of spiritual life, and incapable, apart from divine power, of pleasing God.

We believe in the justification of the sinner by grace through faith alone.

We believe that the church universal is composed of all true believers and that its members should assemble themselves together in local churches for worship, prayer, fellowship and teaching with a view to being equipped to fulfill the Great Commission.

We believe in the bodily resurrection of the saved to immortality, and in the conscious eternal suffering of the lost.

Six-year struggle ceases

By The Associated Press

NEWARK, N.J. — An experiment in employee ownership ended as a roller bearing company ceased operations after a six-year struggle to survive, forced to close a week early because its worker-owners were sabotaging equipment, its president said Tuesday.

"It's a bitter pill to swallow," George Eckles, a United Auto Workers shop chairman at Hyatt-Clark Industries, said as a few workers cleaned up machinery and finished paperwork.

President Howard Kurt informed HCI employees last Saturday that the plant was shutting down immediately. The plant, which was in bankruptcy proceedings, had been scheduled to close Aug. 28.

Workers bought the plant in 1981 from General Motors Corp., which wanted to close it. Although it showed profit in some years since, it was hurt by foreign competition and outdated equipment.

Kurt said Tuesday that instances of sabotage prompted an early clos-

Workers sabotage factory machinery

ing to protect the "health and safety" of the workers. He said some equipment was damaged or tampered with and some outgoing product was damaged.

Eckles said workers felt like prisoners during the company's final days, when they were required to remain in groups under supervision because of management's fear of sabotage.

He conceded that some machinery was slightly damaged by angry employees.

General Motors owned HCI for four decades and accounted for 90 percent of its business. Workers took a 25 percent pay cut and borrowed $53 million in a bid to save the company and their jobs.

Employees bought the plant under an Employee Stock Ownership Plan, in which employees receive stock in the company as part of their compensation.

Kurt said the company, which had $46 million in revenues in its last fiscal year, was one of the largest industrial companies to be bought by its workers. It was also one of the first times a troubled company was saved by an ESOP, Kurt said.

At first, employee ownership seemed to work, raising morale and restoring profitability in 1983.

"Everybody was putting everything they had into it," Eckles said.

But trouble began again two years later, and hourly employees staged a work slowdown after a bid for a pay increase was turned down.

Financial problems led the company to file for bankruptcy protection in January 1986, and last fall GM said it would not renew its bearing contract with HCI.

The company, which once employed 1,600 people, was down to 300 by last week.

Compounding the problems was the recent discovery of industrial waste at the plant. The discovery complicates efforts to repay nearly $50 million in debts and $21 million claimed by workers, officials said.

"Employee ownership is not a way to circumvent fundamental problems," said David H. Blake, dean of Rutgers University's Graduate School of Management. "They had an awful lot of serious competition and strategic issues."

Machinery was outdated, foreign competition was damaging the roller bearing industry and management and workers suffered from ingrained hostility and antagonism, he said.

"That's not something they resolved," he added.

Eckles blamed insensitive management and bank lenders for alienating the workers.

In Kurt's view, the failure resulted because the union wanted early profits to be paid out immediately rather than being reinvested in the company.

Landing gear fails during Hayden's flight to Winfield

By The Associated Press

WINFIELD — The state plane carrying Gov. Mike Hayden was diverted to Wichita Tuesday morning because of landing gear problem. It landed without incident at the Executive Beechcraft Airport.

Hayden and his party went on by car to Winfield, the first stop of the day in another round of barnstorming on behalf of the governor's multi-billion dollar highway program.

The governor, whose highway proposal will be considered by state lawmakers in a special session next week, continued by car to Arkansas City and Sedan. His press secretary, Kathy Peterson, said the landing gear problem had been repaired and that the plane was scheduled to pick up Hayden at Independence for a flight to Iola, where the day was to wind up with an evening appearance.

The plane, a Kingair Beech 300, left Topeka about 8:15 a.m. for Winfield, carrying a crew of two, Hayden and his aide Sue Peterson, and two lawmakers, Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Lenexa, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, and Rep. Bill Buntin, R-Topeka, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee.

Because of the mechanical problem, the twin-engine turboprop plane passed up its scheduled landing at Strother Field in Winfield.

"The circuit breaker on the landing gear popped," said Lt. Jack Garrison of the Kansas Highway Patrol, the governor's chief pilot.

U.S. presents verification procedures

By The Associated Press

GENEVA — The United States presented new proposals on Tuesday that it said would simplify verification procedures under a U.S.-Soviet agreement to do away with all intermediate-range nuclear missiles.

Members of the American delegation submitted the proposals in a meeting of the negotiating teams dealing with Intermediate Nuclear Forces — medium- and shorter-range weapons with ranges from 300 to 3,000 miles.

U.S. spokesman Terry Schroeder said that Soviet acceptance in July of eliminating all intermediate weapons, called the double-zero option, had enabled the United States to change its verification requirements.

Before the Soviet announcement, the plan had been for each superpower to keep 100 medium-range weapons on its own territory.

"Today we are laying out how this simplification could be achieved," Schroeder said, adding that the U.S. proposals, "although simplified, will still be the most stringent ever proposed in any U.S.-Soviet negotiations and will include on-site inspection."

In Washington, State Department spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley was asked whether the new U.S. position drops some intrusive measures, including inspection of factories and intelligence monitoring sites.

She replied: "There are two major changes in this. One is we have changed our 'suspect site' inspection proposal because the opportunity for illegal missile activities are significantly reduced when an entire class of missiles and its infrastructure has been eliminated."

"Also, we have dropped our requirement for perimeter-portal monitoring. This was done because the perimeter-portal monitoring system was designed to monitor the flow of missiles from production and final assembly facilities.

"With the production ban and the elimination of all INF (Intermediate Nuclear Forces) missiles within three years this would be unnecessary," Schroeder would not give details of the proposals, citing the confidentiality rule the two sides have adopted in the talks.

He said the U.S. delegation "sharply rejected suggestions in U.S. media reports that we are backing off or softening our proposals."

On Monday in Washington, a U.S. official told The Associated Press on condition of anonymity that the new American proposals would scale back demands for on-site inspection of nuclear missile facilities.

He said they would lessen requirements for surprise inspection of Soviet facilities and exclude highly sensitive areas.

According to the official, Washington wants to be able to send U.S. monitors to Soviet sites with little advance notice, which apparently would be more acceptable to the Soviets than complete surprise visits.

Attention has focused on intermediate weapons as the most likely area for quick accord at the Geneva arms talks. The other two negotiating groups deal with strategic, or intercontinental, nuclear forces and the combined field of space and defense.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev proposed Tuesday that a meeting of leaders of the U.N. Security Council's 15 member nations be held to discuss how money saved through disarmament could be spent on economic development. His ideas were expressed in a message delivered to the United Nations in New York.

Agreements on strategic arms and on space and defense have been blocked by Soviet demands for limits on the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative, the space-based defense system commonly called "Star Wars." The United States has rejected the demands.

Both sides say agreement on intermediate arms may be close, but difficult issues remain.

Negotiators have worked through the summer trying to resolve the problems before the scheduled meeting Sept. 15-17 in Washington of Secretary of State George P. Shultz and the Soviet foreign minister, Eduard A. Shevardnadze.

Convict sentenced

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — A Wichita man was sentenced to life in prison Tuesday for the beating and stabbing death of an elderly acquaintance.

Sedgwick County District Judge Montie Deer sentenced Duke Norris, 19, to life in prison for first-degree murder and five to 20 years for robbery. Assistant District Attorney Julia Craft said Norris would be eligible for parole in 18 years.

Norris was convicted by a jury last month for the slaying and robbery of Geardean Harness, 69, who was beaten with a lamp and stabbed in the back at his home.

Residential district ready to reappraise its property value

By Staff and Wire Reports

Approximately 25 percent of the residential district in Riley County has been prepared for the state's reappraisal.

Although specific values will not be placed on the property until October of 1988, Sam Schmidt, Riley County appraiser, said the process has been going smoothly.

"I know that there has been some trouble in other counties, but they were mainly because of political problems," Schmidt said.

"We're never as far along as I'd like to be. If we were, we'd be finished now. When you look at 105 counties, you're going to have problems. But we'll do everything humanly possible to achieve our goals."

—George Donatello

The appraiser's office is presently taking inventory of the land in the county. By using aerial photography, Schmidt said property boundaries will be measured and logged.

On the state level, George Donatello, the state coordinator of the program told the Legislature's interim study Committee on Assessment and Taxation that the process should be completed on schedule by January 1989.

"I think, all in all, it's going very well," said Donatello. "We're never as far along as I'd like to be. If we were, we'd be finished now. When you look at 105 counties, you're going to have problems. But we'll do everything humanly possible to achieve our goals."

The 1985 Legislature ordered all real estate in Kansas reappraised in order to eliminate inequity and disparity in how property was being assessed within counties and from county to county.

The Legislature also submitted to voters a constitutional amendment establishing assessed valuations for classes of property, which take effect in January 1989 when the reappraisal effort will be finished. Kansans approved the amendment last November.

Donatello had some good news for the counties.

The state will distribute next week the first quarter checks to help pay for the reappraisal effort. The Legislature appropriated $10.8 million for the current fiscal year, to be distributed in four payments. That will pay for about half the counties' expenses this year for reappraisal.

Now, the push is to finish reappraisal on schedule.

Donatello told the committee 535,000 of the estimated 1.5 million parcels of property statewide have now been mapped, which is 36 percent, and that data collection has been completed on 210,000 parcels, or 14 percent.

New Mexico man pleads guilty in ethanol case

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A New Mexico man pleaded guilty Monday in federal court to involvement in a business scheme in which investors lost millions of dollars on a venture to build and operate ethanol plants.

The guilty plea of Kenneth D. Sinks Jr. of Farmington, N.M., came just hours before a jury was chosen for the trial of a Kansas City lawyer who is charged in the same case.

Sinks pleaded guilty to one count of conspiracy and one count of tax fraud in a case that focuses on the collapse of a Joplin, Mo., firm called Midwestern Cos. Inc., said Willard Bunch, an attorney in the case.

Bunch represents the Kansas City lawyer, Thomas Tierney. Sinks was to have stood trial with Tierney but now will testify against him, said Bunch. The trial is expected to last three weeks.

Tierney was general counsel, vice chairman and director of Midwestern from May 1983 to March 1984. He already has been convicted by a district court jury in New Mexico on charges relating to his involvement with Midwestern.

The Albuquerque jury found him guilty of two counts of conspiracy, three counts of fraud, one count of racketeering and one count of criminal solicitation in what officials alleged was one of the largest fuel-related investment frauds in the Midwest.

Midwestern and its New Mexico subsidiary, Titan Energy Engineering Inc., were involved in building 23 ethanol plants in New Mexico and Louisiana. The company built plants at a cost of about $1.5 million each using money from industrial revenue bonds. Each plant was sold to investors for $3.5 million.

Investors throughout the country bought the bonds, and Kansas City investors bought several plants. Not all of the plants were completed.

Prosecutors in the New Mexico trial said the company overvalued the worth of its plants by more than $62 million. Prosecutors alleged that nearly 1,500 investors and stockholders lost a combined $250 million when Midwestern went bankrupt in 1984.

Tierney, also former general counsel for the Land Clearance for Redevelopment Authority of Kansas City, was indicted Jan. 21 in Kansas City along with Sinks and two other men.

The defendants besides Tierney and Sinks were Ronald Walker of Joplin, Mo., former president of Midwestern, and Carl E. Wright of Independence, former accountant and secretary-treasurer of Midwestern. They have pleaded guilty and are expected to testify for the government.

Tierney is charged in all 22 counts of the indictment. Sinks had been charged in 17 counts. He is a chemical engineer and was a Midwestern shareholder and executive vice president of Titan Energy Engineering.

The indictment alleged that they were involved in conspiracy, tax fraud and security fraud.

A federal grand jury alleged that the men developed a plan for Midwestern to build and sell ethanol plants to partnerships that would receive investment and energy tax credits.

Midwestern allegedly sold the plants to investors as lucrative tax shelters. Prosecutors in the New Mexico case maintained that Midwestern officials concealed that the plants were not completed in time to qualify for the tax benefits that investors were supposed to get in 1982.

Tierney, Sinks and the other alleged conspirators also are accused of drumming up more than $13 million in fictitious and excessive depreciation deductions, investment tax credits and energy tax credits to the partners, according to the indictment.

To carry out the scheme, the conspirators allegedly filed false and fraudulent tax returns with the Internal Revenue Service and fraudulent financial reports with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Boeing delays 7J7 launching

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Citing mixed signals from some potential major customers, Boeing has delayed the launching of its advanced technology 7J7 jetliner by about a year.

Boeing's commercial airplane division decided last week to delay until 1993 the initial deliveries of the proposed twin-engine airliner, which is seen by the company as the logical successor to the aging 727. The company had been talking to airlines about deliveries beginning in 1992.

While Boeing's decision was not a big surprise to Wall Street analysts, investors apparently liked the news and pushed Boeing's stock up 1 1/4 to close at 53 3/4 on a day when the Dow Jones industrial average dropped more than 12 points.

Analysts said the delay would allow Boeing to defer next year's anticipated increases in research and development costs on the aircraft, with the company's bottom line benefiting accordingly.

"It's a belated admission by Boeing that the market is not quite ready yet (for the 7J7) despite Boeing's most persistent efforts," said Howard Rubel, an analyst for Cyrus J. Lawrence.

While Boeing has been talking primarily in terms of a 150-seat plane, American Airlines, for one, has expressed interest in an aircraft in the 165-170-seat range. Scandinavian Airlines System, another possible customer, is looking for a plane in the 140-seat size, however.

With fuel prices still relatively low and the new propfan engines that will power the 7J7 still under development and unproven, Boeing officials also acknowledged that the overall market does not appear ready for the aircraft.

It has been estimated that it would will cost $4 billion to get the plane into production. In part to help spread the costs, Boeing has taken on a consortium of Japanese companies.

Forum debates waste compact

By The Associated Press

GARNETT, Kan. — The benefit to Kansas of a five-state compact for the disposal and storage of low-level radioactive wastes was debated at a community meeting in Garnett Monday night.

The four panelists agreed that something has to be done now to handle radioactive wastes — an issue that has been put off for 20 years — but disagreed on the value of Kansas' participation in the compact with Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma and Nebraska.

Stanley Grant, director of the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, and James Power Jr., a hydrologist in charge of the environmental division of that department, argued that the five-state compact is in the best interest of Kansas.

Grant also said it is possible the Central States Region Compact might never build a waste storage facility because the five member states generate about 3 percent of the nation's low-level waste. Because the amount is so small, he said, the central compact could merge with another compact that wants to make its site more economically feasible.

"That's a possibility and certainly one we're looking at," Grant said.

Laura Menhusen of Jewell, president of the Kansas Coalition on Nuclear Waste, and Dave Ebbert, a Quinter farmer who belongs to the coalition, suggested Kansas withdraw from the compact and handle its own wastes.

Menhusen said the central compact is the worst in the nation because it gives away two important aspects of site development to the commercial developer — the selection of a host state and the selection of a site.

Ebbert said that when the compact was formed four years ago is seemed best for Kansas to participate because it was the lowest producer of low-level radioactive wastes among the five states. Since then, he said, Wolf Creek has become operative and Kansas has jumped to the top of the list. The switch would make it easier for other states to claim Kansas should handle all the wastes, he said.

The meeting in Garnett was the result of a request from the Anderson County Commission for more information about a low-level radioactive waste dump.

An invitation for the meeting was made when Gov. Mike Hayden and state officials met with leaders of southeast Kansas counties in Burlington to discuss aspects of a possible site. That was after the Kansas Geological Survey identified certain areas with shale deemed appropriate for a waste site, including much of Anderson County and other counties in the Wolf Creek Nuclear Plant area.

Big money chances soon to commence with state lottery

By Jodi Swengel
Staff Writer

Kansans will soon have the chance to win "big money" by playing the Kansas Lottery. The game has three potential starting dates — Sept. 28, Oct. 12 and Oct. 27, said Larry Montgomery, director of the Lottery Commission.

Doubts were raised about the start-up of an instant winner game this fall because of the time required for the security checks on employees by the Kansas Bureau of Investigation.

Kansas Lottery

He said the lottery could not be ready, however, in time for tickets to be sold at the Kansas State Fair in Hutchinson in early September, although many western Kansas legislators have pushed for it.

The price of a lottery ticket will be $1. The winnings are structured in three prize levels or "tiers." The first tier includes prizes from a free lottery ticket up to $25. Ticket winners of $25.01 up to $100 are included in the second tier, and winnings of between $100.01 and $5,000 are in the highest level.

"The money paid to the winners comes from the lottery prize fund," Montgomery said.

Winners in the first tier can redeem their prizes instantly from the place the ticket was purchased, Montgomery said. Other winners will need to mail their ticket to the lottery headquarters in Topeka to obtain their prize.

Nancy Zogleman, director of public information for the Kansas Lottery, said more than 1,200 Kansas retailers have made an application to sell the lottery tickets. She said they are aiming for 2,000 to 4,000 retailers before the first game in October.

Retailers can buy a book of 300 tickets for $165. The retailers make 5 percent profit on any tickets that are sold. Montgomery said nine workshops are scheduled across the state for retailers who want to learn about lottery ticket sales.

"A retail application workshop is scheduled in Junction City on Sept. 3 for retailers interested in selling lottery tickets in this area of the state," he said.

The money earned by the Kansas Lottery from ticket sales is broken down into different areas. For every $1 ticket sold, 45 cents goes into the prize fund and 25 cents goes toward the cost of operations and the administration fund, which pays for advertising, public relations and the salaries of Lottery employees.

The remaining 30 cents is returned to the state. Montgomery said these dollars will be directed into three areas: economic development, the property reappraisal program and the Kansas prison system.

To start the lottery, the state loaned $2.1 million to the Kansas Lottery.

Admissions face changes

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Spokesmen for four educational organizations urged the Legislative Educational Planning Committee Wednesday either to recommend keeping Kansas' open admissions policy for universities, or to move very cautiously before suggesting a change.

Under the policy, all graduates of Kansas high schools are admitted to the state's six universities, regardless of high school standing or test scores.

There is concern among some legislators that this leads to excessive costs for higher education in Kansas because freshmen courses are flooded with students who do not remain in school very long and universities must provide remedial courses in certain subjects to help those unprepared for college work catch up.

Open universities are recommended

Spokesmen for Kansas-National Education Association, United School Administrators of Kansas and the Kansas Council on Vocational Education strongly suggested to the committee that the present policy should be retained.

A spokesman for Associated Students of Kansas is withholding taking a stand until several basic policy questions are answered.

"The taxpayers of Kansas have come to accept this long tradition of our high school graduates being able to 'try' our university system," Craig Grant, director of political action of K-NEA, told the committee.

"Many students wait until late in their education to decide on a vocation or profession to pursue. Many also change directions sometime along the way, K-NEA hopes the state would not close the door to one of these students from entering the state university of their choice."

Grant said if the policy is changed, K-NEA would be opposed to having different admission standards for different schools, creating one or more "elite" schools to the detriment of others.

Gerald W. Henderson, executive director of the school administrators group, said his organization still believes strongly in open admissions.

"We are aware that Kansas is one of the few states retaining such a policy, but we believe Kansas should not rush to be like everyone else," Henderson said.

"All of us have known young people who for one reason or another had difficulty for as many as three or four high school semesters, and then blossomed to become good students through their college experience."

He said the universities should drop remedial programs, forcing high schools to educate their students so they are ready for college.

CIA cables still missing after hearings

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The chief of the CIA's clandestine service told Congress that Iran-Contra independent counsel Lawrence Walsh is probing the mystery of missing CIA cables alerting the spy agency in late 1985 that U.S.-made missiles were being shipped to Iran, according to testimony released Wednesday.

Clair George, the CIA's deputy director for operations, raised the possibility the cables could have been destroyed in a cover-up, but he discounted the likelihood.

George's private testimony on Aug. 5 and 6 before the congressional Iran-Contra committees was distributed Wednesday although some sensitive portions remain classified and were blacked out.

In addition to his comments on the missing cables, George also:

—Testified that the White House and the late CIA Director William J. Casey ignored his strong complaints that unsavory and untrustworthy people were helping run what George viewed as a total "arms for hostages deal" with Iran.

—Suggested that Lt. Col. Oliver North's engaging personality won him friends at the CIA, but a tendency toward exaggeration and melodrama kept even those who liked him skeptical about things he told them. Still, he said, North had endeared himself to Casey, in part because he was "action oriented" and reminded Casey of his own exploits during World War II with the Office of Strategic Services, the military precursor to the CIA.

—Declared that the North-directed diversion of arms-sales profits to aid the Contras was something the CIA could not properly be involved in.

"You cannot take United States weapons and just go out and sell them for a profit and use the profits as you see fit," he said. "That's the gospel."

In another development, the Republican Party's effort to capitalize on North's popularity has drawn a rebuke from Sen. Warren Rudman of New Hampshire, the senior GOP member of the Senate Iran-Contra committee.

"If you're like me, you're very proud of Oliver North," said the fund-raising letter signed by party chairman Frank J. Fahrenkopf Jr. Rudman, however, said in a letter to Fahrenkopf that North had participated in deceiving the president and other officials and "these are not actions that are representative of the party of Lincoln, Eisenhower and Reagan."

One controversy the congressional investigating committees are trying to resolve concerns the question of just when the CIA knew that an Israeli aircraft being routed to Iran through Portugal contained U.S. anti-aircraft missiles and that a cover story that the cargo consisted of oil-drilling parts was false.

Documents released by the committees in June indicated that retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord, who had been asked by the White House to help with the logistics of the shipment, had told two

Cooperative begins project

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

An economic cooperative, recently formed to strengthen the bond between the University and Manhattan, has started its first project.

The Bluemont Consortium was organized to promote joint ventures between the KSU Foundation, the University, the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, the Manhattan City Commission and the Riley County Commission for the benefit of each body. It will be targeted specifically toward economic development.

Its first project is supervision of a Manhattan economic development study. The study's focus will concentrate on the feasibility of building an 826-acre industrial and technological park.

The idea for the consortium originated from the traditional economic link between the University and the city, said William Muir, director of economic development for the Foundation.

"Both (K-State and Manhattan) can exist and function separately, but they do much better together," he said.

It will also act as an advisory group for the Foundation, Chamber or any economic development-related organization created by them.

Governing the consortium is an 18-member Board of Trustees composed of representatives from the five organizations.

Very few other cities have a university-related group of this kind to help the community, said Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement.

"It (the consortium) is very atypical. We're able to accomplish much more if we work with our local community. They're also going to benefit tremendously from this venture," he said.

Regarding the park, Krause said the University has received positive feedback from the community.

"People are very excited. It is the first time the University has reached out to the community in this capacity."

Freilich, Leimer, Carlisle and Shortridge, a Kansas City consulting firm, has been contracted for the $90,000 park study. Costs of the study will be split among the five organizations.

The study is to be conducted in two parts. The firm will separately evaluate each of the eight colleges for strengths within the particular program area. These evaluations will then be analyzed in relation to Manhattan's private industry.

"The best part of this study is we (the economic development committee) could evaluate the colleges, but nobody wants to be at the bottom of the list. This way everybody feels they've been treated fairly," Muir said.

The primary site chosen for the park is located on the west edge of Manhattan. The Manhattan Chamber of Commerce now holds the option to purchase the

4-year-old's parents buried

MAPLE GLEN, Pa. — The survival of 4-year-old Cecilia Chichan from the crash of Northwest Airlines Flight 255 helps give the rest of her family the strength to cope with the deaths of her parents and brother, a priest said at their funeral Wednesday.

Michael Chichan, 32; Paula Chichan, 33; and their 6-year-old son, David, who were among the 156 people who died, were remembered during Mass at St. Alphonsus Roman Catholic Church, where the couple was married.

"Talking about Cecilia will always remind us of the miracle of life. We believe God spared her to give the rest of her family the strength to bear the cross," the Rev. Andrew Robberecht said during the service.

Three matching, chestnut-brown caskets rested before the altar adorned with more than a dozen flower arrangements. About 350 people packed into the church, 25 miles from Philadelphia.

The Chichans had been visiting relatives in the area and were en route to their home in Tempe, Ariz., when the plane crashed Aug. 16.

"Today as in the past few days, we all stand together as a shocked and stricken group of people. Death brings us face to face with the deepest questions of faith," Robberecht said.

The priest, who is also a teacher at nearby Archbishop Wood High School, married the Chichans and baptized their two children. He described them as "a young, beautiful family with a promising future."

Cecilia's condition was upgraded to fair Wednesday at the the Burn Center at the University of Michigan Hospitals in Ann Arbor, Mich.

She did not cry after being told Monday night she would never see her parents or brother again, the Arizona Republic reported Wednesday.

"She didn't understand," Pauline Ciamaichela, the Arizona girl's grandmother, told the newspaper. "She'll be asking again."

Laxalt withdraws from race

WASHINGTON — Former Sen. Paul Laxalt announced Wednesday he is withdrawing from the race for the 1988 Republican presidential nomination after "a careful and realistic assessment of our financial situation."

Laxalt, who has raised more than $1 million, made the announcement in a statement issued about 7 p.m. EDT Wednesday by his campaign committee.

Royal couple to attend benefit

GREENWICH, Conn. — Because the Duke and Duchess of York, Andrew and Sarah, want to attend a benefit polo match next month, the public can't, a sponsor said.

The staff of the World Wildlife Fund's Friends of the Masai Mara Project, which is organizing the Rolex Challenge Cup match Sept. 19, will limit the event to an invitation-only crowd of about 500 people to ensure security, Marc Shafir, a Rolex spokesman said Tuesday.

The original plan was to sell about 200 tickets to the public for $15 each, Shafir said. Instead, only the 500 people invited to a $200-a-plate luncheon will be allowed to attend.

"What they decided to do, essentially, was to make it a more controllable crowd to improve security with the duke and duchess coming," Shafir said.

Movie crew receives fines

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa — A request by the crew on actor Richard Gere's latest movie to excuse 48 parking tickets hasn't exactly left officials breathless.

"If they're getting meter violations on the street, it's nothing the city is going to take care of," said Public Safety Commissioner Floyd Bergen.

Someone from Harvest Film Co. dropped off the parking tickets at City Hall on Monday expecting they would be excused, Bergen said.

"We want to support the movie and the money the people are bringing into the community, but it's very difficult to make this kind of decision. Excusing these tickets could set a precedent," Bergen said.

Court overrules textbook case

ATLANTA — A federal appeals court Wednesday reversed an Alabama judge's order banning 44 textbooks from state public schools, saying the books improperly excluded references to religion or promoted the belief in "secular humanism."

In allowing the textbooks to remain in use, a three-judge panel of the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that U.S. District Judge Brevard Hand's order had turned the First Amendment requirement that the government be neutral on the subject of religion "into an affirmative obligation to speak about religion."

Former court clerk dead at 95

MANHATTAN — Joseph F. Musil, who served 34 years as clerk of the Riley County District Court, died Wednesday at the age of 95.

Musil, a Republican, was first elected in 1938 and served until his retirement in 1972. In most of his 16 biennial re-election campaigns, Democrats did not bother to run an opposition candidate.

Since his retirement, Musil maintained an active interest in county and political affairs.

Feisty Kansan meets Carson

LOS ANGELES — Proclaiming she was "too mean to die," 105-year-old Mildred Holt of Ellsworth, Kan., traded quips Wednesday night with Johnny Carson and became the oldest guest of "The Tonight Show."

"You're the oldest person I have ever met and ever had on the show," Carson told Holt, who was born July 17, 1882.

"That's the way it is at home," said Holt. "I'm always the oldest one they ever met."

Dressed in a powder blue outfit with pearls and corsage and sipping a highball, Holt recalled her family's first automobile in 1914, supporting Teddy Roosevelt for president and giving up driving just two years ago.

Asked by Carson what she thought of Jim Bakker, the former head of the PTL Club, Holt said: "I don't like him at all ... we ought to string him up."

The feisty Kansan asked that they not make fun of her home state.

"I met a man at the hotel and he said, 'Where're you from?' and I said Kansas and he said, 'Oh, my goodness.' That made me mad," she said.

"He forgets that Kansas produces more wheat than any state in the Union. That's where your bread comes from ... the trouble is they can't get any money for the wheat."

GREAT COMMISSION CHURCH

Statement of Faith:

We believe the Bible to be the inspired, the only infallible, authoritative Word of God.

We believe there is one almighty, perfect and true God: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, eternally coexistent personalities of the same essence.

We believe in the deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, in His virgin birth, His sinless life, His substitutionary death, His bodily resurrection, His ascension to the right hand of the Father and His personal return in power and glory.

We believe in the personality of the Holy Spirit, and in His ministry of convicting and regenerating sinful men, and in dwelling, sealing and empowering believers.

We believe in the fall of man from the state of innocence in which he was created to one of total depravity in which he is devoid of spiritual life, and incapable, apart from divine power, of pleasing God.

We believe in the justification of the sinner by grace through faith alone.

We believe that the church universal is composed of all true believers and that its members should assemble themselves together in local churches for worship, prayer, fellowship and teaching with a view to being equipped to fulfill the Great Commission.

We believe in the bodily resurrection of the saved to immortality, and in the conscious eternal suffering of the lost.

Dorms to receive cable TV service

By Jeffrey J. Bielser
News Editor

Dorm residents now have the opportunity to receive the same cable service afforded to other Manhattan subscribers.

An agreement reached earlier this year between Manhattan Cable TV Services Inc. and the Department of Housing allows the cable system to install hook-ups in residence hall rooms. Cable was already available in some lobbies of the halls.

So far, the response has been good by residents, with about 20 percent of the available rooms signed for cable service, said Dan Hebert, general manager of Manhattan Cable T.V., 610 Humboldt St.

Tables have been set up in lobbies of the different residence halls for people to register for cable service installation in their rooms, he said. Sign up will continue until Sept. 1.

Prospective customers can save $20 by signing up while the company is on campus, since it is offering free installation, Hebert said. After the deadline, anyone wanting cable service in their room will have to go through the main office and pay the installation fee.

He said students can sign up now for service, indicate a later installation date that should not be later than Sept. 30, and still not pay an installation fee.

Construction is still going on in Marlatt, Haymaker and West halls, hence service to some rooms there might be delayed, Hebert said.

The agreement seems to benefit both the cable company and the residence halls.

The service has not cost the Department of Housing any money.

"We have made no financial investment at all," said Tom Frith, director of the Department of Housing. "No money is coming out of the students' pockets."

Also a small percentage of the money made from the service will go into the Mable Strong Scholarship Fund, he said. The scholarship is awarded to people in residence halls for outstanding leadership.

For the cable company, expansion to the residence halls has given it a chance for a bigger market.

The company is providing increasing levels of service in Manhattan and by including the dorms now, a pay-off period is realized, Hebert said.

Among the things that persuaded the company to accept the deal for the residence halls were renewal of the company's franchise and the results of surveys from the housing department, he said.

Those surveys, conducted two years ago, showed a high degree of interest from students wanting cable in their residence hall rooms.

Companies neglect disease counseling

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — A majority of the country's top businesses are unprepared to deal with AIDS despite growing evidence the fatal disease could eventually cost corporate America billions of dollars, a survey released Wednesday found.

Of 100 Fortune 1000 companies surveyed in late July, only 29 had policies for dealing with employees with AIDS and nine were considering adopting guidelines, according to the survey by the Boston office of TeleSearch Inc.

"It is almost as though most of these companies don't want to admit that AIDS exists or that it will only affect the 'other' company," said Ellen C. Kinlin, president of TeleSearch, a national executive search firm owned by Fidelity Investments.

Three of the companies surveyed said they would fire employees who contracted acquired immune deficiency syndrome, while 25 said they might do so, the survey found.

Sixty-seven companies said they would not fire employees with AIDS and five refused to answer the question.

Of the 14 companies requiring employees to have regular medical checkups, only one required an AIDS test, TeleSearch said.

One-third of the companies said they expected health insurance costs to increase dramatically because of AIDS while 25 companies said insurance costs would not increase, according to the survey.

AIDS eventually could cost major corporations billions of dollars because of increased health insurance costs, lost work time and production and related costs, the Tele-

Search report said.

TeleSearch refused to release the names of the companies it surveyed, saying it promised them confidentiality. The surveyed companies are in New England, New York, Washington and Chicago and represent manufacturing, insurance, health care, utilities and consumer products, the company said.

A random survey of a dozen major companies Wednesday by The Associated Press found varying efforts to deal with AIDS, which attacks the body's ability to fight disease and infection. The disease primarily is spread through sexual contact and the sharing of infected needles by intravenous drug users.

Several company spokesmen said constant developments in research and the uncertainty among government and the insurance industry about how to respond to the disease were partly responsible for what TeleSearch termed the corporate world's lagging response to dealing with AIDS.

Raytheon Co., a major defense contractor which has 76,000 employees worldwide, does not have a formal AIDS policy, said spokesman Ed Powers.

"Our approach to AIDS is on a case-by-case basis," Powers said. "We don't see any hard and fast answers to the AIDS question at this point. A position this week could change based on new information next week."

Sears, Roebuck and Co. does not have an AIDS policy because it "does not differentiate between AIDS and any other illness or disease," said Doug Fairweather, a spokesman for the Chicago-based retail company.

Former K-Stater faces illegal firearms charges

By Staff and Wire Reports

A former K-State student has been indicted on a charge of illegally making and transferring firearms.

Kyle T. Dillinger, 22, of 1225 Claflin Road, was named in a five-count indictment alleging he illegally made and transferred three firearms equipped with silencers in violation of federal law. Each count carries a maximum of 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Dillinger was last enrolled at K-State in the fall of 1986, according to the Registrar's Office.

In addition, Babbette Leigh Lewis, 26, Junction City, was named in a two-count indictment alleging she embezzled money from the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, where she worked as a clerk on the Fort Riley post, and falsified records to conceal the embezzlement.

Religion delays peace People forced into conformity

Imagine there's no heaven. It's easy if you try. No hell below us. Above us only sky. All the people, living life in peace.

John Lennon evaluated life with this truism in his song "Imagine." His belief came from examining society in the context of his life as well as in historical considerations. He found that most of the confrontations in the world stemmed from religion. It seems because of the different religions, people believe "If you don't believe in my God, you should die."

Religion certainly has a place in our society. It provides us with an historical background dating to 2,000 years ago. It also gives us a moral crutch to fall on in times of crisis. Religion provides people an outline of how they should conduct their lives. Unfortunately, most of the religious books and other artifacts are horribly outdated to comply with current standards and to give insight into modern life. How can we pattern our lives on what happened 2,000 years ago?

Also, in America, the books of the Bible that we use have gone through at least two language changes since they were written. During these translations, what could have been lost or hidden? Embellishment could have occurred. The translators could have done this so that we behave according to their moral standards. Today's religion has attempted to create a conformist society based on the moral standards established hundreds of years ago.

Not only does religion erode our moral self-determination, it has also been the cause of much bloodshed. It seems when we conform to the religion, we must fight for its survival. Several instances come to mind. The first is the conflict in the Middle East. The Palestine Liberation Organization wants a homeland, and Jerusalem is their intended locale. Unfortunately, the sovereign nation (a term used loosely) of Israel covets and now covers that land. Why? This piece of war-torn land is the religious homeland to both of them. The PLO tries to make its point to the world community by sponsoring terrorist activities.

Other instances of religious warfare include the war between Iran-Iraq which has lasted 800 years, the battle between the Protestants and Catholics in the land of Eire, and Adolf Hitler's mass extermination of Jews.

Other places where religion can be found with blood are in Guyana and South Africa. Of course, the religious sect that the Rev. Jim Jones led to Guyana ended with a mass suicide. In South Africa, the Dutch followers of John Calvin relied heavily on the teachings of the Old Testament and paralleled themselves to Abraham. The Dutch saw the blacks in South Africa as the equivalent to the Canaanites, and thought the blacks were there to serve them. That practice continues today in that abhorrence we call apartheid. Thus, it seems religion has segregated us and ended in bloodshed.

Religion also hurts our pocketbooks. For their moral support, they ask for 10 percent of our paychecks as well as a contribution every Sunday. Oral Roberts wants money for his medical school, or God will "call him home." Jerry Falwell wants megabucks to keep the PTL club going after Jim Bakker's actions. Youth for Christ, the Fellowship of Christian Athletes, and other religious organizations want money. Why do we need churches? If we want to have religion, why not have it in the privacy of our own homes?

Religion does provide us with a way to live. Catholics aren't to use birth control because the church says so. The rationale behind this could be to increase the number of Catholics and thus the church's coffers. The repercussions include unwanted pregnancies, child abuse, and a higher susceptibility to AIDS. Even a priest in Wichita didn't use birth control. Maybe society doesn't have the moral fiber to make their own decisions as to what is right and what is wrong.

It is interesting to note that we cannot get away from religion. To work for this institution, you have to sign an oath to God. This is a violation of church and state, I believe. The Collegian staff last semester stopped Blue Key. I guess they forgot about themselves.

Yes, religion is embedded firmly within our society. It tells us what to do, where to go, whom to associate with, and how to live our lives. It will not allow us to develop our own standards. Unfortunately, whether we have nuclear weapons or sticks to do battle with, we will never have peace as long as there is religion. Religion seems to take away more than it gives. I don't think God (whichever one you believe in) would have intended it that way.

More federal control needed for air traffic

The crash of a Northwest Airlines jet Aug. 16 should have come as a surprise to no one. It was a tragedy waiting to happen.

And an overdue one at that. For too long, the airline industry in the United States has teetered on the edge of disaster: There are too few controllers regulating too many flights, and the number of near collisions continues to increase.

Given that information, it's urgent that the level of safety in the skies should be improved. Indeed, that has been one of Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole's top priorities.

However, her recommendations for improving safety have met with stiff resistance from the 260,000-member Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association, which has called for her resignation. The group has also begun a letter-writing campaign and is scheduled to place an ad in USA Today this week calling for her to step down.

Somehow, that comes as no surprise.

Dole has proposed that existing Terminal Control Areas around major airports be expanded and that other airports adopt a TCA, thereby improving safety due to increased regulation.

The pilots' association has called Dole unqualified to handle her job; thus the resignation request. What that association is more interested in is looking out for No. 1 and avoiding the "hassles" of implementing increased security measures.

Even if the group is successful in getting Dole out of office — which is highly unlikely — it still must face an angry Congress that is poised to institute some of the toughest safety regulations in the industry's history. Congressional leaders have identified safety as a top priority.

What the pilots' association doesn't realize is that the safety "hassles" are desperately needed and would save lives. The last thing the airline industry needs right now is political bickering.

The Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association needs to let Elizabeth Dole do her job.

Policy betters K-State by awarding scholars

K-State academics is getting the recognition it deserves, and it has to thank the program implemented to attract the "best and the brightest."

This year K-State doubled their number of National Merit Scholars over last year. These 34 honor students chose to attend the University because they were informed about the excellent academic programs K-State offers, and also because of an improved scholarship program.

These students are the first to receive full-ride scholarships for something other than athletics. Not to knock athletic scholarships, but it is about time the University recognized outstanding scholars.

And thanks to efforts made by President Jon Wefald in convincing the Foundation to donate money to National Merit Scholars, the scholarship amount offered to each increased up to $5,000.

National Merit Scholars are important to a university because of the prestige associated with the scholarship program. Traditionally, the University of Kansas has attracted the highest number of National Merit Scholars in the state, indicating to some that KU offers better scholastic programs.

But this year, preliminary statistics show that K-State has tied with KU in attracting National Merit Scholars. This is good news to a school trying to make a comeback after years of declining enrollments.

The reputation of having outstanding scholars can attract more scholars. Last year K-State took the time to brag about its programs and outstanding numbers of Truman Scholars, Rhodes Scholars, and other scholarship winners. This effort made potential students take another look at K-State.

Kansans like K-State; the numbers show it.

Government body active for students

Gee, isn't it great to be starting another school year here at K-State? Whether you are a first semester plebe or a seasoned K-State veteran, one thing is certain: you are anticipating the many joys and wonders the upcoming semester is sure to bring. Amid the fun and excitement of freezing, rainy Saturday afternoons spent at KSU Stadium, a week's worth of pumping floats and getting no sleep in preparation for Homecoming, and spare time between classes spent in the Union lab unsuccessfully scoping for the perfect specimen, the average student finds it difficult to keep up with the many happenings of K-State's Student Governing Association.

Someone, somewhere in K-State SGA history understood students' problems. So, to serve student needs, the Senate Communications Committee was created.

As chair of this committee, I'd just love to tell you all about SGA and how you can keep informed about all its activities. So turn up the John Phillips Sousa, sink into your favorite rite easy chair, grab a tall cold one (milk, of course) and allow me to share with you the magical fantasy that is student government.

Our government greatly resembles that one which our forefathers brilliantly designed 200 years ago — you know, the three limbs or whatever. Our student body president, Kent Bradley, even has his own executive cabinet complete with a chief of staff: the lovely and talented Janelle Larson. Don't worry though; SGA doesn't boast any Robert McFarlands, John Poindexters or Ollie Norths. We only have Kirk Caraway.

Even though there is no SGA Supreme Court, many young, aspiring Sandra Day O'Connors and William Rehnquists-to-be have begun their judicial careers here. From living group judicial boards to Student Tribunal (the highest SGA appellate board) there is a panel for everyone.

Personal prejudices aside (or maybe not), the unicameral legislative branch is the showcase of the K-State SGA. Sorry to break the news to you, Kent, but under the leadership of Chairwoman Michelle Benoit, Student Senate is the largest and most visible of all SGA operations. Forty-nine senators representing the eight colleges and the Graduate School are primarily responsible for all kinds of nifty legislation. Take, for example, Senate Bill 69-14-7. With this piece of legislation, Student Senate declared October 31, 1969 as All Spirits Day and "admonishes all students to celebrate this event as befits custom... students are further admonished to find some means of aid for the beleaguered peoples of the world." Of course, this is from a senate term long since passed. We now deal with more sophisticated problems, like parking at Jardine Terrace and the renovation of Holton Hall.

How does a person keep up with all of this SGA activity? Heck, it's easy. The best way to stay informed is to eagerly scan the Collegian daily. Before each meeting, you'll find a story about Senate's planned agenda, while articles detailing Senate's actions will run after the meetings.

Another great way to stay informed is by calling the Student Senate Hotline. Senators man this line Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., throughout the semester. They are willing and somewhat capable of informing you of senate happenings. If you have a complaint or suggestion or need an explanation about anything at K-State, senators will field those also.

People with iron stomachs and an ability to face challenges with spunk might find it advantageous to speak to a senator in person. During the hours listed previously, a senator may be found in the Student Government Services office. That's on the ground floor of the Union by the automated teller machines. Any senator is happy to be dragged away from "The Young and the Restless" — the official SGA soap — to help a fellow student with a concern or question.

Thursdays at 7 p.m., Senate meets in the Union Big 8 Room. It's a "happening" time, and all students are invited to attend. Not only do Senate members abound, but faculty, staff and administration can be found at meetings. Come, rub elbows — or noses — with people who make the news. Get involved. Student government is just that: government by and for students. For us to do our job right, we need your input. Please don't let us down.

Committee plan spends $1.18 million

New construction to increase sales tax

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee put together a highway plan Wednesday, one that calls for $1.18 billion in new highway construction and would increase the state sales tax a half-percent.

"I think the closeness of the vote shows the exact scenario you're going to have on the (Senate) floor. I wasn't sure we were going to accomplish what we accomplished today. I think we were out some of the committee."

—Sen. Bill Morris

The committee's proposal, approved by a 6-5 vote, calls for spending $535 million less on new construction than Gov. Mike Hayden's comprehensive highway proposal. Hayden's proposal relied heavily on increases in motor fuels taxes and vehicle registration fees and did not increase the 4 percent sales tax.

The committee also voted to propose putting a list of projects in the law, whereas Hayden has proposed putting them in a non-binding resolution as a guide to the state Department of Transportation. The committee's list includes enhanced two-lane highways in southeast Kansas, a "northwest passage" from Wichita to Hutchinson to Hays and improved highways in southwest Kansas.

The committee's chairman, Sen. Bill Morris, R-Wichita, broke a tie to give the plan an endorsement. Agreement came after the committee could not work out a proposal in two meetings last week.

"I think the closeness of the vote shows the exact scenario you're going to have on the (Senate) floor," Morris said. "I wasn't sure we were going to accomplish what we accomplished today. I think we were out some of the committee."

Morris said the committee would use the plan as a guide to make changes in Hayden's plan when the Legislature convenes Monday for a special session. However, committee members also voted to introduce Hayden's plan as a courtesy to the governor.

Hayden said in a statement released by his office he was "encouraged" by the committee's plan but expressed reservations about the proposed sales tax increase. Kathy Peterson, Hayden's press secretary, said the governor sees the program as a "first step."

"I think he does see it as a first step and a bold one at that," Peterson said.

Secretary of Transportation Horace Edwards also praised the committee for its work but said the plan had "very, very serious problems."

"I am very pleased that they got a plan, which shows they can move forward," Edwards said.

What the new plan means/

The committee's plan has a $1.66 billion price tag over the nine-year life of the program. The cost includes new construction, $348 million to keep up KDOT's routine maintenance programs, $133 million for improved maintenance, $5 million in aid to help cities maintain links to state highways and $3 million for increased aid for transportation programs for the handicapped and elderly.

To pay for the program, the state's gasoline and diesel fuel taxes would increase by four cents a gallon, of which a penny would go back to cities and counties. The sales tax would increase a half-percent, and vehicle registration fees would increase by between 35 percent, for trucks, to 100 percent, for passenger cars.

The committee's plan would raise taxes and fees $1.54 billion over nine years, but members said the sales tax increase would stay in effect at least until the program was paid for. In contrast, Hayden's plan would have raised taxes by almost $1.43 billion and have the state issue nearly $1.3 billion in bonds.

Under Hayden's plan, the state would increase its gasoline and diesel fuels taxes by five cents a gallon and its vehicle registration fees by between 50 percent, for trucks, and 100 percent, for passenger cars. Both the fees and taxes would be indexed, or adjusted for inflation.

Hayden's plan also would have built 1,319 miles of new roads, mostly along existing highway corridors using existing rights-of-way. The committee's plan would build about 880 miles of new highways.

All but about 70 miles of the 880 miles would be "Super Two" highways or two-lane roads with 12-foot-wide driving lanes, wide shoulders and occasional passing lanes.

The southeast, southwest and south-central parts of the state would receive two major projects each.

In southeast Kansas, the Kansas 96 corridor from Beaumont to Neodesha would be upgraded to a Super Two, as well as the U.S. 160 corridor from Neodesha through Parsons to the Missouri border southeast of Pittsburg. In addition, U.S. 69 from the Oklahoma border to Louisburg would be upgraded to a Super Two.

In southwest Kansas, U.S. 54 from Kingman to the Oklahoma border would be upgraded to a Super Two, as would U.S. 50 from Bucklin to the Colorado border. Also, K-96 would be upgraded to a four-lane highway between Wichita and Hutchinson, as would K-96 in northeast Wichita.

The state also would build a Super Two from Hutchinson to Great Bend to Hays and upgrade U.S. 75 from Topeka to the Nebraska border to a Super Two.

Edwards criticized the plan because it did not use bond financing. Such a plan, he said, may cause cash flow problems if the intake of revenues does not match expenditures closely.

Hayden said in his statement he was "disappointed" the committee chose to propose a sales tax increase. He has said lawmakers should rely on the fuels taxes and fees because who drive on the roads will pay for them.

That sentiment was echoed by Sen. Dick Bond, R-Overland Park, who voted against the plan. He was joined by Sens. Ross Doyen, R-Concordia; Jim Francisco, D-Mulvane; Leroy Hayden, D-Santana, and Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina.

"In some ways, a sales tax for this purpose is almost a raid on general funds," Bond said.

However, Morris defended the plan, saying the committee's rejection of bond financing and indexing forced it to find sources of revenue other than user fees. Other members voting for the plan were Sens. Robert Frey, R-Liberal; Jeanne Hoferer, R-Topeka; Phil Martin, D-Pittsburg; Joe Norvell, D-Hays, and Dan Thiesen, R-Independence.

Norvell said he could not support bond financing. He and other lawmakers have balked at interest costs in Hayden's plans, projected at $1.4 billion over 20 years.

"I don't like paying interest to banks," Norvell said. "I don't like paying bond attorneys. We get less highway for our money when we do that."

Nation's trade gap grows

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The nation's trade deficit swelled to an all-time high of $39.5 billion from April to June as a rising tide of imports overtook a smaller increase in exports, the government reported Wednesday.

The Commerce Department said the widening in the gap between what America sells abroad and what it purchases followed a shortfall of $38.8 billion in the January-to-March quarter, the previous record for a three-month period.

The first-quarter deficit was revised from the $38.3 billion estimated initially.

The new report showed that, despite a large decline in the value of the dollar which in theory should make U.S. goods more competitive, the deficit worsened in terms of both value and volume.

Imports increased $3.8 billion over the period to $99.5 billion. The volume of imports, which in the first quarter had shown a slight decrease, did a turnaround and rose by 2 percent. This matched a 2 percent increase in prices over the period.

The largest increase in the value of imports was in passenger cars from Asia. Imports of Japanese automobiles were up 15 percent while imports from Korea soared 90 percent, reflecting the popularity of the Hyundai line.

All non-petroleum imports increased during the period by 3 percent to $89.5 billion. Petroleum imports rose 15 percent, to $10 billion.

Analysts saw the report as fresh evidence that the U.S. trade deficit is not showing any improvement, even when import volumes are taken into account.

"On a nominal basis, there is no turn in the trade deficit, simply no turn. That potentially spells trouble for the U.S. economy, although not right away," said Allen Sinai, chief economist for Shearson Lehman Brothers of New York.

Sinai said one factor is that foreign manufacturers are not raising their prices to reflect the weaker dollar fully, taking smaller profits instead. At the same time, U.S. companies are not reducing their overseas prices to take advantage of the more competitive dollar, but in many cases are raising them, Sinai said.

"U.S. companies are going for greater profits instead of more market share, and that's a big mistake," he said.

The dollar is worth only 40 to 50 percent of what it was worth in mid-1985. But despite this depreciation, export prices in the second quarter of 1987 actually rose 1 percent, Wednesday's report showed.

Exports, overall, increased in the April-June quarter by $3 billion to $60 billion. Analysts said this was a bright spot in the otherwise gloomy report. Exports had decreased just slightly in the first quarter to $56.99 billion, down from $57.02 billion in the last three months of 1986.

Some analysts argued that, despite the widening of the trade gap, if recent inflation is taken into account, the trade figures actually show a slight improvement.

Senate highway plan's major provisions

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Following are the major provisions of the highway plan the Senate Transportation and Utilities endorsed Wednesday:

The pricetag of the program would be $1.66 billion over nine years, of which $1.18 billion would be for new construction. The increases in taxes and vehicle registration fees would raise $1.54 billion over the life of the program, but committee members said a proposed increase in the sales tax would stay in effect until the program was paid for.

Major Highway Projects

■ A "Super Two" highway from Beaumont to Neodesha along the Kansas 96 corridor and from Neodesha through Parsons to the Missouri border southeast of Pittsburg along the U.S. 160 corridor. A Super Two is a two-lane highway with 12-foot-wide driving lanes, wide shoulders and occasional passing lanes. Miles: 164. Estimated cost: $226 million.

■ A Super Two from the Missouri border north to Louisburg along the U.S. 69 corridor. Miles: 130. Estimated cost: $79 million.

■ The "northeast circumvental" in Wichita, a four-lane limited access freeway from the K-96 bypass from Kellogg to Interstate 235. Miles: 10. Estimated cost: $95 million.

■ The "northwest passage." First, a four-lane expressway from Maize to Hutchinson along the K-96 corridor. Then, a Super Two diagonal from Hutchinson to Great Bend and from Great Bend to Hays. Miles: 150. Estimated cost: $322 million.

■ A Super Two from Kingman to the Oklahoma border southwest of Liberal along the U.S. 54 corridor. Miles: 192. Estimated cost: $129 million.

■ A Super Two from Bucklin to the Colorado border along the U.S. 50 corridor. Miles: 149. Estimated cost: $78 million.

■ A four-lane expressway from Kechi to El Dorado along the K-254 corridor. Miles: 21. Estimated cost: $61 million.

■ A Super Two from Topeka to the Nebraska border along the U.S. 75 corridor. Miles: 62. Estimated cost: $42 million.

Other Spending

■ Increased financing for KDOT's normal operations and routine maintenance for the nine-year life of the program, $348 million.

■ Increased general aid to cities and counties, $193 million.

■ Local projects designed to ease traffic congestion in urban areas across the state, 28 projects, $150 million.

■ Improvements in maintenance of existing roads, $133 million.

Revenue Source

■ A half-percent increase in the state's 4 percent sales tax. It would raise $900 million over nine years, of which $72 million would go to cities and counties. The increase would take effect Jan. 1, 1988.

ELIGIBILITY FOR CARE AT LAFENE STUDENT HEALTH CENTER

1. Health fees are established upon the recommendation of the Student Senate with approval by the Board of Regents.
2. All students who are enrolled and attending classes during a regular semester or summer session who have paid health fees are eligible for care.
3. Those enrolled in Special Courses, for varying periods of time, who have made previous arrangements for health care coverage at Lafene are eligible for care. (Lists of these students must be furnished prior to being seen at Lafene.)
4. Only students, who have paid the health fee, may elect to have their spouse also covered at Lafene; however, they must pay the spouse fee within 10 days of the time their own health fees are paid. (Children cannot be seen.)
5. Emergency care, prior to referral, will be given anyone who comes in.
6. Students enrolled in 6 hours or less, electing not to pay the health fee during the Fall or Spring semesters, who wish to be seen, will be charged $20 for each office visit. This charge continues until the full health fee has been exceeded, then that student will be afforded the same privileges as the regular fee paying student for the remainder of that semester.
7. Students who were enrolled in the Spring and pre-enrolled for the Fall semester but not attending summer school may pay $15 and be eligible for care during the summer. This fee may be paid within 30 days prior to summer registration and ends the day classes begin. A late fee of $20 will be accepted for the remainder of the summer.
8. Health fees are good until 12 o'clock the night the next semester begins.

NOTE: In addition to the above mentioned fees, there are minimal charges for certain supplies and services and the charges are subject to change without prior notice.

Africans continue strike

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The National Union of Mineworkers voted Wednesday to continue a 17-day-old strike, rejecting an offer by the top mining companies that slightly improved benefits but not wages.

A grim-faced union general-secretary Cyril Ramaphosa read a statement prepared by union leaders at a two-hour meeting that followed daylong voting by thousands of black miners on the offer from the Chamber of Mines, which represents the top mining companies.

"The telex that we transmitted to the chamber was to inform them that our entire membership on the striking mines has decided not to accept the chamber's offer," Ramaphosa said.

Hundreds of thousands of miners voted by show of hands in hostels and unions halls in South Africa's longest and costliest mine strike.

"The reaction of the workers has shown that they are rejecting the offer," National Union of Mineworkers President James Motlasi had said earlier in an interview in western Transvaal province. "The ball is in the chamber's court."

The management offer would have slightly improved death benefits and holiday pay, but it did not address the union's demand for a 30 percent wage hike, the main reason the strike was called.

Ramaphosa said union leadership did not recommend approval or rejection of the offer.

The union planned to reply Wednesday night to the management offer.

Union officials say 340,000 miners are on strike at 45 gold and coal mines in the biggest legal walkout in the country's history. The chamber puts the number of strikers at 210,000 at 29 mines.

Representatives of the union and the chamber met for four hours Tuesday in the first contract negotiations since the strike began Aug. 9.

"The union negotiating team is clearly not happy that the issue of wages was not discussed," Ramaphosa told a news conference Tuesday night.

The chamber offered to increase by 10 percent the pay miners receive when they are on their annual leave, but they would not get any additional vacation days, which the union had demanded. Miners receive only a portion of their regular pay when they are on vacation.

The chamber also offered to raise death benefits from two times a miner's annual salary to four times that amount, by increasing the contributions of both the employees and management.

The union wanted death benefits increased to five times a miner's annual pay. The union made no calls for increased vacation pay.

The chamber also ignored union demands for danger pay, an increase in annual leave to 30 days from the current average of 14 to 21 days, and recognition of the anniversary of the 1976 Soweto riots, June 16, as a paid holiday.

The chamber had said that if the union did not accept the offer by Wednesday night, it would be withdrawn.

The chamber repeatedly said it will not negotiate a further increase beyond raises of between 15 percent and 23.4 percent which it implemented July 1. The annual inflation rate in South Africa is 17 percent.

Anglo American Corp., the country's biggest gold producer and the enterprise worst hit by the strike, suspended its back-to-work ultimatums until union balloting was completed. Anglo fired about 7,000 strikers last week and threatened an additional 30,000 workers with dismissal.

K-State After Hours gives opportunities

By The Collegian Staff

For people with daytime obligations, the K-State After Hours program offers the opportunity to begin or further a college education.

Enrollment for the program, which offers classes beginning no earlier than 4:30 p.m., began Aug. 24 and concludes today from 4-7 p.m. in the Union.

K-State has been offering evening courses for several years, but last spring was the first semester the courses were presented as a package, said Peg Wherry, coordinator of the enrollment program.

She said the program offers a wide selection of courses that apply toward a variety of degrees. Virtually all the evening courses offered are listed in the daytime line schedule.

The classes are usually held one night a week for 2 1/2 to three hours or twice a week for about one hour.

The program has had steady enrollment increases, said Wherry.

This may be due in part to After Hours' informational meetings called "college nights." They are designed to help people interested in continuing their education to take the first step.

"The college nights are similar to college nights in high school," Wherry said, "but they only inform the participants of programs at K-State."

Students taking daytime classes who want to enroll in evening courses follow normal enrollment procedures, she said.

A WEEK AT KANSAS STATE

See ordering information below

At 12:01 a.m. on a Sunday morning in October 1986, a camera shutter was clicked. What happened during the next 192 hours was called AWAKS (A Week at Kansas State).

Former Kansas State University photographers were given the opportunity to return to campus to make pictures of college life in the '80s as it existed for one week during October.

Kansas State has numerous alumni photographers in positions of prominence throughout the country. Some 30 alumni and nearly 15 current student photographers made up the AWAKS shooting team. The result of exposing 1,900 rolls of black-and-white and color film with more than 68,000 exposures is a 10-by-14-inch coffee-table book to be published in September 1987. You can relive the experience of attending college in the 1980s at the nation's first land-grant institution through the pages of this special edition.

Eldridge won't testify in fraud case

By The Associated Press

Trial continues, moves into day 2

TOPEKA — Lorna Anderson Eldridge declined in a statement she gave New England Mutual Life Insurance Co. two years ago to discuss the death of her first husband, Martin Anderson, but confirmed she had discussed having him killed when she pleaded guilty to soliciting his death.

Eldridge will not testify in a case being heard in federal district court here to determine whether the company must pay off on an insurance policy Anderson bought in the spring of 1983, six months before he was killed.

However, statements she gave to the company and to the court in August 1985 were read into the record of the trial Wednesday, the second day of testimony in a case that will determine if New England Mutual must pay four Anderson children proceeds from the policy.

In a deposition given to the company when she made claim for the proceeds to be paid to her, Eldridge declined to answer any questions about the death of Martin Anderson, saying it might tend to incriminate her.

However, in transcripts of the proceedings when she pleaded guilty to two counts of solicitation in connection with Anderson's death, Eldridge confirmed she met with Thomas

Bird, a former Emporia minister, and Darrell and Dan Carter, two Emporia brothers, on several occasions in 1983 to discuss ways to kill her husband so she could marry Bird, her lover.

She said in those pleadings that she agreed to give Dan Carter, who then lived in Emporia, $5,000 to be paid to another man who had agreed to find someone who would kill Anderson. She said in that statement that Bird gave her the $5,000. The plot never materialized, other testimony has shown.

Geary County Sheriff William Deppish testified Tuesday that Lorna Anderson told him the night of her husband's death that Bird was the man in a ski mask who shot Martin Anderson to death in a field south of Manhattan in November 1983.

However, his testimony has not been corroborated by any other witnesses at this trial, and Bird has never been charged with Martin Anderson's death. Eldridge was charged with murder earlier this year in the death of her husband. No trial has been scheduled.

Asked during his examination whether Lorna Anderson identified the gunman on the night Martin died, Deppish replied, "She advised us that it was the Rev. Tom Bird."

Deppish also said Lorna Anderson denied she plotted with Bird to kill Anderson at that time, but acknowledged they had laid other plans for having him killed.

Also read into the record Wednesday was Eldridge's statement of November 1986 in which she waived her claim to the insurance policy proceeds and asked that they be given to her four daughters by Anderson.

The plaintiff insurance company, which wants the jury to find the insurance policy null and void because of Eldridge's alleged role in Anderson's death, is scheduled to call its final witness Thursday, after calling seven witnesses Tuesday and Wednesday.

Since the final company witness was not yet available, defense attorney Edward Hund of Wichita, who is representing Eldridge and the Anderson girls in the trial, called his first three witnesses Wednesday.

Hund called Jerry Briggs, an Emporia insurance agent for another company who sold the Andersons an insurance policy in 1980; Loren Slater of Hutchinson, Eldridge's father and grandfather of the four girls, and Steve Anderson of Lawrence, the dead man's brother who is chairman of the Department of Music and Dance at the University of Kansas.

Briggs said he sold Martin Anderson a consolidated policy that provided $134,000 worth of insurance for the entire Anderson family in 1980, and that Martin provided all the information needed to process the application. He said Lorna was not involved.

Briggs testified he thought Anderson believed deeply in the importance of insurance as a means of providing financial security for his family.

Slater, a loan officer for Hutchinson National Bank, testified that Martin Anderson had taken out 10 to 12 loans from the bank during the years of his marriage to Lorna and that each time he had purchased credit life insurance.

"Marty always wanted to be sure his estate or Lorna wouldn't have to pay off the loans," Slater said.

Steve Anderson told of discussing life insurance with Martin in the early 1980s, with his brother seeking advice on the wisdom of consolidating policies.

"Marty was always one to have life insurance and to be concerned about it," Steve Anderson said.

Hund contended in his opening statement Tuesday that Martin Anderson was a firm believer in insurance, that he purchased the policy in dispute himself and owned it himself and that any involvement by Lorna in his death is irrelevant to the issue of whether it was a valid policy.

Terrance Crebs, New England Mutual's attorney, argued Eldridge instigated obtaining the last policy on Anderson's life in 1983, then plotted his death to gain the proceeds from that policy. That constitutes fraud and should render the policy void, he said.

However, a claims processor for New England Mutual conceded under cross examination Wednesday that Lorna didn't apply for the insurance policy in controversy.

The statements of John E. Seoford of Boston, who handles claims for the company, came during the second day of testimony.

General Motors plant closes; loss of 4,000 jobs estimated

By The Associated Press

NORWOOD, Ohio — The last car moved down the assembly line here Wednesday marking the end of a 64-year-old tie between General Motors Corp. and the city, and the end of more than 4,000 jobs.

"People are having to think right now what they're doing with their lives. They're having to cope with the shock," said Cleon Montgomery, a United Auto Workers union official.

"They're really emotional. They're having to say goodbye to friends, realizing they're not going to say hi in the morning," said Montgomery, who is helping direct a job retraining center.

The last car, a Chevrolet Camaro, was expected to be finished Wednesday evening, said GM spokeswoman Betsy Hayhow.

The closing is the first of 11 complete or partial plant closings nationwide that GM announced in November 1986, which will cost the jobs of 29,000 employees. Company officials said the closings are part of a $10 billion reorganization to cut operating costs and shut down excess production capacity.

The Norwood plant was the largest employer in this Cincinnati suburb of 26,000 people, which already has cut its budget and laid off some of its own workers. The city received $2.6 million a year, or 28 percent of its budget, from a tax on the GM payroll.

GM has guaranteed that the city will get the full amount of payroll tax revenue this year, but it rejected city and school district requests for additional, transitional funds.

GM plans to close another southwestern Ohio auto plant, the Fairfield parts stamping plant, by 1989. That will cost 2,500 more jobs.

Douglas Smith, 45, a 23-year Norwood plant employee, shook hands and said goodbye to his friends Wednesday morning at the UAW Local 674 hall, a block from the 60-acre plant site. Smith's wife, Elnora, a car painter for 11 years, is also losing her job at the Norwood plant.

"No one ever believed that this would ever happen, with an organization this big," Smith said. "My expectations were, if I lived long enough, to retire with GM."

The plant is due for inspection today and then about 750 of its hourly workers will continue working for approximately two months to remove equipment and prepare the facility for sale. GM hopes to sell the site to a developer.

Under GM's contract with the UAW, eligible hourly plant workers can receive as much as 95 percent of their take-home pay — when combined with state unemployment compensation — for up to two years in supplemental unemployment benefits.

County pays medical bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Attorney General Robert T. Stephan held in a legal opinion made public Wednesday that Shawnee County must pay the medical bills of a man arrested by the Kansas Highway Patrol after he was injured at the end of a high-speed chase on the Kansas Turnpike.

Stephan said a two-year-old state Supreme Court decision in a Sedgwick County case, determining who has to pay the bills of indigent offenders, applied in this case.

In that decision, made in July 1985, the court said Sedgwick County was liable for more than $19,000 in medical bills for George Rainey because he was arrested on state charges after being wounded in a shootout with law officers in Wichita. The shootout followed the slaying of a Highway Patrol trooper on the turnpike in July 1981.

If Rainey had been arrested on city charges, the city of Wichita would have had to pay the medical bills, the court held.

Stephan said the same thing applies in the case of Michael W. Cork, who was arrested last May 14 after his car crashed at a Topeka exit. The Highway Patrol troopers gave chase after Cork failed to pay for gasoline at the Topeka service area, and a check revealed his car had been stolen in Tempe, Ariz.

Cork was arrested at the scene, then transported to a local hospital for treatment of facial lacerations. A trooper accompanied him to the hospital, then transferred him to the Shawnee County jail where he was held on state charges.

Stephan said it was immaterial whether the Highway Patrol or local law enforcement officials arrested Cork, because the state charges were the controlling factor under the Supreme Court ruling. If city charges had been brought against him, the city of Topeka would have had to foot the bill.

"Medical costs incurred by an indigent offender before or at the time of arrest are to be borne by the county if the offender is subsequently charged with a violation of state law," Stephan wrote.

Compromise eludes gulf states despite attempts at peace

By The Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Iran accused the United States and Arab nations Wednesday of trying to impose an "ignominious peace," and rejected any compromise in its 7-year-old war with Iraq.

Sandstorms swept the Persian Gulf, drastically reducing visibility. Shipping executives puzzled over the whereabouts of another convoy of Kuwaiti tankers and U.S. Navy escorts, or whether it was underway at all.

The comments by Prime Minister Hussein Musavi of Iran appeared to be a reaction to an Arab League ultimatum Tuesday that Iran accept a July 20 cease-fire resolution by the U.N. Security Council by Sept. 20 or risk a mass break in relations by Arab nations.

His remarks, reported by Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, made no direct reference to the demand.

In the United States, deputy State Department spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley said Wednesday: "Unless the Iranians officially indicate their acceptance very soon, we believe the U.N. Security Council must move ahead to consider enforcement measures."

U.S. delegates are consulting with other members of the 15-nation council about imposing sanctions on Iran for failing to comply with the resolution, which the Reagan administration shepherded through the council.

Iraq has not attacked shipping in the gulf since the resolution was passed. Its news agency praised the Arab League action and called Wednesday for a boycott of Iran that would force it "to accept a comprehensive and lasting peace" in line with the U.N. resolution.

President Saddam Hussein started the war with an invasion of Iran in September 1980, but has been seeking a negotiated settlement for several years.

The Iraqi news agency said Hussein and his ruling Revolutionary Command Council "called on Arab countries to further toughen the joint Arab stand against the Iranian aggression."

Iran is ethnically Persian, not Arab. It shares the Moslem religion with the Arabs, but Iranians belong to the minority Shiite sect that has been at odds with the predominant Sunni branch of Islam for 1,300 years.

IRNA quoted Musavi as saying the United States, by intervening in the gulf, seeks to impose "an ignominious peace" on Iran "in collaboration with Arab reactionaries."

"We will never agree to such a peace," he said. "Even a psychological war cannot make us accept a compromise to the benefit of the United States."

Officials examine cockpit discipline

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With pilot error developing as the most likely culprit, the recent Northwest Airlines crash is raising questions about cockpit discipline and how flight crews battle complacency amid highly repetitive routines.

Aviation psychologists have been concerned about flight crew coordination in commercial airliners for years, including increasing evidence of a danger of complacency in cockpits that are highly automated and where critical chores become a matter of habit.

Federal aviation accident investigators say more than 80 percent of the airline accidents involve human error. About 40 percent of the time the mistake is made in the cockpit, according to statistics from the National Transportation Safety Board.

A rash of embarrassing miscues, including two that nearly caused air tragedies, brought attention to Delta Air Lines earlier this summer.

Investigators believe the likely reason for the Aug. 16 crash of Northwest Flight 255 on takeoff from Detroit, which killed 156 people, was the failure of the flight crew to properly set the wing flaps, a basic chore of flying, critical to get the plane safely airborne.

Why are such mistakes made? The Federal Aviation Administration is bringing together chief pilots of the nation's airlines for a meeting Thursday in Kansas City, Mo., to discuss the problems, which have been the topic of aviation literature for years.

"We must return to the basics — the basics that put all of us in the left (captain's) seat, in a word, our professionalism," FAA Administrator Allan McArtor recently told an Air Line Pilots Association safety seminar.

Since coming to the FAA last month, McArtor has promised a "top-to-bottom" review of pilot training to reduce the likelihood of careless mistakes.

"The reasons (for a pilot mistake) are probably as extensive as the reason any person makes a mistake — a distraction, fatigue, task overload or stress. It can be complacency. It can be inexperience," said Clay Foushee, a NASA psychologist who specializes in human factors in aviation.

If the theory that the Northwest pilots neglected to set their plane's wing flaps holds true, it will not be the first time a pilot has forgotten to perform one of the most basic pre-flight tasks in aviation, according to reports filed with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Since 1981, there have been at least seven incidents reported through NASA's Aviation Safety Reporting System in which flaps were improperly set for takeoff. In six cases, warning alarms sounded and the takeoffs were aborted.

In another incident, the pilot noticed the wrong setting too late, but adjusted his takeoff speed and lifted off successfully.

Human errors in the cockpit also seem to have little relationship to experience, according to specialists.

Two of the Delta incidents this year involved senior captains.

Bonn speeds arms agreement

Reagan anticipates Soviet conciliation

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — President Reagan on Wednesday applauded West Germany's willingness to destroy its Pershing 1-A missiles and declared that the Soviet Union must not "erect additional barriers" to a superpower agreement on the global elimination of intermediate-range missiles.

In a speech to the Town Hall of California, a civic organization, Reagan also challenged the Soviet Union to bring a spirit of "glasnost" or openness to its military affairs and said past U.S.-Soviet arms pacts have been "too often violated by the U.S.S.R."

The address, billed in advance by White House officials as a major assessment of U.S.-Soviet relations, came as Chancellor Helmut Kohl said in Bonn that West Germany will destroy rather than modernize its Pershing missiles if the superpowers scrap all their medium- and shorter-range missiles in the Intermediate Nuclear Force, or INF, class.

The Soviet Union has said it would not sign a disarmament agreement unless it includes the 72 Pershing 1-A missiles, which are owned by West Germany but have nuclear warheads controlled by the United States.

"We can wrap up an agreement on intermediate-range nuclear missiles promptly," Reagan said. "There are still issues to be worked out. Our delegation in Geneva has already pointed the way to simplifying veri-cation requirements now that we have agreed to the total elimination of U.S. and Soviet INF missiles."

But the president, without mentioning the name of his Soviet counterpart, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, called on the Kremlin to smooth the way toward an arms accord.

He said the United States has "repeatedly pointed out that the last-minute demand by the Soviets concerning West German Pershing 1-A missiles was without foundation."

"Earlier today, Chancellor Kohl removed even this artificial obstacle from consideration," Reagan said. "We are therefore hopeful that the Soviet Union will demonstrate that there is substance behind the rhetoric they have repeated so often of late — that they genuinely want a stabilizing INF agreement."

"If so, they will move to meet our proposals constructively rather than erect additional barriers to agreement."

A senior administration official said before the speech that "there was absolutely no pressure" brought to bear on the Bonn government by Washington.

The president's speech appeared to be a new attempt to take the offensive in the long-running public relations struggle with the Kremlin. Gorbachev has scored some major victories over Reagan, with recent polls in Europe showing that a majority of people believe the Soviet leader — rather than Reagan — is a champion of peace.

The president pointed out that it was the United States — not the Kremlin — which originally proposed elimination of medium-range missiles in Europe and a 50 percent cut in strategic weapons.

In his speech, Reagan reiterated his litany of guideposts the administration will use to measure Soviet intentions toward the United States. These include the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan, a cessation of Soviet attempts to impose its system on other countries, destruction of the Berlin Wall and an improvement of human rights from within and greater independence for Eastern European satellites.

Brian Ritenour, left, senior in marketing, and Charles Tucker, senior in apparel and textile marketing, hold Kris Tulp, senior in journalism and mass communications, during practice Wednesday. The squad recently won two awards at the UCA College Cheerleading Camp.

Squad's practice pays off

By Jeff Rapp
Sports Editor

There is a group of athletes at K-State who will run, jump, tumble, fly high through the air and even roam into the stands to lift your spirits and entertain you.

Those athletes are the hard-working Wildcats cheerleaders and yell leaders.

"Anymore, cheerleading is not just getting out and kicking and entertaining. Especially with as much practice time that goes into it," said Kris Tulp, head cheerleader and senior in journalism and mass communications.

Tulp said while cheerleading has become an entertainment-oriented activity, this year's squad will be primarily concerned with crowd motivation.

"Cheerleading started to get away from what it really should be, which is just performing for the crowd. This year, we're really going to stress getting back into the crowd and getting them going for the team.

"It's not going to be just us out there putting on a show. This year we'll even be running up into the stands trying to get the fans on their feet and yelling for the team," Tulp said.

The cheerleading squad's new sponsor, Scott Johnson, assistant instructor of animal science, has been involved with the K-State marching band for quite some time, so the band and cheerleaders should be working as more of a unit this year, Tulp said.

With the inherent danger from being thrown high into the air and depending on fellow cheerleaders to catch you, working as a unit seems to be what cheerleading is all about.

Tulp said when the squad attended the Universal Cheerleading Association summer camp, she noticed quite a contrast in safety concerns between the Wildcats squad and other squads.

"We have a tradition where the guys just don't ever let the girls hit the ground. They will catch us no matter what.

"But it's just unbelievable when you go to camp, and there are girls hitting the ground right and left. It makes me so nervous, because I've never been dropped. I've fallen out of things, but I've never been dropped because we (K-State) are so safe," Tulp said.

Apparently, the concerns for safety and crowd motivation - along with a rigorous practice schedule - paid off for the squad at the UCA camp just before classes began this fall.

The squad placed in two of three categories in the top division (for NCAA Division I universities) at the camp this session, which is the best a K-State team has ever achieved at the camp.

The Wildcat team placed fifth in the cheering category and fourth in the fight song category in the top division, which included such schools as North Carolina State University, the University of Alabama and Louisiana State University.

baseball Pat Tabler.

With two outs in the eighth and a runner on second, Molitor hit a slow grounder that third baseman Brook Jacoby charged and threw to Tabler. First base umpire Mike Reilly originally called Molitor out, but ruled him safe when Tabler bobbled the ball. Jacoby's throw beat Molitor to the bag by about two steps. Robin Yount then popped up to Tabler to end the inning.

Molitor was the first batter Farrell ever faced in the majors, Aug. 18 in Cleveland, and Molitor singled.

Molitor's 39-game hitting streak was the fifth-longest in modern major league history. Molitor was trying to tie Ty Cobb for the fourth-longest.

To prepare for the camp, Tulp said the team practiced for four days, averaging about four to five hours per day. Then it was off to Kansas City to teach some high school cheerleaders in a mini-camp and to put on a performance, which a large sportswear company sponsored.

The team then traveled to the site of the UCA camp in Memphis, Tenn., where it practiced from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. daily for five days. Now that school has started, the team practices two hours every weekday to prepare for the football season.

With the constant practicing and traveling, Tulp said close, rewarding friendships have evolved between squad members.

"We can talk to each other about anything. Because we work with each other every day, we're closer to each other than a lot of people in our families that we never see. We see each other every single day, and we know each other at our very worst and our very best," Tulp said.

During the streak, that started July 16 against California, Molitor was 68-for-168, a .405 average. For the season, Molitor is batting .365 but does not have enough plate appearances to qualify among the leaders.

Molitor's streak was the longest the majors since Cincinnati's Pete Rose hit in a National League-record 44 consecutive games in 1978. The last time an American League player had a longer streak than Molitor's was in 1941 when the New York Yankees' Joe DiMaggio set the major-league record of 56 games.

Nine times during the streak Molitor got a hit in his first plate appearance. Three times during the streak Molitor kept the streak alive with a hit in his final at-bat.

Widenhofer claims Missouri improved

By The Associated Press

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Is this the year the sleeping giant finally stirs?

It had better be, says a vocal segment of Missouri alumni who are increasingly unhappy with their football program's second-class citizenship and absolutely narrow minded about Woody Widenhofer's 4-18 log as head coach.

A favorite topic of conversation among Missourians this summer, besides the possibility of another Cards-Royals World Series, was how many games Widenhofer must win.

The coach, professing confidence in his third Missouri team and its newly installed wishbone offense, meets the subject with candor and humor.

"Which starter am I happiest to have back this year? Me," he told Big Eight Skywriters Wednesday. But he insisted he bears no ill will toward any of his critics.

"I don't think my job is in jeopardy right now," he said. "I really believe Missouri should never be worse than No. 3 in the Big Eight. We've got good facilities, we've got good location. Once we get back on track, Missouri should never be worse than third."

The amiable, mustachioed Widenhofer spent most of his career as a defensive assistant for the four-time Super Bowl champion Pittsburgh Steelers. Inheriting a talent-impooverished squad from the previous regime, he announced he would rebuild with a pro-style offense featuring a drop-back passer.

Switching to the wishbone is a sign of his new-found wisdom, he frankly admits.

"If you'd told me two years ago that I'd be involved with a wishbone offense, I would have told you you're crazy," he said.

Widenhofer is calling his new offense the "flexbone," because he plans to occasionally split the two halfbacks out wide and use them as pass receivers.

One major reason for going to the run-oriented "bone" is junior quarterback Ronnie Cameron. In addition, the Tigers seem blessed with running backs, including Darrell Wallace, who has gained almost 1,900 yards the past two seasons, senior Robert Delpino and super freshman Tony VanZant.

Sidelined his first season by a knee injury, VanZant, the most highly sought prep runner in the nation two years ago, is "about 90 percent," Widenhofer said.

"Running back and defensive secondary will be the strength of this team," he said. A transfer from SMU, John Stollenwerck, is challenging Cameron, Widenhofer said.

Widenhofer admits these past two years have been a humbling learning experience.

"It's a lot tougher than I thought it was going to be," he said. "A lot tougher. I just didn't know, for one thing, how many good players you need to win in college. And I didn't know how much speed was a factor. In college football, you're dealing with people who are still growing, still maturing."

How good will the Tigers be?

"I think we're good enough to win more games than we lose this year. The idea is progress, to make progress," Widenhofer said.

"Which starter am I happiest to have back this year? Me."

—Woody Widenhofer

His first Missouri team in 1985 limped home with a 1-10 mark. Last year the Tigers lost several close ones — and also lost to Oklahoma by a team-record margin of 77-0 — and finished 3-8.

"That's progress. You're winning more each year," he said. "I think we're good enough to win more games than we lose. Ability-wise, I think we're better than Kansas, Kansas State and Iowa State."

The Sept. 12 date against Baylor could be more crucial than most season openers.

"I would never say that one ball game makes a season. But we have some ability on this football team, in a lot of areas. I would say Baylor is a very important game for us. This football team needs two things. No. 1, to stay healthy at certain positions, and No. 2, win a game."

Widenhofer promises his 1987 Tigers will bear little resemblance to the 1-10 squad of 1985.

"This team is 45 points better than my first team two years ago," he said. "It's better because of speed." While he may be uncertain of VanZant and how quickly his players will adjust to their new offense, Widenhofer can be certain of a few key operatives.

One is Wallace, the overlooked fireplug who is probably much better than his lack of press clippings would indicate. The compact Kentuckian burst upon the Big Eight in 1985 with 1,120 yards.

Stan's a believer

A.M. Sports

BILL LANG
Sports
Writer

You can hear it everywhere and from everyone on the football field or connected to the football team in some manner. Stan Parrish is a blessing and a shot in the arm to K-State football and to the University itself. Sure, his first season was a dismal one. A 2-9 record doesn't look impressive, and it's hard to get support from the fans when the record books show a very poor record down through the years.

Remember last year when K-State lost 17-0 to a tough Division II team by the name of Northern Iowa? Let me refresh - or should I say bring back? - some bad memories.

The whole mood of the campus turned sour, and a lot more Wildcats fans started wearing bags over their heads.

Not a good sign for job security, huh?

Stan Parrish is a believer, though, and would not give in to the losing tradition.

"The loss to Northern Iowa set us back a year," Parrish said at the Big Eight Skywriters news conference last Thursday.

He has, however, put last season behind him with a big heave-ho and has started out again with an attitude that would rival David's when he faced Goliath.

This attitude of "never say die, and give it everything you've got" has woven its way into the players and the practice sessions.

"We have to show the younger players how to be leaders, and with everybody wanting to be leaders we could have a very strong team," said senior fullback Rick Lewis.

Parrish admitted he had some confidence after his initial win in KSU Stadium, but the next game was an eye-opener because the 'Cats lost 56-10 to Oklahoma.

"I thought we were heading in the right direction after getting that initial win over Western Illinois (35-7). It was good for us, and it was important."

"Then we went into Oklahoma. Talk about culture shock," Parrish said.

Parrish added that there are some must-win games this year, which would help the future fortunes in KSU Stadium.

"This year we have to win the opener and win the KU and Missouri games," he said, and added, "It'll help us when it comes time to recruit."

And Parrish has seen some progress made, as have some of the players.

"When I first came here, Coach (Jim) Dickey was in charge and he was a hard man to approach," Maurice Henry said. "He was hard to talk to in that it seemed the only way to talk to him was through his coaches. Parrish isn't like that at all."

"With Parrish, he'll check on you every day to see how you're doing on and off the field and to just make sure everything is going fine. He really cares about his players, and that relates into a better team attitude overall."

Tennis tryout announced

K-State women's tennis coach Steve Bietau announced there will be open tryouts this season for the team.

Bietau has scheduled the tryouts for Saturday, Aug. 29, at 8:30 a.m.

The tryouts will be held at the tennis courts adjacent to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Area.

Any student interested should contact Bietau by today at 5 p.m. by calling him at his office telephone number in Ahearn Field House, 532-7198.

Wheat production could outnumber preceding years

By The Collegian Staff

The number of hard red winter wheat bushels produced in Kansas this summer is expected to top figures from previous years.

"We don't have the exact figures yet, but it should be close to 370 million bushels," said Becky Koch, communications director for the Kansas Wheat Commission. Approximately 336.6 million bushels were produced in 1986.

Figures listed by the Kansas Agricultural Statistics office for Riley County in 1986 showed production of 672,900 bushels.

"There were 24,800 acres harvested, so that's 27.1 bushels per acre. That's not real good," said Koch.

The mild winter weather and wet spring and fall probably contributed to the low figure, said Koch. Figures for 1987 will be released in the next month.

For the second year in a row, Japan was the leading buyer of U.S. wheat, purchasing 122 million bushels.

Approximately one-third of that amount was hard red winter. The remaining was a mixture of other varieties, the wheat commission released.

Egypt was the second-leading buyer, purchasing more than 93 million bushels.

Policy

David DePue, executive director of the Kansas Council on Vocational Education, said any change in Kansas' admissions policy would discriminate against older students, military veterans and vocational education students.

DePue said he is concerned about the 42 percent of high school students who are in general curriculums and the 19 percent who are in vocational education curriculums and the effect of a closed admission policy on them.

He said he would "challenge the universities to make excellent students out of mediocre students."

"We need to focus on excellence, and if necessary initiate entrance requirements for specific programs to hold down admissions."

Mark Tallman, director of legislative affairs for Associated Students of Kansas, said Kansas must determine whether changing the admissions policy would truly save money, whether it has a higher college dropout rate than states with closed admission policies, and what effect a closed policy would have on historically under-prepared students.

"Before changing the admissions policy, we must be sure that disadvantages of the policy outweigh these benefits, or that another system can result in even greater benefits," Tallman said.

"The lottery is a self-funding agency," Zogleman said. "We have a product that we can sell and make enough profit to be self-supporting." The loan is to be paid back to the State after the sale of tickets and the lottery game actually begins.

The logo for the lottery was recently unveiled. It was designed by a Wichita advertising firm. The design shows a large letter L in white on a gold and blue background, with the blue portion of the background simulating scratch marks across an instant winner lottery ticket.

CIA agents in Portugal that the aircraft contained Hawk missiles which were part of an arms-for-hostages swap with Iran.

The agents told the committees they immediately sent an "eyes only" cable to Duane "Dewey" Clarridge, then head of covert operations for the CIA's European division, relaying Secord's revelation.

According to the documents, four witnesses are available to testify the cable was in fact sent — the two agents, a State Department official in Lisbon and the CIA employee handling the cable.

The committees say that two cables are missing: the one telling Clarridge about the missile shipment and a cable from Clarridge telling the CIA office in Europe why it was to try to obtain landing rights for the Israeli plane.

The cables are among 78 messages supposed to have been sent to Clarridge at agency headquarters in Langley, Va., from the CIA station, through a special "privacy channel."

In his testimony, George said there was no way he could have missed a cable quoting Secord as saying, "we are trading missiles for hostages."

"I promise you, no matter how many cables we send in and out over a month, that one would have grabbed me," he said.

Constructing the facility could take as long as 10 years, Muir said. Potentially the plans include recreational and housing areas as well as industrial.

Park benefits could include government contracting, he said. Also, the opportunity would be available for many professors to become involved in private enterprise.

"It enhances both sides if you have successful industries associated with successful professors," Muir said.

Hayden appeals to people for support

Highway to benefit all, he says

By Allison Neely
Staff Writer

JUNCTION CITY — Gov. Mike Hayden promoted his highway construction plans at a Chamber of Commerce meeting here Thursday. It was his thirty-third town meeting on a whistle-stop tour through Kansas.

The highway plans are the result of a seven-month study by an 18-member task force appointed by the governor. The areas examined were the entire highway system in Kansas as it now exists, and the current and future needs of Kansans.

Funding for the highway proposal would be taken directly from user-related fees with the exception of bonds, which will be sold as needed and will constitute 20 percent of the total funds.

"As a Kansan, all of us, no matter whether we're from east or west, whether we're from a small town or big city, we all have the same vested interest," Hayden said. "Through Kansas' history, users have paid most of the cost of our roads."

The proposed plan calls for a three-fold approach to the problems: maintenance of the roads and bridges, new road construction and aid to the cities and counties.

According to Hayden, the current highway system is inadequately funded and, if allowed to continue, will become bankrupt within 22 months.

"The current system of maintenance is such that it allows us to repaint the steel girders on bridges every 96 years," he said.

The rate of bridge replacement in Kansas is three to four per year. Because of the poor condition many state bridges are in, it is necessary to replace 30 to 40 per year, he said. The funding for this work is not available.

Recommended funding for Hayden's proposal is a 5 cent per gallon raise for motor fuel. According to the task force report, this increase would provide maintenance for the roads and bridges.

The current motor fuel tax is 11 cents per gallon. Within 20 years, the tax could rise from 16 to 36 cents per gallon, he said. A cap on the price has been considered.

"I'm not opposed to that as long as a cap would still allow us to build the roads," he said.

Hayden said the roads in certain parts of the state are either "totally worn out and unsafe" or have never been adequate to begin with.

One of the construction projects would upgrade K-177 from I-70 north to the K-18 river bridge at Manhattan. The 9-mile route will become a "Super Two highway" at an estimated cost of $9.2 million. The specifications include driving lanes that are 12 feet wide and paved shoulders that are 10 feet wide.

Hayden said the proposed roads in Kansas would also be paid for by the motor fuel tax, but in another way. Motor fuel taxes would be indexed using the Consumer Price Index and would have the same elasticity as the sales tax.

"Kansans would still be paying the same percentage of their income for fuel in 20 years as they are now, but the money would be building new roads," Hayden said.

Cities and counties are having the same problems maintaining roads and bridges as the state, Hayden said. The state provides upkeep for 10,000 miles of road. Cities and counties are responsible for 100,000 miles.

State aid is one source of income for the city and county road maintenance, and an increased property tax rate is the other alternative. The task force is recommending a 1.5 cents-per-gallon increase in the motor fuel tax to be distributed among the cities and counties, Hayden said.

As an alternative to the additional motor fuel tax hike and an increased property tax, Hayden has proposed increasing registration fees for automobiles and trucks. All fee charges are determined directly proportional to the axle weight of the vehicle.

According to statistics, it has been proven that "wear and tear on roads is directly proportional to axle weight," Hayden said.

The registration fees for automobiles, now at $18.38 for the 1988 calendar year, would increase to

'Bleak' impression puts KSU Stadium at bottom of heap

By Deron Johnson
Editor

Bleak?
Bland?
There are fightin' words, partner.

But so goes the impression of one John McGrath, sports aficionado and Denver Post sports columnist, about KSU Stadium. In the Aug. 23 Post, McGrath rated the 20 best and 10 worst professional and college football stadiums in the nation.

TGIFriday

And guess what? That's right: KSU takes the honors for No. 1 worst stadium.

"So bland it makes the surrounding landscape look positively breathtaking," he eloquently wrote. C'mon John — surely we're not that bad, are we?

In a telephone interview, McGrath tempered his stinging jabs by saying that the stadiums were listed in no particular order. However, "If I had anyone in mind I was thinking of that would be No. 1, it would probably be KSU," he said.

Fine. And just what is it that makes our fair stadium so unappealing to McGrath, who has visited us "a couple of times?"

"As I remember, it was this bleak setting with Astroturf," he said, adding that grass would improve the setting.

Despite his distaste for KSU Stadium, McGrath did say that Ahearn Field House is "great" for basketball.

But lest Wildcat fans feel singled out, they can take heart that McGrath also placed Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City, Mo., among the top 10.

Of Arrowhead he wrote: "Staying awake and watching the Chiefs are inherently conflicting activities — especially in an elephantine 78,000-seat stadium that wouldn't be filled for the reincarnation of Elvis."

"This guy needs to take another look."

—Lee Moon

Testy, testy.

Actually, he said Arrowhead is "OK." However, he added, "To tell you the truth, it's always been a real chore to stay awake in the Chief's press box." He called the press box antiseptic and said it was too quiet.

And how much reaction has he gotten to the rankings? Not much, he said.

"I heard on the radio the other day that somebody was really mad I rated Texas ahead of North Carolina," said McGrath, a 10-year veteran of sports writing who has "been to a lot of stadiums."

Lee Moon, assistant athletic director, takes McGrath's words with a grain of salt.

"I think there's a lot of other stadiums worse than ours," he said. "I think when you look at a stadium, you look at more than aesthetic ability."

After perusing the Post article, Moon declared, "This is a riot."

"This guy needs to take another look. Beauty is in the eye of the beholder and I think we have a real fine facility."

Dispute continues over product

KCI to remain main supplier for University

By Debbie Whitson
Staff Writer

Floor-cleaning products manufactured by the Kansas Correctional Industries are still unsatisfactory to some K-State employees despite applicational advice from an independent adviser.

Alvin Seely, chief of custodial services I and facilities custodial services, said that ever since a law, known as the "prison-made goods act of Kansas," went into effect, the cleaning products state agencies are required to purchase have been "less than satisfactory."

Kansas Laws 75-5273 to 75-5282 require state agencies to purchase KCI products unless specifically granted an exemption by the director of state purchases or the secretary of administration.

"Quality control is a major concern with all the KCI products," Seely said. "But our biggest problem has been with the floor care products."

Last spring, state institutions dissatisfied with the products, including the University of Kansas Medical Center, wrote letters of complaint to Nick Roach, director of state purchases.

Roach met with the agencies on May 22 and agreed to hire an independent floor-care consultant to inspect floors where the products had been used.

Depending on the assessment of the consultant, each agency would possibly have been granted an exemption from purchasing the floor care products.

Some University officials thought the KCI products cost as much or more than some commercial cleaning products.

However, KCI Director Leonard Ewell said that while some of the products may cost as much as similar commercial products, no KCI products cost more than those from private industry.

"It costs more for us to pay for the labor to have the floors cleaned than if we had a working product that would give us the same or better results in less time," Seely said.

Larry Patch, the consultant hired, has been to K-State twice to look at the floors, Ewell said.

Seely said Patch looked around at the floors and said they looked "pretty good" to him. He said the floors Patch thought looked good had been cleaned by products they had left over from the period before they began using the KCI products.

In early June, the KU Medical Center was granted exemption from using the KCI wax stripper. The exemption was granted after three requests from operation officials at the center.

Seely said the wax put on the floors looks good for a few days, but then "disappears," which makes their floor care "labor intensive and not cost effective."

Roach has said the products seem to work well for other agencies and the reason the products don't work for some is because they aren't used properly.

Officials with Emporia State University, Wichita State University and the Capitol in Topeka have made no complaints about the products.

Seely said it is hard for inmates, who are trained by non-professionals, to compete with professional companies.

"I would have no problem with using their products if we could get the kind of quality we need from them," he said. "But I don't want to continue to waste the taxpayers' money if we're not getting our money's worth. It adds up to several hundred dollars a year in the long run."

Seely said another problem is the instructions on the products' labels. The University employees tried using the products as they were labeled and got poor results, but after some experimentation the employees were able to get better results, he said.

Ewell said Patch worked with the employees in application of the product and confirmed that part of the problem was in the application instructions on the containers.

"We are considering changing the labels on the wax containers," Ewell said. "Apparently, the labels were instructing the user to put on a coat of wax that was too thin."

Ewell said there is no specific date in the works for when they will be changing the labels, but the consul-

Troops attack Philippine palace

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — Mutinous troops attacked the presidential palace compound and state broadcast centers Friday in an attempt to overthrow the 18-month-old government of President Corazon Aquino. She was safe and appealed for calm, but the rebels continued fighting throughout the day.

Col. Honesto Isleta, an armed forces spokesman, said the revolt was led by Col. Gregorio Honasan, former aide to Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile, whom Aquino fired as defense minister after another coup attempt in November.

Rebels seized the government television center, parts of the army and air force headquarters and a constabulary garrison north of the city. Troops loyal to Aquino surrounded the presidential palace and her nearby residence.

At least nine people were killed and 94 wounded in the uprising which began before dawn when truckloads of soldiers began an assault near the palace and government broadcast center in suburban Quezon City.

Aquino, facing the gravest crisis of her administration, said in a radio interview the situation would soon be under control. A military officer, demanding anonymity, described it as "highly unstable."

In a statement broadcast over a private television station, the rebels claimed they would control the nation by the end of the day.

Fighting continued in densely populated areas of the capital nearly 12 hours after it began, with midday attacks on Camp Aguinaldo, the headquarters of the armed forces and Defense Ministry and Villamor Air Base, the air force headquarters near Manila's airport.

Honasan told reporters before he and some of his men managed to enter Armed Forces headquarters that the operation was aimed at "unification of the people, the concept of justice and true freedom" and claimed it was "not a military coup."

"All we are fighting for is the children, our children and the children of the Filipino people," Honasan said.

Gen. Fidel Ramos, the chief of staff, said about 300 men attacked at 1 a.m. and there were "propaganda" reports that the mutineers supported him and Enrile. Ramos, who has put down other coup attempts, said he remains loyal to Aquino.

The telephones of Enrile and his spokesman Sylvestre Afaile were not ringing.

Single-engine plane crashes

KANORADO, Kan. — An airplane crash was spotted by the Colorado Civil Air Patrol Thursday evening during a search for a single-engine airplane that was reported missing in eastern Colorado, CAP Capt. Dieter Hantschel said.

Hantschel said the wreckage was found about four miles south of Kanorado, Kan., and he added there was no sign of life. Dean Strotheide, air traffic manager at the Scottsbluff, Neb., Flight Service Center, said the plane was piloted by Ned Lynch of North Platte, who was believed to be flying alone.

Strotheide said the plane left Scottsbluff at 9:15 Tuesday night. The plane left the Burlington, Colo., airport at 2:45 a.m. Wednesday and told officials he was heading to McCook, Neb. But the plane was seen heading southeast after departure, although McCook is northeast of Burlington.

The Sherman County, Kan., sheriff's office said the plane was discovered about 6 p.m. in a cornfield.

The start of the search was delayed from daybreak until after noon Thursday by constantly changing cloud patterns, but six aircraft eventually were launched, Hantschel said.

The Kansas Civil Air Patrol launched two aircraft to search on its side of the border, he added.

Court rules on abortion issue

ST. PAUL, Minn. — A federal appeals court ruled Thursday that states may not require minors to notify both parents before having an abortion, even if the laws allow girls to turn to the courts instead.

"Where...the underlying notification requirement impermissibly burdens the minor's abortion decision, that requirement cannot be saved by the presence in the statute of an alternative court bypass procedure," said a three-judge panel of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The opinion affirmed a November 1986 order by U.S. District Judge Donald Alsup permanently barring Minnesota from enforcing a 1981 abortion notification statute. That was believed to be the first court ruling on the constitutionality of a court-alternative law already in force.

Chief Deputy Attorney General Jack Tunheim said the state would decide in about a week whether to appeal.

The 1981 law required those providing abortions to minors to notify both of the girl's parents, when possible, at least 48 hours in advance.

A girl could avoid the parental notification requirement by demonstrating to a court either that she was mature or that notifying her parents would not be in her best interest.

The Appeals Court cited findings by Alsup that approximately 50 percent of all marriages in Minnesota end in divorce and approximately 42 percent of all minors in the state do not live with both biological parents.

'Fiscal watchdog' to retire

MADISON, Wis. — Sen. William Proxmire, who built a national reputation as a fiscal watchdog during three decades in the U.S. Senate, announced Thursday he will not seek a sixth term in 1988.

"I'd be almost 80 years old when I retired in 1994, or whenever it is," said the 71-year-old Democrat. "That's too old."

The announcement came 30 years to the day after he first won his Senate seat. It stunned many politicians and triggered speculation of wide-open Democratic and Republican primaries for the seat held by "Prox" — a landslide victor in recent elections.

Proxmire, whose monthly "Golden Fleece Awards" spotlighted government waste, said he never realized his major goal of bringing "sanity to our fiscal spending."

Penn — popular jail attraction

LOS ANGELES — Sean Penn panned apparently is just too much temptation.

"Everybody sneaks a peek at him through the little window on his door," an unidentified source was quoted as saying in Wednesday's Los Angeles Herald Examiner. "Nurses, doctors, trustees, sometimes five people at a time."

Penn, 27, checked into the Los Angeles County Jail on Aug. 22 to serve the second portion of a 60-day sentence for probation violations.

A judge ordered the actor jailed after a fight with a man who tried to photograph him on the set of the film "Colors." Penn was placed on probation earlier this year after a brawl with a man he thought was trying to kiss his pop singer wife, Madonna.

Penn was assigned to a section of jail reserved for inmates thought to be at risk from the jail population.

Penn's cell in the "elite section," as inmates call it, is freshly painted in light blue with dark blue trim, has metal doors and is furnished with a steel frame bed bolted to the floor, a two-inch foam mattress and a small porcelain sink and toilet, the paper said.

'Julius Caesar' made modern

PHILADELPHIA — "Julius Caesar" will be brought into the 20th century in January, when Richard Harris takes on a modern production at the University of Scranton.

"If the production is very successful, I would recast it and take that production to Broadway," Harris said Wednesday from London.

It will begin with the crucifixion of Jesus Christ and deal with the assassinations of Presidents Lincoln and Kennedy, civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr., and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, he said.

Harris, who will play Marc Antony, said he chose the 4,600-student Jesuit university as part of a memorial to his late brother, Dermot.

The 53-year-old Irish-born actor said he will teach acting starting in January to prepare the student cast for the adaptation of the Shakespearean tragedy.

Singers pay for cancelation

JOPLIN, Mo. — A federal jury has ordered country music singers Waylon Jennings and Jessi Colter to pay more than $34,000 to promoters of a concert that was canceled in 1985.

Officials of Elk River Association Inc. and Sgt. Peppers Inc. contended they didn't agree to the cancellation but were told by the singers' road manager, David Trask, that a flight delay would prevent the singers, who are married, from arriving in time for the concert in Noel.

Jennings testified Tuesday that he intended to perform, and said he lost $10,000 because of the cancellation. The trial ended Wednesday.

Norwegian King to visit Iowa

DECORAH, Iowa — King Olav V of Norway will visit in November at the invitation of Vesterheim, the Norwegian-American Museum.

The 84-year-old Norwegian monarch, who is honorary chairman of the museum, visited Decorah in 1975 for Vesterheim's rededication ceremony. Vesterheim means "home in the west," and is considered one of the United States' finest collections of Norwegian-American immigrant artifacts and history.

Construction begins on water district

Company to finish by Nov. 1

By Judy Lundstrom
Special Projects Editor

By Nov. 1, Moehlman Bottoms residents should be able to put away their 5-gallon water coolers.

Riley County Commissioners approved at their meeting Thursday a bid of $40,708 from Larson Construction of Manhattan to install a water district for Moehlman Bottoms.

Other bids received were B.A. Durst Contractors of Topeka, $41,696; Manhattan Trenching Inc., $42,374; Walters-Morgan Inc., $44,270; and Habitats Inc., Manhattan, $50,997.

The water district was approved by commissioners April 27 after residents near the Riley County Landfill petitioned the county to provide them with city water because of contamination in the area.

The first contamination was detected by Kansas Department of Health and Environment agents in November 1985 on the property of Charlene Sweet, a landfill employee who owns a home adjacent to the landfill. The second was discovered a year later on the property of John Pratt Jr., 1,000 feet southeast of the landfill.

The water district plan was designed by BG Consultants Inc., Manhattan, and will be an extension of the Hunter's Island Water District, which was installed two years ago because of similar water contamination problems. New water lines will serve about 30 private homes and two trailer courts, one with six units and one with 14 units.

While Moehlman Bottoms residents are relieved the water system will be installed, they are not happy with the amount of time that has elapsed since the contamination was detected.

Since July, several residents have been hauling water from Manhattan in 5-gallon water coolers supplied by the county.

"Isn't that a joke?" said Corinne Glessner, who lives east of the landfill. "When you drink the water, it tastes worse than the water out of our spigots because it tastes like plastic."

Glessner said that since news came out about the water contamination, Moehlman Bottoms residents have been inundated with calls from people who want to test their water or sell them a purification system.

"Nobody cares," she said. "Sometimes we feel like packing up and leaving."

County Engineer Dan Harden said commissioners have yet to decide who will pay for the new water district.

"I'm sure the county will pay the contractor directly out of the landfill budget," he said. "But I don't know if there will be any attempt to recapture that cost. You and I may end up paying for it."

The deadline for installation of the system is Dec. 31, according to the KDHE order.

In a related matter, commissioners approved a request for a $30,000 grant from the Housing and Urban Development project to hire a consultant to work with the county's Solid Waste Management Committee. The committee, mandated by KDHE in its landfill closure order, is to be appointed by Sept. 1 and will be in charge of revising the Riley County Solid Waste Management Plan, Harden said.

If the grant is approved, the county will allocate an additional $7,500, he said. Most of the $37,500 will go toward the consultant's fees and research for waste disposal alternatives.

County Planner Monty Wedel said a KDHE official suggested that commissioners conduct a public survey and ask other county organizations for input into the search for a new disposal plan.

One suggestion, Wedel said, was to involve some K-State clubs as citizen advisory groups.

Commissioner Darrell Westervelt did not approve of this suggestion.

"There must be hundreds of clubs on campus, and I can't see how they would be interested in how Riley County handles its waste," he said.

Because the Solid Waste Management Committee will comprise 24 members, Westervelt said he was concerned the plan would get "too unwieldy" if more groups were involved.

"My concern is that it'll sink from its own weight," he said.

Once formed, the committee must complete a list of plan topics by Oct. 1, and come up with a proposal for a new waste disposal plan by May 1, 1989, according to KDHE orders.

In other action, commissioners approved a $30,000 state grant application for a water facilities planning and feasibility study for the Fairmont Water Project.

If the grant is awarded, the county will add an additional $7,500 to the project, Wedel said. The money will be used to hire an engineering firm to examine the water conditions in the area, which includes the Fairmont Addition and the area that potentially could be served by the Fairmont Heights Water Company in east Manhattan, Wedel said.

The consultant would determine the needs of a new water system and would work with officials to implement the system, he said.

Officials halt test firing

By The Associated Press

BRIGHAM CITY, Utah — A critical full-scale test of the new space shuttle booster rocket engine was scrubbed Thursday after a series of delays including two final countdowns halted with less than 15 seconds to go.

Officials of Morton Thiokol Inc., manufacturer of the rocket, said the test firing would be postponed until 1 p.m. Saturday.

The 1.2 million-pound rocket was scheduled to burn for about two minutes in a ground test of four redesigned joints in its steel hull, changes in redesign that are expected to correct the flaws that caused the Challenger accident.

The redesigned rocket has been tested in sub-scale firing, but Thursday's test was to have been the first involving the full, 126-foot rocket booster.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials have said that the test is the most critical yet of the rocket booster redesign program.

None of the series of delays of the test was associated with the rocket itself. All involved computers or other equipment associated with the test stand, a plateau cut out on a Utah hillside.

When the third attempt reached the 15-second point, test coordinator Roger Williams of Morton Thiokol said over a public address system that the test firing was scrubbed.

With more than 500 VIP guests watching, technicians from Morton Thiokol Inc. counted down the firing test to within seconds, then announced the test had been aborted. Several hours later, the technicians were again within seconds of firing when the test was halted again.

Shuttle program director Richard Truly visited the technicians' bunker during the final countdown and told journalists later that he had told technicians that if there was another problem, that the firing attempt should be scrubbed for the day.

That problem occurred at 4:57 p.m.

In the first incident, officials said, a cooling system that is part of the horizontal test stand failed. An 8-inch water line sprung a leak, said Morton Thiokol spokesman Roland Raab. The water is used to cool the back of the rocket after firing.

In addition to fixing the cooling system, engineers also had to check whether they needed to recharge high-speed cameras and an auxiliary power unit. The second test, which had been scheduled for 5 p.m. EDT, was halted because of computer problems. The reason for halting the third countdown was not immediately announced.

The firing is the first of a series of full-scale ground tests the new solid fuel rocket must pass before the shuttle fleet is permitted to fly again. The first shuttle flight is scheduled next June 2.

A flawed joint that leaked superheated exhaust gases is blamed for the Jan. 28, 1986, explosion that destroyed Challenger

Foreigners dominate Berlin life, politics

Political images such as "Checkpoint Charlie," "the besieged island of democracy" and John Kennedy declaring "Ich bin ein Berliner" tend to dominate the expectations of most visitors when they visit Berlin for the first time. Although this city offers more than a lesson in politics, its political background reflects the world we live in.

Lying not on the border between East and West Germany, but rather 110 miles inside East German territory, the famous Wall encircles West Berlin like a ring of steel. Try to imagine Kansas to be a Soviet-Block nation, but Manhattan as an island of Western society, surrounded by a wall and separated from the 'free world' by about the same distance separating us from Missouri.

Imagine trying to explain this ludicrous situation to Thomas Jefferson, or some extra-terrestrial.

"You see, Mr. Jefferson, in the London Protocol agreement of 1944 the Allies — Britain, the Soviet Union, the United States and later France — agreed to divide Germany and Berlin into four administrative sectors. Since the Soviets and the Western Allies have different notions about how people are to be governed, the three sectors of the Western Allies eventually united to form West Germany. The three Western sectors of Berlin were similarly combined to form West Berlin.

Pretty soon, lots of East Germans began leaving for the West. But as the East saw it was losing too many people to the West, it built some big fences between East and West Germany, and some big walls between West Berlin and East Germany. Now the people the East wants to stay in the East do, although some Westerners still go to the East — with some difficulty."

Around this point in what I thought would be a reasonable explanation, I imagine the aliens packing up and heading back to their planet in disgust, and Jefferson returning to the Age of Enlightenment.

But for those of us stuck here on the present-day Earth, the Allies administered Berlin jointly until 1948, when things began to split up. After 1948, one of the things East and West did jointly in Berlin was guarding old Nazis in a West Berlin prison named Spandau. As the last of the Spandau Nazis, Rudolf Hess, died a couple of weeks ago, this joint activity has ceased, the prison will be destroyed and a British army supermarket will be built in its place...

The only other thing East and West do together is plan the air traffic into Berlin. In 1948, the Soviets tried to starve West Berlin into submission by closing the land supply routes between West Berlin and Western Germany. The Western Allies responded with the famous Berlin airlift, flying in more than 1.7 million tons of supplies during the 13-month siege. Even then, the Soviets met with the Western Allies to coordinate the flights of the Western Aircraft which would foil the Soviet blockade attempt!

In the early 1970s, several agreements which eased tensions in Berlin were reached. Travel into the East was made easier, and among other things, the East Germans agreed to take out the West Berliners' trash. West Berlin has also recently hooked up to the Soviet Trans-Siberian pipeline. Of course, West pays East for these services with 'hard currency' i.e. Deutsche Marks.

Although the West German Basic Law (the constitution) declares West Berlin a part of West Germany, the Allies do not recognize this, instead dictating that West Berlin is still under Allied administration. No West German troops are allowed in Berlin and the citizens there, unlike all 18-year-old males in West Germany, are not subject to the military draft. In violation of the London Protocol, East Germany has made East Berlin its capital and drafts males residing in East Berlin.

West Berlin may elect its own government, but the Western Allies have final say in all affairs. In practice this veto power is rarely exercised, but the Allies still do not allow West Berliners active representation in the West German Bundestag. Despite this, West Germany takes very good care of West Berlin.

Both East and West Germany pump lots of money into their halves of Berlin. At the German Institute for Developmental Aid, I was told West Germany spends about $5.5 billion supporting West Berlin — not bad for a city with a population of less than 1.9 million. The Soviet Union supports 10.2 million Cubans on little more than $3 billion a year.

I've no figures on East German funds for East Berlin, but everyone I have spoken to, from officers in the U.S. embassy in East Berlin to West German political scientists, agree East Berlin receives lots of funds from East Germany.

I asked an East German girl what she thought of the city's 750th birthday party being celebrated. She responded, "I think it's terrible. East Germany is a very poor country, yet the government spends lots of money dressing up Berlin because of the tourists from the West who come here, and the money is needed elsewhere."

Both East and West Berlin have been turned into extravagant showplaces for the respective sides in the East-West confrontation.

Court helps children by stopping book ban

School children have won a better education. The 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals overturned an Alabama judge's order banning 44 textbooks from Alabama public schools.

The books promoted what the judge called a godless, humanistic religion. These texts were thrown out because they promoted ideas of self-responsibility and decision-making.

One home economics text was banned because of a statement saying that people can do whatever they want and become whatever they choose.

The word "banned" can put fear into many people's hearts, and rightly so, because how do we know who should make the decisions and what the criterion for those decisions should be based upon?

In the Alabama textbook case, one judge made the initial decision, and a panel of three judges overturned it.

Does this mean banning decisions should be made by committees? Or does this warn us that banning can become potentially out of hand?

If we ban an entire book for one sentence or word, then shouldn't most, if not all, books be banned? And if all books are banned, where would knowledge come from? The government, the pope, imaginations? But there wouldn't be any imagination without books.

Nobody can be shielded from everything. If they don't read about it, they'll see or hear about it. It is impossible to try to shield people from ideas. As John Milton wrote in "Areopagitica," society is based upon the marketplace of free ideas.

Since the basis of education in the United States is the public school system, the marketplace of free ideas should be open to students.

K-State should retain admission procedure

The lobbyists who discouraged the Legislative Educational Planning Committee not to advise the Legislature to adopt more tougher requirements for entrance into Regent institutions have a point.

Some legislators believe higher education costs are increasing because freshmen courses are flooded with students who do not remain in school, and universities must provide remedial courses for the unprepared students; subjects they should have learned in high school.

Now, all graduates of Kansas high schools are admitted to the state's six universities. K-State, being a land-grant institution, should advocate honoring this policy.

Even minimal requirements could set up an "elitist" atmosphere, and many potential students could lose out. Older students and veterans would have to comply to the same kind of standards. The fact that some students weren't motivated in high school doesn't necessarily mean they won't excel in college.

"Lenient" entrance requirements does not imply second-rate academics. Being a land-grant university, K-State has a responsibility to be as accessible as possible to Kansans.

If the problem is high school students not learning enough to tackle a college load, the requirements should be aimed there. If their education cannot carry them though College Algebra, are they expected to be functioning citizens?

Telling students that high school was not enough and they cannot enroll is not the answer. All potential students should have the opportunity to use their high school education as a springboard for a better future.

Readers pose puzzles Writer helps make life easier

Dear Jeff,

I have long been a fan of George Carlin's sense of humor. He is, in my opinion, our country's best comedian. The other night I saw a taped version of his "seven words you can't say on television," which got me to thinking. Are there any words or phrases that a writer can't say in the Collegian? And if there are, could you break the rules just this once and print them in your column?

Signed,

Curious George the Second

Dear Curious George,

The K-State Collegian is very sensitive to the needs of the student body which it serves. Great pains are taken to keep it from ever becoming an administration mouthpiece. However, there are a few touchy phrases and innuendoes that Collegian staffers are strongly encouraged to avoid. These include "Wef-er Madness" to replace phrases like "President Wefald's proposal," "the Wefald administration," or "a reception at the president's home." Ahearn Fieldhouse is never to be referred to as the "Cat House," and the Gay and Lesbian Resource Center is not to be listed as an extension of Dykstra Hall. Finally, with the University of Kansas-K-State football game drawing near, writers are asked not to abbreviate the postgame activities of the semi-annual K-State-KU as BYOBVB (bring your own beer, bricks, and Volkswagen bugs).

Dear Jeff,

I am a former chemical engineering major who just switched to pre-law. I like my new course of study fine, except for one large problem — none of my old, engineering pick-up lines work on the ladies in my new classes. My former best line, "Hey babe, what's the square root of 4,761?" won't even get me the time of day anymore. I used to be considered the "Casanova of the periodical chart." What can I do to fill up this void in my life?

Signed,

The Suave Strikeout King

Dear Your Majesty,

I think your problem may be that you are trying too hard to gain a new nickname, like the "Courtroom Casanova" or "BMOB (big man on briefs)." You should relax and let your natural charm attract people to you. Besides, because you are from Kansas, you are already ahead of all the other male pre-law students in America. Take, for example, the cases of Gary Hart and Jim Bakker. Gary Hart is from our fair state, and he got to spend a weekend with Donna Rice. Jim Bakker is not from Kansas, and he has to spend a lifetime with Tammy Faye.

Furthermore, if things don't work out, you always have an alternative. I'm sure there is quite a demand for attorneys with Chemical Engineering backgrounds in San Francisco.

Dear Jeff,

I am one of the many Democrats who is running for the presidency, and I have an image problem. There are so many of us, and it is so far from the election date, that none of us seems to be able to gain any popularity above the rest. We are like several Santa Clauses racing down the same chimney — we're all stuck in the middle. How could I separate myself from the mass and emerge as the front runner?

Signed,
Void of Votes

Dear Void,

Since you did not sign your letter, I cannot tell which of the Democratic candidates you are and won't be able to help you personally. Thus, I will give my advice to all the candidates, and the first one to get a Collegian will have the advantage.

The problem I see is that all of you are using the same type of approach — dedicated family man, budget balancer, and commie killer. None of you are brave enough to try something different. I can always remember rhymes and gimmicks better than I can remember dull slogans. So, my advice to you is to take one of the following, and make it a household song.

If you are Sen. Nunn, I would make a pun by saying, "Get into the habit!" or if you are Gov. Dukakis, make fun of the word caucus, and say, "Vote for me in Dukakis." Rep. Gephardt should remember that Gary Hart dropped the 'pense' from his name, and was unsuccessful. Maybe you should drop the 'hart' from your name. And finally, Sen. Joe Biden could use his first name in a catchy way, such as, "I'm not Joe mama; I'm not Joe daddy; I'm Joe Biden. Vote for me."

As for the rest of the pack, my mind is a blank. But considering what was just written, that may be in your best interests.

Senator dispels rumors

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia dashed the hopes of conservative Democrats on Thursday with his announcement that he would not run for president in 1988 although he said "I felt like the chances of winning were really there."

Nunn, chairman of the Armed Services Committee, said his Senate and family responsibilities came first. His decision ended a year of speculation and disappointed Democrats who wanted a candidate who could attract crucial votes in the conservative South.

Thus far, Nunn said, no candidate has emerged "with the expression of the kind of philosophy and the kind of values that the people of the South are looking for."

"That doesn't mean that could not happen, but I believe the Democratic Party in the South is a profile of the general election type of voter that we will have in 1988," Nunn told a news conference.

Earlier, Nunn, 48, had sent a five-paragraph letter to supporters that told of his decision.

"I know myself pretty well, and I have concluded that if I attempted to run for president, and also carry out my Senate duties, I would wind up doing neither well," the letter said. "With a son in high school and a daughter in college, I am also concerned about the impact of a presidential campaign on my family."

The three-term senator, his party's leading expert on defense matters, had postponed his presidential decision last February, citing his duties on the Armed Services panel and his assignment to the Iran-Contra select committee.

In his letter, Nunn did not discuss his future political plans or say which candidate he will support for the party's nomination. He wrote supporters that "the Democratic Party has an impressive slate of candidates actively campaigning, with the possibility of others entering the process."

The only Southerner in the race is Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee, who said he expects to benefit from Nunn's decision.

Other Democrats officially in the race include Sens. Joseph Biden of Delaware and Paul Simon of Illinois, Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis and former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt. The Rev. Jesse Jackson and Rep. Patricia Schroeder of Colorado are likely candidates.

S. Korean officials blame leftists

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — The government vowed Thursday to crush leftists who incite strikers to political violence and said a Justice Ministry team was arresting agitators disguised as workers.

Strikers and riot police fought in the southern port city of Masan and at Incheon, the port west of Seoul. Hundreds of strikes around the country continued to impair auto production, shipbuilding, electronics, mining, transportation and many other industries.

The main opposition alliance called for anti-government rallies Friday to mourn the death of a shipyard worker who became the first fatality of more than a month of labor unrest when he was hit by a tear gas shell.

Prime Minister Kim Chung-yul said leftist elements are trying to create a socialist society by fomenting turmoil or revolution that would destroy the existing political and social order.

It was the first major government policy statement on the strikes for higher pay, better working conditions and free unions that have swept the country since early July and crippled the export-based economy. "The government is firmly determined to root out impure leftist forces from our society with all the law-enforcing power we can mobilize from now on to maintain law and order," Kim said in a televised speech.

Justice Minister Chung Hae-chang said police and government prosecutors had formed a special team to stamp out leftist agitation. He said more than 60 people had been arrested since Aug. 20, including leftist agitators disguised as workers.

Police announced 12 of the arrests Thursday. They said most of those detained were former student activists and more would be rounded up.

Students traditionally are in the vanguard of South Korean protest. They led weeks of anti-government agitation that caused President Chun Doo-hwan to agree June 30 to opposition demands for such democratic reforms as direct presidential elections and less government control of unions.

Successive governments have cooperated with business to make strikes virtually illegal and hold wages down so the exports that drive the economy will be cheaper.

Contras willing to try peace initiatives

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Leaders of the Nicaraguan rebel movement were poised Thursday to assure President Reagan of their willingness to give Central American peace initiatives a chance.

The six members of the civilian directorate governing the Nicaraguan Resistance traveled here to confer with Reagan, their most visible supporter, after signaling a willingness to see U.S. military aid suspended in the interest of peace.

Reagan, who earlier this week told the Nicaraguan people in a radio broadcast that their struggle "always will have" his support, arranged to meet with the Contra leaders in his Century Plaza Hotel penthouse suite.

White House officials had acknowledged last week that a principal reason for Reagan meeting with the leaders was for the president to show publicly that he will not abandon the Contras.

On the eve of their meeting with Reagan here, Contra spokesmen said the rebels would propose to Reagan that their military aid be suspended — or held in abeyance — to show their commitment to peace in Central America.

Azucena Ferry Echaverry, a member of the Contra directorate, told reporters in Miami that "we have proposed that aid could be stopped when a peace agreement was reached."

Board to examine health proposals

By Candy Leonard
Government Editor

It could turn out to be a "dog fight" when the Riley County-Manhattan Board of Health takes another look at proposed dog and cat ordinances during its noon meeting today.

"I would hope that we finish this up," said Richard Hayter, city commissioner and health board member. "Our intention is to set our final recommendations."

If the Board is in agreement, the ordinances will then be presented to the city and county commissions. Hayter said kennel regulations are the "single most important issue" in the proposed ordinances.

After reviewing the model ordinances with city staff, Jim Pearson, assistant city manager, told the board in a letter that "standards still do not exist that would allow us to control these shelters in an effective manner. Further, we are not sure this ordinance is the appropriate place to consider this issue."

"The city commission can certainly regulate (kennels) if they want to," said Bill Frost, city attorney. "It is legally permissible."

The ordinances are designed to give authority to the Board of Health to draw up specific rules and regulations governing the protection and keeping of animals, said Chuck Murphy, director of the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department.

"Hopefully, this will allow for a more consolidated effort for the health department," he said.

After Jan. 1, the Parks and Recreation Department will no longer administer the animal wards and animal shelter, he said.

"The new animal shelter required that we update our city ordinances," said Su Bacon, vice president of the Riley County Humane Society.

The Board of Health will also consider the question of restraining cats to the owners' property.

Credit Union offering more than loans

Auto tellers a possible addition

By Erwin Seba
Collegian Reporter

The University's Federal Credit Union is considering expanding the services it offers to members.

The credit union, located in Anderson Hall, offers savings accounts, loans and certificates of deposit to its members. Only faculty, staff and graduate students teaching or doing research are qualified to become members of the union.

"The board of directors is looking into including some other services to make us more of a full-service financial institution," said Marla Mann, credit union manager.

Among the additional services being considered are share draft accounts, automatic teller machines and traveler's checks, Mann said. Share draft accounts are equivalent to bank checking accounts.

"It's called a share draft because we're a credit union and they're a bank. They have accounts; we have shares. Our members get shares in the credit union. The shares go in $5 increments," she said.

"A credit union is member-owned. It's unique and different from other financial institutions," Mann said. "Our members own the credit union and have all the say in operating the credit union."

The only employees of the credit union are Mann, a teller and a loan officer. The board of directors, the credit committee and the supervisory committee are all comprised of volunteers from the credit union's membership.

Protecting the privacy of the members is important, said Mann.

"Confidentiality is very important. We won't give information to the wife of a member if her name's not on the account," she said.

The credit union, which is open Monday-Friday 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., also works to keep the information on loan applications confidential.

"We have our loan officers; they approve all loans," Mann said. "They are only qualified to approve loans. They cannot deny a loan. That protects a member."

If there is a question about a loan application, such as if a person is over obligated and the loan officer cannot approve the loan, then the application goes to the credit committee, she said. If there is a conflict of interest between an applicant and a member of the committee, the committee member will normally bow out.

"I'd have to say if a person didn't want his supervisor, who happened to be on the credit committee, to review his application, he could come to us and ask that he (the supervisor) not review his application. We'd honor that. We're always working for that member," Mann said.

"I see this credit union as having the potential of a full-service credit union."

Moscow: Reagan's 'preaching' damaging arms pact chances

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — President Reagan is trying to instruct the Soviet Union like a teacher "preaching to a naughty boy" and may destroy chances for a nuclear arms agreement, the Foreign Ministry spokesman said Thursday.

Gennady I. Gerasimov was responding to a speech Wednesday in which Reagan asked the Kremlin to publish its military budget and the size of its armed forces and permit open debate on military policy. He said those actions would "greatly help our efforts to reduce arms."

Gerasimov said at a briefing for foreign reporters that Reagan's address "literally abounds in demands of what the Soviet Union must or should do. Does it benefit the head of the administration, whose reputation has been so stained by the Irangate scandal and who has been repeatedly found to be violating constitution and laws, to put forward such demands?"

"It has become almost a rule that before every important Soviet-American meeting, the American side starts to play up the hostility," he said. "Now, unfortunately, the president has started to do it."

Moscow's decision to take the offensive appeared aimed in part at dampening optimism created by Chancellor Helmut Kohl's announcement about 72 aging Pershing 1A missiles belonging to West Germany, whose warheads are controlled by the United States.

Kohl said Wednesday that West Germany would dismantle the missiles if the Soviets and Americans destroy all their intermediate-range missiles — weapons with ranges between 300 and 3,000 miles.

The Pershing 1As were considered the most serious obstacle to a U.S.-Soviet agreement on intermediate-range weapons, which both sides have said was close otherwise. West Germany had refused to give up either the missiles or its right to modernize them.

Soviet negotiators say the missiles should be part of any agreement between the superpowers, since the United States controls the warheads. The U.S. position is that it will not negotiate about third-party weapons and the missiles were part of an agreement that existed when U.S.-Soviet talks began in Geneva.

Observers suggested that Kohl's surprise offer could permit real progress on arms control at a September meeting of Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Eduard A. Shevardnadze, the Soviet foreign minister, and perhaps lead to a third Reagan summit with Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Reagan has invited the Soviet leader to the United States, but Gorbachev says a visit depends on the arms negotiations.

Gerasimov denied a British Broadcasting Corp. report that Gorbachev would travel to the United States the last three days of September.

Woman has too many yard sales

By The Associated Press

TUPELO, Miss. — A woman who pleaded innocent to a charge of holding too many yard sales says officials are peddling rubbish in defending their enforcement of a law that should be junked.

City Judge Carroll White on Wednesday scheduled a Sept. 23 trial for Oma Cain, 48, of Tupelo, who was ticketed Aug. 18 for violating an ordinance limiting yard sales to one every three months.

But Cain says she doesn't plan to show up. "I'm planning on a trip," she said.

City officials allege Cain has violated the ordinance with frequent yard sales, including one last month.

Cain denied the accusation that she sold items from her home in July.

Club gives chance to learn about U.N.

By The Collegian Staff

K-State students have the opportunity to learn how the United Nations works without traveling to New York.

The United Nations Council, established about six years ago, is one of the many clubs offered to K-State's student body.

"The club was founded to better inform K-State students and faculty about international affairs and procedures of the United Nations," said Jerry Rosenberg, assistant professor of political science and faculty adviser for K-State's United Nations Council.

Club membership is open to anyone. Last year, the club had 12 members, and Rosenberg said he is hoping for more involvement this year.

"It seems we always have better membership if there is constant crisis with global affairs, and this year there has been much going on in international affairs," he said.

Activities in the past have included lectures by professors and presentations of a model security council. This year, a trip is being planned to Lincoln, Neb., to participate in a model United Nations Conference.

During the mock conference, each club from universities around the country represents one of the 15 countries in the United Nations.

The clubs are notified months in advance about which country they will represent at the conference, Rosenberg said.

Annie Platoff, graduate student in history, is a former member of K-State's United Nations Council who has participated in the model conference at Lincoln.

"At the conference, you are the delegate, and you have to think about the delegate you represent," Platoff said. "You really have to give up all your Western values."

Spy, space epics prove enjoyable

Spy movie's characters, plot, thriller elements add up to good suspense

By Gary Leffler
Collegian Reviewer

There are several basic elements that are essential to any spy-thriller in movie making — a daring hero, a beautiful lady, government bureaucrats, gun-toting action, fist-clenching suspense, murder and, of course, Russians. "No Way Out" has all of these plus a little extra.

Film Reviews

In "No Way Out" Kevin Costner plays Tom Farrell, a confident, if not a little cocky, naval commander who falls for a shapely Washingtonian named Susan, played by Sean Young. The two dive into a frenzied love affair that leads to trouble and eventually murder.

Gene Hackman portrays Secretary of Defense David Brice who with his aide, Scott Prichard (Will Patton), become entangled in the complex web of intrigue and government cover-up.

"No Way Out" does a fine job working with all the particulars that go hand in hand with a good suspense story. From the beginning, the story builds upon itself and, after only a slightly slow fifteen-minute opening (vital to the establishment of motives), the story barrels full steam ahead to the end.

However, the film isn't in the practice of taking the routine path along the thriller trail. Instead of an abundance of car chases and rooftop leaps (although there are a few) the story mainly focuses on the emotional, nerve-racking tension that comes from the characters' needs for survival in a cover-up game that turns deadly.

Costner's performance is strong and believable. This is by far the sexiest role he has played to date. Early on in the film, he and Sean Young find themselves in the back of a limousine, each one anxious to have the other and unable to wait. The result is a cramped, yet exciting, love scene that ends with Costner telling Young, "I'm Tom," to which she replies, "I'm Susan."

Hackman gives us a fine view of a man of power — unapproachable to those of lesser status, yet fiercely dependent upon the love of his mistress. He takes the politician's role, which could have easily been the same old red tape, and turns it into a deep and complex character torn between duty to his country and duty to himself.

A word of praise must also go to Young for her spunky and sexy portrayal of Susan and to Patton for his rock solid performance as Prichard, the ruthlessly loyal aide to Brice.

However, not everything about "No Way Out" is worth praising. While the movie does a fine job moving down a tight, tense path to the end, the end may leave you wondering. You see, there's a twist, and an awkward and improbable one at that.

But if you are willing to forget the last two minutes of the film, as I soon will, you'll be glad you went to see "No Way Out." And if you're a Kevin Costner or Gene Hackman fan, you'll be even more pleased.

K-State Players' season begins as students complete auditions

Staff/Greg Vogel
Tom McLaughlin, graduate student in theater, demonstrates a few of his many faces during an audition for "On the Verge."

By Becky Howard
Arts and Entertainment Editor

The group had assembled on the McCain Auditorium stage. Clad in sweat pants and T-shirts, they closely watched the movements of Luke Kahlich, choreographer and associate professor of physical education, dance and leisure studies.

"OK, just be stupid. Be retarded!" Kahlich told them lightly, as he tried to describe how the dancing should be for a scene from "South Pacific," one of the K-State Players' productions students auditioned for this week.

They followed Kahlich's lead as he instructed them in kicking steps and how to do a "bird dog" and a "Santa Claus," two dance movements choreographed in the scene.

In Nichols Hall, the scene was slightly different. On the round center stage, actors trying out for the play "On the Verge" were grouped in threes to read from the script as Kate Anderson, associate professor of speech and director of the play, watched them closely.

As each of the groups read, Anderson laughed at the humorous moments in the scene, then she applauded and gave words of encouragement to the students auditioning as they finished.

Three nights of reading scripts, blocking scenes, and learning dance routines and songs culminated with callback auditions Wednesday evening for those auditioning for fall semester performances by the K-State Players.

Auditions were held for two plays, "On the Verge" and "The Real Thing," and the musical "South Pacific." More than 100 people attended the tryouts held Monday and Tuesday. Callback auditions on Wednesday evening brought more than 60 people for the final tryouts.

Each night, students warmed up with physical exercises, then learned, practiced and performed portions of the production for which they were auditioning. The directors of each production observed the auditions, then narrowed their selections for cast members.

The auditions went very well. We had a wonderful turnout with some very talented people, although I wish we would have had more men trying out for parts," said Charlotte MacFarland, instructor in speech and director of "South Pacific."

She said, "We had a hard time making a final decision on parts. We were up until 3 in the morning."

"Students take the auditions very seriously and work very hard. For some it can be a very grueling experience ending in disappointment and for others a wonderful experience," she said.

MacFarland said those who try out for K-State Players productions come from a wide variety of majors, not just those who are majoring in music and theater.

"We have people from all over the spectrum — in engineering and business," she said. "We would like to have more variety and encourage other non-theater majors to try out for the productions."

MacFarland said being involved in the productions does require a large amount of time in rehearsal, but many students involved in the past have managed many activities, including K-State Players.

"On the Verge," a play written by Eric Overmyer, will be performed Sept. 24-26, Sept. 30 and Oct. 1-3 in Nichols Theatre. Written in 1986, it is a comedy exploring three Victorian ladies' adventures through space, time and imagination.

"South Pacific" will be performed Oct. 22-24 in McCain Auditorium. This classic musical written by Rodgers and Hammerstein is a tale of love and prejudice on a Pacific island paradise set in World War II.

"The Real Thing" will be performed Nov. 12-14 and Nov. 18-21 in Nichols Theatre. The story revolves around an illustration of contemporary love.

Ticket information may be obtained through the Speech Department in Nichols Hall.

'Masters' film provides unexpected enjoyment for adults and children

By Andre Kelly
Contributing Reviewer

Everyone knows this hasn't been a great summer for movies.

First, Hollywood assaulted our wallets with "Ernest Goes to Camp." Then they assaulted our hopes with the long-awaited sequel "Beverly Hills Cop II," which was a bust. And finally the biggest disappointment of all, "Superman IV."

Now, seemingly from another galaxy, comes a film that has surprised everyone not only because of its subject but even more because of who made it.

At any given video store, you'll find more bombs from Cannon studios than from the Persian Gulf. They're responsible for the ongoing "Missing in Action" series, Stallone's "Over the Top," and even the man of steel "rusting" in "Superman IV."

The real mystery is how they got their hands on a lesser concept, "Masters of the Universe" and turned it into one of the summer's biggest fantasy-adventures.

Ordinarily, space-epics hit the big screen first, toy stores second and finally the Saturday morning cartoons. This time the process was reversed, and it may be a damaging factor to the movie's audience appeal. Like the "Star Wars" trilogy, "Masters" is not just for kids. It's crammed with action, first-rate special effects, a coherent plot and more super-villains than you can shake a sword at. With its careful attention to detail, lavish sets and sweeping score, "Masters" has larger-than-life excitement and a gutsy comic grandeur that most hero-versus-villain yarns lack.

And despite Lundgren's broken English, he wears the mantle of hero very well. Frank Langella's depiction of Skeletor is supremely evil. With his convincing skull make-up, ominous commands and shadowy hood, he makes Darth Vader look like a wimpy biker.

Believe it or not, "Masters of the Universe" is a smash. Violence aside, there is absolutely no reason a broad section of the movie-going public won't enjoy this film. And by all indications, a sequel can't be too far away and given the quality of those already being cranked out now, it certainly can't be any worse.

South African strike goes into day 18

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The nation's largest mining company Thursday fired more than 18,000 striking black miners, including 3,000 who staged a sit-in a mile underground, after their union voted to continue an 18-day-old walkout.

The country's largest black labor federation, the Congress of South African Trade Unions, said it was considering a national strike and other "solidarity action" unless the mineworkers' wage demands were met.

Anglo American Corp., the company worst hit by the strike, said it fired about 18,400 gold and coal miners for defying back-to-work ultimatums. Anglo last week fired 7,000 strikers, and said 14,000 more face dismissal if they do not return to work Saturday.

Among those dismissed were 3,000 men who staged an 18-hour sit-in inside Anglo's Western Deep Levels gold mine. Anglo did not say why the men staged the protest, but the National Union of Mineworkers said the men were forced underground Wednesday night by mine security.

The strikers were brought to the surface Thursday afternoon, given their final pay checks and driven off the mine compound in buses, some of the miners said.

The mass dismissals came after union members voted overwhelmingly Wednesday to reject an industry proposal that offered slight improvements in benefits but no additional pay. The union said it would accept a 27 percent pay raise, instead of its previous demand of 30 percent, but the Chamber of Mines refused to alter its already implemented increase of 15 to 23 percent.

With the strike again deadlocked, the Congress of South African Trade Unions — of which the miners' union is the largest affiliate — announced a series of steps it would take in support of the miners.

Jay Naidoo, general secretary of the 750,000-member congress, said international trade unions might be asked to order members not to handle South African coal and gold.

In addition, union leaders, at a strategy meeting Wednesday, approved the concept of a national strike, he said.

The mineworkers' strike, which began Aug. 9, is a legal walkout, but under South African labor law, companies may fire workers if they do not show up for work.

The union says 340,000 men are on strike at 44 coal and gold mines, while the Chamber of Mines says 210,000 miners are striking at 29 mines.

Agencies agree to discontinue practices

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Insurance Commission Fletcher Bell announced Thursday that five Johnson County title insurance agencies have agreed to halt certain business arrangements and trade practices in Kansas without admitting or denying his allegations that they were violating state law.

He identified them as Trusted Title Inc. and Commercial Title Insurance Co. Inc., both of Overland Park, and Meyerdirk Title Co., Land Title

Corp. and Security Title Co. Inc., all of Olathe.

Bell said the firms agreed to consent orders which found they had violated the Kansas Unfair Trade Practices Act for allegedly subcontracting title work at reduced rates.

The commission said these five orders are the first issued under a 1983 law which gave his office regulatory authority over the title insurance companies.

FAA attempts discipline

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Federal Aviation Administration called Thursday for a "hard look" at ways to improve cockpit discipline in the wake of a rash of flight crew mistakes and evidence that pilot errors caused a crash that killed 156 people in Detroit.

FAA Administrator Allan McArtor told a gathering of 250 chief pilots from most of the nation's airlines the industry must "recapture the public's confidence" in aviation safety by better pilot training and an insistence for cockpit professionalism.

But some of the pilots suggested the FAA itself had failed to provide adequate funds and leadership in addressing management problems faced in commercial cockpits today, citing past training programs that failed to gain adequate federal funding.

"We've got to rededicate ourselves to professionalism in this industry," McArtor told the pilots and suggested if the industry does not make the improvements "our non-aviation professionals will."

Elaborating on the remark at a news conference, McArtor said he was concerned that Congress might seek legislative solutions to safety problems should public confidence in aviation safety continue to wane.

Crews make errors

The FAA chief heard from more than a dozen pilots at the meeting, but acknowledged after the session that many of the participants probably were not as candid in their assessments during the public forum as they would have been in private meetings.

Most of the chief pilots briefly reviewed their airlines' commitment to improved training programs.

Don Nelson, vice president for flight operations at Northwest Airlines, whose plane crashed in Detroit on Aug. 16, suggested another meeting in "a roll-up-your-sleeves atmosphere" without television cameras. He said it would be "inappropriate" to discuss pilot training at length in light of the accident.

McArtor told the pilots that he saw "a genuine cause for concern" about the performance of both commercial and private pilots. He cited a sharp increase in the number of incidents, for example, in which pilots are failing to follow air traffic control directions.

The number of such so-called pilot deviations soared from 377 during the first quarter of 1985 to 763 during the first three months of this year.

McArtor said "new energy and new focus" must be given to assuring that pilots conduct themselves professionally. "You can't provide regulations to force professionalism," he said.

While the focus of the meeting was to develop better safeguards against pilot mistakes, some of the participants criticized the FAA for failing to move promptly enough on a broad range of aviation matters.

Henry Duffy, president of the Air Line Pilots Association, criticized the federal government for not providing money to develop better pilot training programs. He urged McArtor "to march into Congress and the Transportation Department" for additional funding.

The session, which was called by the FAA, comes less than two weeks after the crash near Detroit of Northwest Airlines Flight 255 during a takeoff.

Evidence from that accident is pointing increasingly toward an apparent failure by the veteran Northwest pilots to set the wing flaps for takeoff, keeping the jetliner from gaining adequate lift.

The Detroit crash and several other incidents this summer that resulted in near air tragedies have put renewed focus on pilot performance, prompting the FAA to call Thursday's meeting.

FAA officials as well as the industry expressed doubt, however, that the session is likely to result in any immediate changes in pilot training or operating procedures.

"The most I would expect is creation of an industry wide group to take a closer look at the issue," said one official, who spoke on the condition that he not be identified by name.

Even before the meeting began, however, the pilots union said there was widespread agreement between the industry and the FAA three years ago for a $9.4 million, three-year program aimed at looking for ways to solve human problems in the cockpit.

That program was laid out after a series of workshops conducted by the FAA on so-called "human factors"

Rights violation disturbs North

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Lt. Col. Oliver North pointed out to Attorney General Edwin Meese last fall that Meese had not read him his rights against self-incrimination before North acknowledged the diversion of Iran arms profits to the Contras, according to testimony released Thursday.

Marine Lt. Col. Robert L. Earl, who worked as North's aide on the White House national security staff, also said North had told him of asking Meese for a delay of 24 to 48 hours in Meese's initial investigation last November.

Meanwhile on Thursday, Pentagon sources and friends of Rear Adm. John Poindexter, who was North's boss until North was fired and Poindexter was reassigned last November, said Poindexter is retiring from the Navy this fall after nearly 30 years service.

Retired Adm. Clarence A. "Mark" Hill Jr., trustee of Poindexter's defense fund, said Poindexter "is very concerned about the image of the U.S. Navy" and wanted to leave before any indictments, which Hill said he expected.

During the public Iran-Contra hearings, Poindexter, who was President Reagan's national security adviser, testified he kept Reagan in the dark about the diversion of profits from the Iran arms sales to the Nicaraguan Contras — an operation mainly directed by North.

Earl, in his testimony, said that in North's interview with Meese on Sunday, Nov. 23, North was confronted with evidence of the diversion. North, according to Earl, related that he asked the attorney general, "Since you didn't warn me of my rights ... does this count?"

Earl also described helping North destroy documents crucial to the Iran-Contra affair and helping secretary Fawn Hall conceal other documents in her clothing to sneak them out of the White House.

See ordering information below

At 12:01 a.m. on a Sunday morning in October 1986, a camera shutter was clicked. What happened during the next 192 hours was called AWAKS (A Week at Kansas State).

Former Kansas State University photographers were given the opportunity to return to campus to make pictures of college life in the '80s as it existed for one week during October.

Kansas State has numerous alumni photographers in positions of prominence throughout the country. Some 30 alumni and nearly 15 current student photographers made up the AWAKS shooting team. The result of exposing 1,900 rolls of black-and-white and color film with more than 68,000 exposures is a 10-by-14-inch coffee-table book to be published in September 1987. You can relive the experience of attending college in the 1980s at the nation's first land-grant institution through the pages of this special edition.

Racing committee meets with panel

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA, Kan. — The Kansas Racing Commission took care of some personnel matters Thursday during its second meeting.

The five-member panel, appointed by Gov. Mike Hayden two weeks ago, selected its attorney, a former assistant attorney general now practicing law in Topeka. It also took a step toward hiring its chief enforcement officer.

The commission also conferred with Attorney General Robert T. Stephan and David Johnson, director of the Kansas Bureau of Investigation, about enforcement of regulations it will enact and security measures.

The commission accepted Stephan's recommendation that it hire Janet Chubb, a Topeka attorney. Mrs. Chubb served in Stephan's office in 1979-81 as an assistant attorney general, and she had a private practice before and after she was on the attorney general's staff. She also served as a research attorney for the Kansas Supreme Court and Court of Appeals.

Mrs. Chubb will join Stephan's staff as an assistant attorney general again because under the law, the commission's attorney must be on the attorney general's staff. Her salary was set at $35,000.

The commission also agreed to begin the process of selecting a director of enforcement, setting an Oct. 1 deadline for applications for the position.

Hayden

$32.03. Truck registration fees would increase by 25 percent, each being proportional to the axle weight of the vehicle.

Should the proposal be passed by the state legislature, Hayden projects that construction work could begin in early 1988.

"Our plan calls for...construction to begin next spring as soon as weather would allow, and we would have construction (sites) all over the state," he said.

The task force extends the starting of construction projects over seven years and plans for a total construction time of 10 years. All work is scheduled to be done by Kansas contractors using Kansas laborers.

"A quicker way is available, but it will be at a disadvantage to Kansas contractors and Kansas laborers," Hayden said. By contracting in large amounts, several out-of-state companies could be contracted for less cost.

Hayden indicated, however, that the option of out-of-state contractors was not part of his proposal.

The governor has called a special session of the Kansas Legislature for Monday to give consideration to his $1.7 billion comprehensive highway package.

GREAT COMMISSION CHURCH

Statement of Faith:

We believe the Bible to be the inspired, the only infallible, authoritative Word of God.

We believe there is one almighty, perfect and triune God: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, eternally coexistent personalities of the same essence.

We believe in the deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, in His virgin birth, His sinless life, His substitutionary death, His bodily resurrection, His ascension to the right hand of the Father and His personal return in power and glory.

We believe in the personality of the Holy Spirit, and in His ministry of convicting and regenerating sinful men, and indwelling, sealing and empowering believers.

We believe in the fall of man from the state of innocence in which he was created to one of total depravity in which he is devoid of spiritual life, and incapable, apart from divine power, of pleasing God.

We believe in the justification of the sinner by grace through faith alone.

We believe that the church universal is composed of all true believers and that its members should assemble themselves together in local churches for worship, prayer, fellowship and teaching with a view to being equipped to fulfill the Great Commission.

We believe in the bodily resurrection of the saved to immortality, and in the conscious eternal suffering of the lost.

Legislators back 'comprehensive' plan

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Nine House members, including several of the chamber's top leaders, participated in a show of support Thursday for a "comprehensive" highway program, one similar in size to one proposed by Gov. Mike Hayden.

Although they did not endorse a specific plan, the six Republicans and three Democrats said they supported a large plan that has a "major commitment of funds" and relies heavily on motor fuels tax and vehicle registration fee increases to finance it.

House Majority Leader Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, led a noon conference, which also was attended by Speaker Pro Tem David Heinemann, R-Garden City, and Rep. Bill Buntin, R-Topeka, chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

Also participating were Reps. Rochelle Chronister, R-Neodesha; Sandy Duncan, R-Wichita; Henry Helgeson, D-Wichita; Mike O'Neal, R-Hutchinson; Jim Russell, D-Coffeyville, and Jack Shriver, D-Arkansas City.

"We're trying to serve as a rallying point for people who want to see a comprehensive plan passed," Knopp said. "I'm certain that among the nine of us there are difference dollar figures."

A special session of the Legislature, which Hayden has called to have lawmakers consider his plan, begins Monday. His proposal calls for spending $1.71 billion over the next nine years to build more than 1,319 miles of new roads, mostly along existing highway corridors.

The state Department of Transportation would spend $5.58 billion for the new construction, maintenance of existing roads, major modifications of existing highways and the agency's normal, daily operations.

The state's gasoline and diesel fuel taxes would increase by five cents a gallon and vehicle registration fees by between 50 percent, for trucks, and 100 percent, for passenger cars. The state would issue nearly $1.3 billion in bonds, and the fees and taxes would be indexed, or adjusted annually for inflation.

The nine lawmakers said they think Hayden's proposal should be the starting point for any comprehensive plan. Shriver maintained a plan must be nearly the same size to pass the Legislature.

"I don't see how you can start dropping projects and expect something to pass," Shriver said. "Ninety percent of the people in Kansas want a highway program, and 10 percent want to pay for it."

Some group members expressed general support for indexing and bond financing, two concepts the House and Senate transportation committees rejected when they put together alternative highway plans this week.

The committees had unanimously rejected indexing, which they likened to an automatic tax increase without legislative review. However, Chronister said indexing would help KDOT keep up with inflation in building projects.

"Stranger things have happened," Chronister said, when asked whether she thought her colleagues would accept indexing.

Several members of the group also sharply criticized the House Transportation Committee's plan, which would allow voters to decide in the August 1988 primary election whether to increase the state's 4 percent sales tax a half-percent to finance major highway construction.

The plan also would increase the state's motor fuels taxes three cents a gallon, truck registration fees by 25 percent and passenger car fees by $32. A program for maintenance would be kept separate from one for new construction.

Chronister called such a separation a "poor concept." Shriver said he doubted a proposed amendment could find the two-thirds majority it would need to pass the House.

"I discount it as not an option at all," Shriver said.

The League of Kansas Municipalities also has adopted a policy statement in support of a "major and comprehensive" program.

In a policy statement released Thursday, the league said it would support a motor fuels tax increase of four or five cents.

Some Farm Credit System banks continue loss of financial status

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Some Farm Credit System banks are still losing ground despite efforts to buttress their financial status, in part because of excess overhead, their chief regulator said Thursday.

Overhead for the financially troubled system of 37 banks and 387 associations, all owned cooperatively, is running at $800 million a year, Farm Credit Administration Chairman Frank Naylor told a group of farm writers.

"We simply can't have that kind of overhead," said Naylor, whose agency regulates the $55 billion network of institutions which despite huge losses in recent years remains the nation's largest farm lender.

He gave as an example an institution that maintains offices in every county within its district and because of the amount of money it must earn to maintain itself cannot afford to make loans smaller than $43,000.

"And that's just bricks, mortar and staff," Naylor said. "It doesn't cover bad loans" and assorted other costs. He refused to name the bank or any other specific institutions within the system that he said were in trouble.

Legislation approved by the House Agriculture Committee recently would restructure the system and could cut down on overhead.

"The question is not whether you're going to maintain the viability of the system but what you're going to do to maintain the viability of the system."

—Frank Naylor

Naylor said his agency has taken no stand on the bill and will not. "We will continue to be an arm's length regulator," he said.

He expressed confidence that Congress would send a bill to the president's desk this year. The administration has already made a commitment to save the system, he said.

"The question is not whether you're going to maintain the viability of the system but what you're going to do to maintain the viability of the system," he said.

Naylor said any bill should provide strong regulatory authority to force institutions within the system to engage in sound business practices.

Some institutions that have been aggressive about contacting borrowers who are behind have succeeded in collecting 80 percent of the interest due while others have been reluctant to get in touch with borrowers, he said.

He said the average collection of overdue interest in the system is 11 percent.

The price tag on a rescue effort for the system remains unclear, he said.

Wildcat defenders strong as ever

By JEFF RAPP
Sports Editor

Anyone who saw it, heard about it or read about it, must know K-State's 1986 football season was nothing to cheer about.

A dismal 2-9 record, paired with agonizing losses to Northern Iowa and Missouri, was enough to cut game attendance from almost 28,000 at the Kansas game to barely over 13,000 for the bleak season finale against Colorado.

Through all the dampening of the crying towels last season, however, there were a few bright spots. One of those spots was the defensive backfield.

That unit tied a school record with 20 interceptions, while the defense as a whole led the Big Eight Conference in fumble recoveries and interceptions with 39.

Good things started happening during the first game of the season when the Wildcat defensive unit intercepted six passes in the season opener against Western Illinois.

Then a sophomore, defensive back Robert Easterwood collected three of the six thefts. Easterwood will be back this season, along with sophomores Erick Harper and Marcus Miller. Also returning will be senior Willie Haliburton, who returned an interception 42 yards in the initial contest to set up a K-State touchdown.

K-State head coach Stan Parrish had fond memories of last year's opener and hopes for this season.

"We'll take some 'dejavu' if we can get it. We'll take three more (interceptions from Easterwood)," Parrish said.

Last season, the defensive backfield was nicknamed the "Kiddie Corps," because the oldest member was Haliburton, who was then a junior.

This year, K-State head coach Stan Parrish doesn't expect a "sophomore jinx" for the corps. Rather, he looks for improvement.

"I expect them all to be better," Parrish said.

"We're about two deep in every position (in the defensive backfield) and I think because we are deep back there and we have such good competition, the motivation is with the kids. I don't think we'll see any sophomore slumps," he said.

Actually, the only sophomores are Harper, Miller and Tyreese Herds. Parrish said they've all improved.

Defensive back Robert Easterwood goes through pass coverage drills Thursday. Easterwood, along with Erick Harper, Marcus Miller and Willie Haliburton, should again be bright spots on the Wildcat squad.

Staff/Brad Fanshier

"They're more experienced. They're bigger, stronger and they're highly motivated kids," Parrish said. Parrish said with all the talent in the backfield, he'll be able to give playing time to a bevy of athletes. "I don't know if we can name our starters. We've got about eight or nine defensive backs that we think can really play. We also think it's important to roll them in and out of there to keep their legs fresh," Parrish said.

From Harper's point of view, not only the defensive backs will be better this season, but the entire season will be a raging success.

"It will be better, because we (the defensive backs) are more experienced. We're also working together as a team, not just individuals. I believe it will be a lot better than it was last year," Harper said.

Harper said after the preseason games on the 'Cats schedule this year, the team will really be prepared for the Big Eight season. The sophomore strong safety's predictions may seem overly optimistic.

When asked how many conference games K-State would win this season, Harper replied, "All of them."

NOTES: One day after a shortened practice because of injuries and bad weather, Parrish described Thursday's practice as "a full one."

Fans love a streak

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — A minor-league baseball player who leaped from obscurity to national fame by hitting safely in 69 straight games has been largely forgotten in the dusty annals of sports history.

Joseph Wilhoit, an outfielder for the Wichita Witches, ignited baseball fever in this southeast Kansas town in 1919 when he broke the record of 45 games held by another minor-leaguer.

Joe DiMaggio's major-league record of getting a hit in 56 consecutive games has stood since 1941. The latest assault on the record, by Paul Molitor of the Milwaukee Brewers, ended Wednesday night at 39 games.

Molitor's streak, which captured the nation's attention, was the best since 1978, when Pete Rose had a 44-game streak.

Wilhoit, too, had his moment in the sun, coming after an undistinguished stint in the major leagues that included an appearance in two World Series games.

Let go by the Boston Braves, Pittsburgh Pirates and New York Giants after spending parts of only three seasons with the teams, Wilhoit signed on with the Witches, a Western League team, in 1919.

No one took much notice of him until July 27 of that year, when he hit safely in his 46th straight game, breaking the record held by Jack Ness.

Jubilant fans watching the game passed a hat and collected $600 for their new star, a considerable sum at that time.

A local newspaper, the Wichita Eagle, reported: "The old town has baseballitis to the thirty-third degree, with a temperature that is chasing the mercury out of the top of the tube."

"The morning greeting here has changed from 'How do you do' to 'Did Wilhoit hit?'" the newspaper said.

On Aug. 20, 1919, Wilhoit's streak finally ended, as he was hitless in three at-bats.

McRae refuses offer

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Hal McRae says he does not expect any criticism for turning down an opportunity to become baseball's next black manager.

"I don't expect any and if I do get it, I don't care," McRae said Thursday after rejecting an offer to manage the Kansas City Royals.

"My family comes first. My job is to be a provider in the best way that I can."

McRae was offered the Royals job Wednesday night after Manager Billy Gardner was fired. John Wathan, who is white, was named manager after McRae turned down the job.

Baseball has been under fire from blacks for not having many blacks in management positions. Former Los Angeles Dodgers executive Al Campanis touched off the controversy when he suggested on ABC-TV's "Nightline" program that blacks might lack some of the necessities for management.

"I'm not a pioneer, I'm not a crusader," McRae said. "I'm just trying to do my job."

McRae said the job was offered to him by Schuerholz in an hour-long meeting Wednesday.

McRae retired as a player this year and has served as hitting coach. He has often said this year that he wants to spend more time with his family.

"Sometimes a guy wants to manage just for the sake of managing," McRae said. "Sometimes, he wants to manage to get himself a better position with another team. That's not my way. I just want a good situation. I don't want to manage just for the sake of managing."

McRae said he wasn't sure if he could commit himself fully to the job.

"I know it's a tough job and you have to make a strong commitment," he said. "I didn't want to have to be in the position of having to protect myself, of always trying to save my job."

"To me, the most important people are players. I wanted to be able to create an environment where the players could work and get their jobs done and not always be worrying about wins and losses."

K.C. fires Gardner

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Royals fired Manager Billy Gardner Thursday and replaced him with long-time Royals' player John Wathan.

Wathan, who was in his first year as manager of the Royals Class AAA team at Omaha, was given the job after it was turned down by Hal McRae, the team's batting instructor and former designated hitter, said General Manager John Schuerholz.

McRae has said previously that he wants to spend more time with his family. He said Thursday he wasn't sure if he could commit himself to managing.

The offer to McRae, who is black, followed owner Ewing Kauffman's announcement in the spring that the Royals would develop a plan to move minorities into management positions with the club.

Kauffman's statement followed a remark on national television by Al Campanis of the Los Angeles Dodgers that blacks might lack some of the necessities for management. That remark cost Campanis his job and called attention to the lack of blacks in front office and management positions throughout baseball.

The Royals were 62-64 going into Thursday's game with the Texas Rangers and trailed the Minnesota Twins by 3 1-2 games in the American League West.

"It is our belief this club still has an opportunity to win the pennant with the talent and commitment that it has," Schuerholz said. "We believe this club has the necessary talent to put a pennant drive on."

"We feel that with John Wathan's knowledge of the organization and especially his knowledge of the people on this team and more especially his feel for what the Royals organization means that he is the man most qualified to get the season on track, albeit with a short time remaining."

Schuerholz said that Wathan would manage the Royals for the rest of the season and that a decision about who would manage the club in 1988 would be made later.

"We've played poorly at times this season, we've played great at times," Wathan said. "My job is to get that consistency back."

"It is our belief this club still has an opportunity to win the pennant with the talent and commitment that it has. We believe this club has the necessary talent to put a pennant drive on."

—John Schuerholz

Wathan has been in the Royals organization for 17 years as a player, coach and manager. He was a catcher, first baseman and outfielder in 10 big league seasons with Kansas City.

"Even though I have limited experience as a manager, I think the way I played the game and the way I studied the game is in my favor," said Wathan, who has guided Omaha to a 62-70 record. "This is what I've always wanted. I've been in the Royals organization for 17 seasons and that is not something that not many ballplayers can say."

Wathan said he did not plan any major changes on the team.

"I think we'll get back to the old style of running, a little bit more hit-and-run instead of just waiting for something to happen," he said.

Wathan said he didn't think he would have a problem managing players that he had played with for many years. He said he planned to meet with key players and explain that he expected a "business-like atmosphere."

Wathan played on each of Royals championship teams, including the 1985 World Series winner.

He was a coach for the Royals in 1986 before moving to Omaha.

Wathan, the Royals regular catcher from 1981-83 and has a career .262 batting average. He hit .300 or better three times, including .328 in 1977.

Wathan set a major league record for catchers in 1982 when he stole 36 bases.

"I regard this as a golden opportunity," Wathan said. "I have confidence in my ability that I will be back to manage next year."

Schuerholz refused to say specifically why Gardner was fired.

"We felt we needed to make a change at this time, being in the race as we are and still have a chance to win," Schuerholz said. "We felt if we waited any longer it would have been too late for anyone to turn it around."

"Sometimes when teams don't play like you think they should, a leadership change is one way to remedy that."

Gardner took over the Royals when Manager Dick Howser resigned Feb. 23 because of a brain tumor. Gardner had been hired in the offseason as third base coach with the expectation that he would manage if Howser was too weak to handle the job.

Gardner's only other big league job was with the Minnesota Twins, where he was 268-353 before he was fired June 20, 1985.

Gardner managed Wathan for five seasons at Kansas City minor league clubs in Jacksonville, Fla., and Omaha.

"I feel bad getting the job this way," Wathan said. "Billy was like a father to me in the minor leagues."

Big Eight is beaten by China

By Staff and Wire Reports

Despite a 19-point, 11-rebound performance from K-State's Charles Bledsoe, the Big Eight Conference Select basketball team dropped a heartbreaking 74-72 decision this morning to the China National Team in the semifinals of the Beijing International Tournament.

Played before a capacity crowd of 18,000, the Big Eight Select team rallied from a 45-37 halftime deficit to grab a five-point advantage at one stage in the second half.

However, the China National Team connected on some timely baskets down the stretch to earn the victory.

China will now advance to tomorrow's championship contest against the Soviet Union.

Bledsoe topped the Big Eight Select team in scoring for the second straight contest. He hit on nine of 10 field goals while sinking his only free throw attempt for his 19 points.

In the previous contest against the Liaoning Province of China, Bledsoe scored 25 points on 12 of 13 shooting from the field, but in a winning effort.

Following Bledsoe in the China game in double figure scoring was Colorado's Scott Wilke with 14 points and K-State's Steve Henson with 12 points.

With a 3-2 tourney record, the Select team will now meet Czechoslovakia for third place at 3:30 a.m. (CDT) tomorrow to complete play in the tournament.

The Big Eight Select team opened its tournament action last week with a 74-69 victory over the Czechs.

Children win case Insurance firm must pay

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A federal court jury found after only 1½ hours of deliberation Thursday that a Boston-based insurance company must pay the children of the late Martin K. Anderson under an insurance policy he bought six months before he was murdered in November 1983.

The jury of five men and three women held that Lorna Anderson Eldridge, his wife at the time he was killed who has been charged with first-degree murder in the case, did not procure the policy on her husband's life, so the policy could not have been obtained by fraud as New England Mutual Life Insurance Co. claimed in suing to avoid payment.

In Hutchinson, Loren Slater, the grandfather of the four Anderson girls who will share in proceeds of the policy, unless the jury's verdict is overturned on appeal said, "We're just very happy for the children. They deserve it."

"I think the jury did what was right. The children are the real victims of this whole tragic event. We're very pleased for them."

The girls, ranging in age from 6 to 13, were in court briefly Monday before jury selection but did not return. They are Lori, Julia, Janelle and Jennifer.

Their mother, who is serving time in Kansas Correctional Institution at Lansing after pleading guilty to criminal solicitation to commit murder two years ago, originally filed a claim for the insurance proceeds for herself. But last November, she waived her claim to the money and asked that it be paid to the four girls.

Terrance Crebs of St. Louis, the attorney for New England Mutual, said he felt "fairly certain" that motions needed to form the basis of an appeal would be filed. The plaintiffs have 10 days to file those motions, and the defense attorney, Edward Hund of Wichita, has 10 days to respond.

Judge Dale Saffels, who presided over the trial, said he then would rule on the motions without having a hearing on them. He said it is routine in cases such as this for the losing party to file motions for a new trial and for a directed verdict for its side, regardless of the jury's verdict.

The case went to the jury of five men and three women after attorneys for the two sides delivered their closing arguments and Saffels issued his instructions to the jury shortly after 3 p.m. Thursday.

At issue was whether a $270,000 insurance policy on Anderson's life — taken out about six months before his death in November 1983 — was valid, or whether it was obtained through fraud and deceit by his wife, Lorna Anderson, who had remarried and is now named Eldridge.

"I think the jury did what was right. The children are the real victims of this whole tragic event. We're very pleased for them."

—Loren Slater

There was testimony during the trial that $210,000 of the policy was on Anderson's life, with an additional $60,000 to be paid if he died accidentally. It apparently will become a matter of negotiation on just how much of the policy will be paid.

New England Mutual contended that under a legal definition of procurement, she "procured" the policy by harassing Martin Anderson into taking it out, after a previous policy lapsed for lack of premium payments.

She was plotting his murder at the time the policy was applied for and issued, thus committing fraud and deceit which should have invalidated the policy, Crebs argued in closing arguments.

Anderson, who was shot to death at night in an isolated field south of Manhattan by a person wearing a ski mask, took out the policy basically on his own to provide financial security for his family, and paid all the premiums on it, making it a valid contract, countered Hund in his closing remarks for the defense.

It was up to the jury to decide if Lorna Anderson coerced her husband into getting the insurance policy while she conspired to have him murdered so she could collect the insurance proceeds, or whether he bought it on his own without significant influence from her.

Final witness in the four-day trial was Esther Aldrete of Dodge City, who formerly lived in Emporia and worked as a babysitter for the Andersons.

She testified that she heard the Andersons argue over insurance, with Lorna urging Martin to get more insurance after his policy lapsed for lack of payment in January 1983, and with Anderson putting it off for a time because of the family's financial problems.

Aldrete said she once heard Lorna Anderson tell somebody she was talking to on the telephone: "I cannot wait for Marty to die so I can start counting the green stuff."

Saffels instructed the jury that if it believed Lorna Eldridge influenced Anderson in applying for the insurance policy with the intent of killing him or having him killed to collect the benefits, then it should find in favor of the insurance company.

However, the judge also told the jury, if it believed Anderson purchased the insurance policy of his own free will and intended it for the benefit of his wife and four daughters, then it should find for them and make the company pay.

The jury took the second choice by answering no to a question posed by the judge on the verdict form which asked, "Do you find that it was Lorna Anderson Eldridge who procured the policy of insurance on Martin K. Anderson's life ... from the plaintiff New England Mutual Life Insurance Co.?"

Eldridge married Lorna Anderson on June 29, 1985, 19½ months after Martin K. Anderson was killed in a field south of Manhattan.

2 toddlers die after being left in car

By The Associated Press
HOMER CITY, Pa. — Two toddlers died after they were left locked in their parents' car with the windows nearly rolled up for more than five hours on a day when temperatures rose into the 80s.
Now neighbors are angry at the children's parents, and a farmhouse owned by relatives where they were staying burned.
"I just hope they get what they deserve. I'm just glad their house burned down so we can be rid of (them)," said a woman, one of several neighbors who refused to give their names for fear of retaliation from friends of Lisa and John Shields.

Police say the Shieldses probably went to sleep in the secluded farmhouse after leaving their children in the car last Friday.
More than five hours later, Lisa Shields found 1-year-old Calvin dead and 2 1/4-year-old Kristle gasping for breath, according to neighbor George Marsh. The girl died 24 hours later at a hospital.

Several hours after state police arrested the Shieldses on Saturday, the two-story frame house was ablaze.
Some neighbors yelled "Let it burn!" when firefighters arrived, said Fire Chief Joe Iezzi. State Police Fire Marshal William Jakela is considering arson, but he said an electrical malfunction also may be to blame.

"Everyone is upset. Nothing in this area has ever occurred like this," said Police Chief Mark Succheralli in this coal mining community of about 2,200, about 45 miles east of Pittsburgh.
Shields, 23, who is unemployed, and his wife, 19, are charged with involuntary manslaughter and endangering the lives of children. They remained in the Indiana County Jail on Thursday in lieu of $50,000 and $15,000 bond, respectively. No preliminary hearing has been set.

Neighbors say a chilly morning may have led Lisa Shields to believe her children were safe when she allegedly left them in the car at about 9 a.m.
The Shieldses lived less than 10 miles away in Indiana, Pa., but neighbors said they and other young people were frequently seen going to and from the house, which is owned by relatives.

Another neighbor said however that Lisa Shields appeared to be taking care of the children.
But Lisa Shields' mother, Lorraine Lutz, said she had reported her daughter and son-in-law's care of her grandchildren to Indiana County Children and Youth Services officials.
State law requires county officials to uncover clear evidence of wrongdoing or neglect before taking action against parents.

32 die in murder-suicide pact

YONGIN, South Korea — A cult leader called "Benevolent Mother" and 31 disciples took drugs and strangled each other in a murder-suicide pact after police began probing charges she swindled $8.7 million, police said Sunday.

Park Soon-ja, her three adult children and the 28 other followers apparently swallowed poison or powerful drugs on Friday and let themselves be strangled with rope and cloth in the attic of the cult's factory, said police officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity. They said the last man left alive, factory manager Lee Kyung-soo, hanged himself.

"It seems to be a murder-suicide case. It's really hard to believe," said one police officer. "This woman built an empire."

Park's husband, Lee Ki-jung, found the bodies Saturday. Police said then there were 33 dead, but said Sunday there were 32. They did not explain the discrepancy.

The pajama-clad bodies were piled atop each other, many with rope or cloth cords tied around their necks and tissue paper stuffed in mouths and nostrils. Nearby were five red candles, drug bottles and rubber gloves.

The dead included 28 women and four men, with the youngest victim a 17-year-old girl, police said. They said autopsies would be performed on some bodies.

Soviets 'reach for the skies'

MOSCOW — Homemade contraptions of scrap metal, sailcloth and wood sputtered across the rain-soaked grass of Tushino Airfield on Sunday as Soviet aviation buffs heeded official encouragement to reach for the skies.

Thousands of air force officers, flight instructors, amateur designers and the curious flocked to Tushino for the 11-day Moscow show, which ended Sunday. They carpeted the old airfield with motorized gliders, canvas biplanes, experimental rotorcraft and a four-wing flapper that only puffed smoke into the air.

The scene at the national ultralight aircraft demonstration was reminiscent of America's barnstorming days. Its goal was sharing ideas on design, construction and material acquisition in a nation with no private aviation industry.

In a country known for strict control of its airspace, the show also raised the question of how far aviation creativity can soar before hitting a headwind of official restrictions.

Private aviation is forbidden in the Soviet Union except within small, restricted testing grounds where flying clubs are based.

Dole says retaliation justifiable

WASHINGTON — Two senators seeking their parties' presidential nominations said Sunday the United States would be justified in retaliating against Iran if it attacks U.S. warships or the vessels they are protecting.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., also said he understood Iraq's reasoning for resuming its attacks on Iran this weekend in the 6½-year-old Persian Gulf war.

"I can understand the Iraqis," Dole said. "I also understand we're talking to the Iraqis, trying to get them to back off. But they see the Iranian oil being shipped out, a lot of money coming in, the Iraqis buying more weapons."

Dole, a likely candidate for the GOP presidential nomination, and Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., who has declared his presidential candidacy, were interviewed separately Sunday on CBS-TV's "Face The Nation" program.

Dole said the United States would have to retaliate if there were an attack and Iran were identified as the attacker.

Oscar-winner Lee Marvin dies

TUCSON, Ariz. — Oscar-winning actor Lee Marvin, a gravel-voiced World War II Marine who went on to star as the consummate tough guy in films like "The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance" and "The Dirty Dozen," has died at the age of 63.

Marvin, who also played an unwanted role in a historic "palimony" suit, died of a heart attack Saturday at Tucson Medical Center.

His third wife and childhood sweetheart, Pamela Feeley, was at his bedside when he died, said hospital spokesman Tom Reavis. Marvin had been hospitalized since Aug. 13 with a run-down condition related to the flu.

His best-known tough-guy roles were in such films as "The Dirty Dozen," "The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance," "The Big Red One," "Donovan's Reef," and "Prime Cut." His television series "M Squad" ran for three years beginning in 1958.

He won an Academy Award for his dual role as a drunken gunfighter and his evil twin in "Cat Ballou," the 1965 western parody which also starred Jane Fonda.

"There is going to be a very small, private funeral in Tucson," his publicist, Paul Wasserman, said Sunday in Los Angeles.

A public memorial service will be held in Hollywood within two weeks, he said.

Demolition derby turns fatal

WICHITA — A 16-year-old boy racing in a demolition derby died from burns after his car collided with another vehicle and burst into flames as his parents watched from the stands, officials said.

Gerald Debbrecht of Wichita was competing at 81 Speedway Saturday night when fire spread from beneath his station wagon after a collision and quickly engulfed the car, said track owner C. Ray Hall.

Four track employees rushed to the fire with hand-held extinguishers but were thrown back when the gas tank exploded, Hall said. None of the workers was injured.

The fire burned for a couple of minutes before a fire truck stationed at the track could extinguish it, Hall said.

"The car just backed into another car and it looked like the gas tank ruptured," said Lonnie Smith, one of seven other drivers in the race. "It just exploded into a ball of flame."

An ambulance was called at 10:49 p.m., and the victim was pronounced dead at St. Francis Regional Medical Center at 11:27 p.m., officials said.

Hall said the boy's parents were in the stands when the accident occurred.

Hall said it was the second fatality in the track's history. A race car driver also died in an accident in 1975.

Pet crow reunited with family

PONTIAC, Mich. — A pet named Coal is back home, sleeping with the kittens and eating hot dogs, hamburger, cat food and dog food.

"It's a member of the family," said Mary Locher, whose daughter, Mary Lewis of Davison, owned the crow. "It's tame, real tame. It's a very friendly crow."

The big, black bird apparently tried to follow the Lewises when they drove to Locher's home. But Coal took a wrong turn and adopted a Waterford Township family.

The Lewises learned of Coal's whereabouts from a newspaper article about a crow that landed on the heads of some youngsters, and they were reunited Friday.

"It sure was happy to see the kittens again ... it was raised with kittens. It sleeps with them and plays with them and eats with them," Locher said.

Board asks for pet ruling

License, vaccine required

By Candy Leonard
Government Editor

Although Manhattan Mayor Gene Klingler said he intends to outlaw Pit Bull Terriers, the local board of health has already completed its review of dog and cat control ordinances.

The law the board's proposing would require residents to license and vaccinate any dog or cat more than 4 months old and restrain any animal — including cats — to the owner's property.

The health board is recommending a licensing fee of $5 for neutered animals and $15 for unneutered pets. Members briefly discussed at their Friday meeting the possibility of requiring owners to neuter their animals.

"We're trying to cut down on unwanted dogs and cats," said William Tiemann, board member. "There needs to be an incentive to encourage people to neuter (their animals)."

The proposal also dictates that any animal impounded for running at large will be held for five days if licensed, and for three days if unlicensed. Board member Wayne Hensen said he hopes this will be an incentive to people who are reluctant to license their pets.

City officials said the holding period at the animal shelter is generally five to eight days before the animals are disposed of, including the adoption period.

The Manhattan-Riley County Board of Health further debated a revised version of "model" ordinances after tabling the issue last month. Following some discussion, they decided not to include any section pertaining to the licensing and regulating of kennels or pet shops in the document.

Although most members expressed a need for "standardized, minimal standards," the board will pass the task along to the governing bodies who can actually make such laws.

"I think a separate ordinance will give us the authority to correct deficiencies where they exist," said Jim Pearson, assistant city manager.

Chuck Murphy, director of the health department, said the board's recommendations for dog and cat licensing will first be presented to the Manhattan City Commission and then to the Riley County Commission in order to achieve similarity.

"I don't think we will want to wait on the kennels (ordinances) until the other one has been resolved," said Richard Hayter, board member and city commissioner.

In addition to working on a separate animal establishment ordinance, city commissioners also are likely to amend the city's current laws governing vicious animals.

"The city has laws that need to be tightened in regard to vicious dogs," Klingler said.

Although the ordinances aren't on the agenda for the city commission yet, Hayter said they might be in a couple of weeks.

"We are usually locked into our agenda two weeks ahead of time."

Shuttle tests successful

By The Associated Press

BRIGHAM CITY, Utah — A redesigned space shuttle booster rocket roared into life in its first full-scale test-firing Sunday, a crucial step before the planned renewal of shuttle missions next June.

The 126-foot-long solid fuel rocket blasted orange flame 500 feet and a thick cloud of smoke boiled 1,500 feet into the sky above Morton Thiokol Inc.'s desert test site 25 miles west of here.

The rocket used up 1 million pounds of propellant during the two-minute test, consuming it at a 9,000-pound-per-second pace, said company spokesman Rocky Raab.

"It obviously ran the right amount of time. The plume ran normal, it appears to be a normal, successful test," said Carver Kennedy, Morton Thiokol's vice president for space programs.

The test of the solid fuel booster was originally scheduled Thursday, but was aborted three times by test equipment failures.

John Taylor, spokesman for the Marshall Space Center in Huntsville, Ala., told reporters Sunday that the first abort, caused by the failure of a water line for a cooling system, led to the two subsequent delays involving computer problems that occurred when engineers tried to reset the countdown.

"The abort...created these ground-support problems where the computers were out of sequence," Taylor said.

NASA's shuttle fleet has been grounded since Jan. 28, 1986, when a flaw in a Morton Thiokol booster led to the destruction of the shuttle Challenger and the deaths of its seven crew members.

Before the boosters are certified and the shuttles are allowed to fly again, officials have decided that the redesigned booster must be test-fired at least four times on the ground.

NASA officials hope the new rocket design has eliminated the flaw that destroyed Challenger.

Morton Thiokol announced the new test time late Saturday after company and National Aeronautics and Space Administration workers spent a day performing countdown simulations.

The simulations were to "ensure that test computers and other test support electrical equipment and the thrust vector control system were functioning and ready to support the actual test countdown," said NASA spokesman Dominic Amatore.

The thrust vector control system controls the rocket's nozzle, which can be swiveled for directional control. On Thursday, one of the failures came when a computer problem prevented start-up of that system, Amatore said.

Saturday's simulations "went like clockwork," said John Thomas, NASA's solid rocket motor design team manager from the Marshall Space Center.

"We're extremely pleased with the results and we're confident we'll get a good test off," he said.

Thursday's first attempt at a test firing was halted 10 seconds before ignition when a water main broke. Water was to be used to cool the rocket casing after firing.

The second countdown ended three minutes from ignition.

Costa Rican leader to speak at K-State

By The Collegian Staff

Costa Rican President Oscar Arias Sanchez will deliver a Landon Lecture on Sept. 21. His stop in Manhattan will be the first of a five-day tour of the United States.

Originally invited to be a lecturer last spring, Arias accepted the invitation but said a fall date would be more convenient, said Charles Reagan, assistant to the president and chairman of the Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues.

On Sept. 22, Arias is scheduled to speak to senators and representatives on the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives in Washington, D.C. He will speak to the United Nations Sept. 23 and will receive an honorary doctorate from Harvard University Sept. 24 in Cambridge, Mass.

Arias is expected to discuss the peace accord he achieved earlier this month in Guatemala with four other presidents of Central American countries, Reagan said.

President Arias' schedule for his visit to Manhattan is:

- 10:30 a.m. — Deliver lecture.
- 11:45 a.m. — Attend luncheon with the Landon Lecture Patrons in the Union Ballroom.
- 1:15 p.m. — Attend private meeting with academic experts on Latin America from K-State and other schools.
- 2:30 p.m. — Attend open meeting with students.

Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan., will speak Sept. 9 on the 100th birthday of her father, Alf Landon, for whom the series is named.

Aquino deserves help consolidating support

Yet another coup attempt has been quelled in the Philippines, and the sizable U.S. interests in that country have been protected one more time. However, this protection came with virtually no help from the United States itself. This is both potentially damaging and unfortunate, especially considering how Ronald Reagan likes to throw U.S. dollars around to protect other countries.

Whatever happened to looking out for our own interests?

Consider: The United States has funneled millions of dollars into Nicaragua to support the Contras, and that support offers highly questionable and, at best, indirect benefits to the United States.

Consider: The Reagan administration insists on dealing with and offering arms to an Iranian administration headed by a religious fanatic who has stabbed us in the back and made us a laughingstock innumerable times.

Consider: Reagan felt it necessary to spend an exorbitant amount of money to transport Ferdinand Marcos, the deposed leader of the Philippine, and his wife Imelda to Hawaii and to make sure they were living comfortably.

With this endless parade of dollars exiting Washington, it would seem logical that Reagan would do all possible to help Corazon Aquino maintain order in the Philippines. But logic is at a premium with Reagan.

The only support given by the United States has been a virtual pat on the back followed by a "Good going, Cory."

Neither pats on the back nor cheerleaders will keep the Philippines a free country. And it's safe to say the U.S. military base in the Philippines won't be too effective if the country is unstable.

Reagan must take a more vested interest in ensuring Aquino maintains power. After all, Aquino has taken a hard-line stance against communism, something that should please Reagan immensely.

U.S. action would not only promote free citizenry in the Philippines, but it would also protect our interests in the country as well.

Ronald Reagan should look at the big picture and realign his priorities.

Union treats smokers unfairly in Stateroom

With the new smoking laws implemented this summer, smokers on campus now have to light up outdoors, in small, isolated rooms or not at all. No longer can smokers stroll through campus buildings and smoke just anywhere.

The new smoking laws were enacted, no doubt, with the well-being of all in mind. Even smokers would agree that clean air is much more desirable than polluted air.

However, the K-State Union has gone a bit too far in its attempt to comply with the new laws. In fact, the Union has virtually "put out the smokers' lights."

The meeting place on campus — the Union Stateroom — has placed smokers in its darkest, most hidden corner. Though smokers have been allowed the right to smoke in the Stateroom by having this tucked-away, poorly ventilated "cave" set aside just for them, they do not have the same facilities non-smokers have in regard to lighting.

The Stateroom's smoking area is so dimly lit that smokers have to strain their eyeballs to do the things non-smokers can do in their well-lit rooms, like read a newspaper, study for an exam or do homework.

In the rush to comply with the laws, apparently the Union's administrators forgot to consider the fact that smokers like to read, study, eat and socialize in the Stateroom just like non-smokers do. Asking smokers to limit their smoking is justified. And even sticking smokers in a poorly-ventilated back room where people-watching — and therefore socializing — has been limited is tolerable. But asking them to strain their eyes to read is simply not fair.

School avails benefits

All my professors started off their classes encouraging all of us to participate by saying something like, "There's no such thing as a dumb question."

I take that as somewhat of a challenge. "I see we're having a test on the eighteenth. It's my birthday the day before...do you think it would hurt my score if I took it with a hangover?" or "Mr. geology professor, does anyone care that those rocks used to be in Idaho?" or asking any professor, "Why are we here?"

The answer would have to explain why a liberal arts education is better than a technical school education. The explanations always include better job opportunities, more exposure to "the world around you," and the importance of an educated, responsible citizenry.

Those arguments usually induce vomiting in the classrooms. The only arguments most students are convinced by are that college graduates have a better chance of making higher salaries than technical school graduates. Also, when the game Trivial Pursuit was popular among yuppies, college graduates could use their high-priced education to show up technical school graduates. In fact, some say an entrepreneur developed the game as a way to use all of the useless information he learned as a collegiate.

For most students, the old arguments don't convince them they like to be in art history, short story or survey of mass media classes. After all, the classes required outside a student's major cover a lot in a short amount of time, information usually learned the night before the tests and then forgotten until finals.

Then when it comes time for "responsible citizens" to decide something, they can say, "I remember learning something about that in college."

As for college exposing students to the world argument, some students say the classes do not expose them to anymore than what they would have learned on their own. They maintain that college, being a different environment than what they grew up in, exposed them to a whole new picture of life and people. The liberal arts classes weren't that important in the total scheme of things.

Exposure, however, doesn't necessarily include learning. I was practically secluded on a farm for 18 years of my life. I know little about the trade except what applies to me — like peanut butter sandwiches are better on white bread and bologna on wheat.

Learning is an active process that most of us must be forced to do with tests, quizzes and term papers. Think about how naive most freshmen are, regardless of their backgrounds. They still have the ability to apply general statements from anything like international events to the roommate dispute across the hall. "This side is obviously right and the other doesn't have a case." "Moss only grows on the north side of trees," or "He's just crazy."

We've all heard people say, "I paid over $600 for tuition, and I'm going to get my money's worth." After consoling those who must put up with such fanatics, it is important to realize education cannot be bought. It's not as easy as giving someone a check and spending 18 hours a week in classrooms. If it were this easy, how could Oral Roberts, who has his own college, be explained. He has a history of saying ignorant things to large television audiences. The list of the rich and stupid is quite lengthy.

Practical people would question the importance of learning. Professionals who know more about their own field are better off than those who know a little about many different fields. This is not necessarily true.

For instance, I'll be a better journalist if I study geology because someday I may have to explain a Florida sink hole. It would be in a pre-med student's best interest to know psychology fairly well. It would benefit business majors if they knew the how people revolt against institutions and why they do so.

The benefits of a liberal arts education may be innate. The reasons students decide to put up with taking classes which they have no interest in must be fairly strong. It is impossible to believe money motivates all 18,000 of us here this semester. As corny as a "well-rounded education" may sound, it has its own merits.

Club publicity

Editor,
For several semesters in the past, I served as an officer for the Association of Adults Returning To School.

For several semesters, our organization has attempted to make ourselves known to the older, returning student. We have put announcements in the Collegian Bulletin only to have the speakers' names omitted. I have submitted letters only to have them not acknowledged. Our members have been interviewed on several occasions only to see nothing come of the time we have given to the reporting class students. We have seen articles written about our adviser only to have our organization not be acknowledged.

However, last week on a local call-in radio show, the guest on that show was Marilyn B. Trotter, director of new student programs for K-State. Unfortunately, most of our members were unable to hear her speak. My husband, Max Ulveling, did hear Trotter speak. He reported that she spoke highly of our organization and of its members.

To this, I would like to publicly thank Trotter for her public support of our organization. We were happy to be of assistance to her and will be glad to help her in the future.

Religion war

Editor,
Re: Mike Krueger's column in Aug. 27 Collegian.

You certainly had a lot to say regarding religion and our world's troubles, but I must say you traveled far beyond what I would consider logical argument.

Religions, in simple terms, are collections of beliefs held in common by groups of people in varying numbers and "make-up." They give people an explanation for the world they live in, a sense of belonging within their own religions, and, in many cases, a direction in which to set their lives. But an important thing to remember is that religions don't make people — people make religions. Religions don't "tell" people what to do. Rather, people "choose" to believe in what a religion says and choose to do as it asks.

That's where your argument goes awry. Granted, in some countries religion is the reason for disagreement and, at times, war. But in other cases, religion has nothing to do with it. Sometimes it's who has greater technology, or bigger guns or nicer cars.

You see, it's not the cause that creates problems in this world, it's people. Take away religion and they'll find another reason to argue. It's human nature, plain and simple, and there's just not a lot we can do about that.

And I certainly hope that you don't really believe that people think that others should die because they don't believe in the same religion. My neighbor doesn't hate me because I'm not Christian, and his neighbor doesn't hate him because he's not Jewish. It just doesn't work that way.

So maybe you ought to just take some time to think about the things you said. I, myself, am not a religious person, but I nonetheless find great offense in the ideas you presented. Religions are not the cause of our world problems. Truly, I believe they make the world a far greater place.

Permit problem

Editor,
Now that you have purchased your $22-$44 parking permit and feel relatively secure that you can park ticket free this year (if you are lucky enough to find a parking space), beware...you may still be subject to a penalty through no fault of your own.

Late last spring, I returned to my vehicle and found an $8 parking ticket fastened to my windshield. To my surprise the supposedly reliable parking permit had fallen off my rearview mirror and onto the dash in full view.

I immediately appealed the ticket and within weeks the decision came back "denied." Frustrated, I contacted Burney Mendenhall, chair of the faculty/staff appeals review committee, who informed me that there were problems with the permit staying secure on some vehicles, and she would bring the case up at their next meeting. Additionally, I reiterated my complaint in a letter to her and sent copies to Charles Beckom, KSU Police, and President Jon Wefald. Only Wefald was courteous enough to look into the matter. George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, explained there have been complaints about the permits falling off and offered this advice.

"I solved this (problem) by using a strip of masking tape across the open area. This was peeled back when I wanted to remove the permit."

I would like to thank Miller for the extensive time and effort he put into his response. I feel personally responsible for letting everyone know of this ingenious solution so they may take the precautions outlined above. It is my hope that the Traffic and Safety Council and whoever else is involved with issuing the parking permits will put their heads together and come up with a new design for the permit so that those of us who have experienced problems with them falling off will not be "ripped off" again.

K-State reinforces exchange program

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

Central America has been the focus of interest for the College of Agriculture since three K-State representatives visited there the first week of August.

President Jon Wefald, Vernon Larson, assistant provost for international programs and William Jorns, assistant director of international agricultural programs, traveled to La Universidad de Costa Rica in Costa Rica and the Pan American Agriculture College in Honduras.

The trip was taken as part of a plan to improve relations.

Wefald travels to Costa Rica, Honduras

K-State has agreements to create goodwill, strengthen public relations and exchange students and professors with many other colleges.

"They (the agreements) are mostly benign documents saying we want to foster better relations and possibly improve the student and faculty exchange," he said.

Faculties of the schools have gained a greater understanding and respect for each other as a result of the trip, Jorns said. Wefald has also pledged greater support for the exchange programs.

"If our president goes down and personally becomes familiar with the institutions overseas with which we have relations, and meets with their faculty, that speaks for itself. It lays the groundwork for some other things to happen," he said.

A larger student and faculty exchange program is a positive outcome of the trip. Although there are no K-State students or faculty in Costa Rica now, several exchanges have occurred with the Pan American Agriculture College.

Annually as many as 20 students from the Honduran university are enrolled in classes at K-State, said David Mugler, associate dean of the College of Agriculture and director of resident instruction.

To be selected for the program is an honor, Mugler said.

This select group of Pan American Agriculture College graduates must be recommended by the director of the college and perform well during a stringent interview.

"We'll have more (exchanges) I'm sure and we'll have more faculty members spending a sabbatical there," he said.

Simon Malo, director of the Pan American Agriculture College, has recently completed an eight-month sabbatical with K-State's Agriculture College. In addition to writing a book about the Pan American Agriculture College, Malo has delivered several lectures.

The Pan American Agriculture

College is a three year agricultural university. Based on the trimester system, a student must complete nine semesters of school, including eight courses in English.

"I think that's why they do so well here at K-State. They do have a good command of the English language," Mugler said.

Israel yields to pressures

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — The Cabinet yielded to strong pressure from Washington and voted by the narrowest of margins Sunday to cancel production of the Lavi, a needle-nosed jet fighter designed as Israel's warplane of the future.

The vote, which followed months of acrimonious debate, was 12 to 11 with one abstention.

America had provided nearly all of the financing for the project, and U.S. officials were concerned about the huge cost over-runs.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres of the Labor Party proposed cancellation. Absorption Minister Yaacov Tsur, a Laborite, said the Cabinet was headed for a tie vote, which would have kept the Lavi alive. But he said party leaders pressured Health Minister Shoshana Arbeli-Almozlino to abstain rather than vote for continuing the project, as she had been inclined to do.

She abstained, but wept as the vote was taken, radio stations reported.

The decision was a setback for Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and his right-wing Likud bloc. Party prestige was riding on the project, since it was launched under a Likud government in 1980.

Cancellation was also a blow for Israel's billion-dollar-a-year arms industry, already struggling from the loss of overseas markets, including South Africa and Iran, in recent years.

Lavi supporters said cancellation would produce layoffs of 5,000 of the 20,000 employees of Israel Aircraft Industries, or IAI, the state-owned company that developed the plane.

About 3,000 angry workers left IAI's main factory after the vote was announced and blocked a main road leading to Ben Gurion International Airport. Some shouted slogans against Peres, and workers' leaders threatened to halt commercial air traffic to and from Israel.

About 50 IAI employees protested outside Shamir's office during the Cabinet meeting, shouting anti-American slogans in Hebrew, such as: "They (the Americans) could care less about Israel!"

Washington provides Israel with $1.8 billion dollars a year in military aid.

Foes of the project, including most military commanders and Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin, said the Lavi was simply too big a project for Israel to finance.

"Israel's economic and defense needs could not but dictate a decision, although a painful one, to stop the Lavi project," Finance Minister Moshe Nissim told reporters as he left the Cabinet session.

The United States provided nearly all the $1.3 billion already spent on developing the plane with its swept-back wings, and testing two prototypes, which flew successfully. U.S. defense contractors would have also produced half or more of the plane, including the engine, tail and sections of the wing.

Israel Army Radio said up to $400 million may have to be spent to disentangle Israel from the project, most of it to settle with eight American subcontractors. It said Peres' proposal would mean 2,000 lost jobs.

1. Health fees are established upon the recommendation of the Student Senate with approval by the Board of Regents.
2. All students who are enrolled and attending classes during a regular semester or summer session who have paid health fees are eligible for care.
3. Those enrolled in Special Courses, for varying periods of time, who have made previous arrangements for health care coverage at Lafene are eligible for care. (Lists of these students must be furnished prior to being seen at Lafene.)
4. Only students, who have paid the health fee, may elect to have their spouse also covered at Lafene; however, they must pay the spouse fee within 10 days of the time their own health fees are paid. (Children cannot be seen.)
5. Emergency care, prior to referral, will be given anyone who comes in.
6. Students enrolled in 6 hours or less, electing not to pay the health fee during the Fall or Spring semesters, who wish to be seen, will be charged $20 for each office visit. This charge continues until the full health fee has been exceeded, then that student will be afforded the same privileges as the regular fee paying student for the remainder of that semester.
7. Students who were enrolled in the Spring and pre-enrolled for the Fall semester but not attending summer school may pay $15 and be eligible for care during the summer. This fee may be paid within 30 days prior to summer registration and ends the day classes begin. A late fee of $20 will be accepted for the remainder of the summer.
8. Health fees are good until 12 o'clock the night the next semester begins.

NOTE: In addition to the above mentioned fees, there are minimal charges for certain supplies and services and the charges are subject to change without prior notice.

Johnson breaks 100 meter record

By The Associated Press

ROME — Ben Johnson of Canada broke the world record in the men's 100 meters by one-tenth of a second Sunday, claiming the mantle of "World's Fastest Human" and defeating Olympic champion Carl Lewis in their duel of speed at the World Track and Field Championships.

Johnson shattered the four-year-old mark with a time of 9.83 seconds. The old record of 9.93 was set by Calvin Smith of the United States in 1983 in the high altitude of Colorado Springs, Colo. Johnson's mark was set at sea level.

"This record is the best ever in the history of track, in all events," the compact, often sullen Johnson said.

The new time represented a drop of 1 percent, unheard of in track and especially in a race so short. An equivalent decrease in the world mile record would be 2.26 seconds.

"If I had been asked before the race if either of us could have clipped a 10th of a second off, I'd have said no," Lewis said.

In winning, the 25-year-old Johnson beat Lewis for the fifth consecutive time. Lewis, however, had nothing to be ashamed of in this historic race.

He finished second in 9.93, equaling the old mark.

Another world record was set on Sunday when Stefka Kostadinova of Bulgaria cleared 6 feet 10 1/4 inches in the women's high jump. That beat the mark of 6-9 3/4 she set in 1986.

Johnson had been leading up to his record-smashing performance with a brilliant series of races this month. But to break the world record by such a considerable margin could hardly have been expected.

"I had the best conditions to break the world record," Johnson said.

"I respect him for what he did," Lewis said.

In addition to the historic 100 and Kostadinova's record in the high jump, there were three other finals Sunday.

East German Silke Gladisch also used a strong start in winning the women's 100 in 10.90, holding off the late bid of countrywoman Heike Drechsler.

Drechsler, who had broken the meet record with a 10.95 clocking in the semifinals, was next-to-last out of the blocks in the final and could not make up the ground against the quick-striking Gladisch.

Drechsler's late rush got her second place in 11.00, just ahead of Jamaica's Merlene Ottey, third in 11.04.

Italy's Maurizio Damilano thrilled the partisan crowd by winning the men's 20-kilometer (12.4-mile) walk through the streets of Rome in 1 hour 20 minutes 45 seconds, breaking the meet record of 1:20:49 set by Mexico's Ernesto Canto in the first World Championships in 1983.

Jozef Pribilinec of Czechoslovakia was second in 1:21:07 and Jose Marin of Spain finished third in 1:21:24.

Seppo Raty, a relatively unknown Finn, scored a surprising victory in the men's javelin, throwing 274-1 on his final attempt.

Viktor Yevyukov of the Soviet Union took the silver medal at 270-9, and Jan Zelezny of Czechoslovakia, the world record-holder, was third at 269-8.

Edwin Moses, two-time Olympic champion, world record-holder and defending world champion, glided into Monday's semifinals of the men's 400-meter hurdles along with American teammates Danny Harris and David Patrick, West German Harald Schmid and Senegal's Amadou Dia Ba.

Moses won his first-round heat in 49.03.

Parrish calls for student support

Staff/Gary Lytle

K-State head football coach Stan Parrish tries to draw support for the upcoming season at an ICAT meeting Sunday evening in Kite's Bar &

Grille. Parrish also expressed dismay at the low number of student tickets that have been sold.

By Chad L. Sanborn
Campus Editor

Amid purple and white streamers and pictures of K-State legends, Head Football Coach Stan Parrish told members of the "I Contributed a Twenty" club to shed the disappointments of the recent past and do their part to help build a winner.

In a brief speech to a crowd of about 100 people, most of which were members of ICAT, at Kite's Bar and Grille Sunday evening, Parrish expressed his dismay at the low number of student season-ticket sales.

"Our overall sales are up about twenty percent," he said. "All the single game ticket sales are up, and the student ticket sales are down. With a thousand new students on campus, something is wrong," he said.

Parrish blamed the low sales on misplaced issues.

"The fact that the program has not been successful should not be the issue right now. The issue should be to get out and support the new program and the new team and the kids in the program right now," he said.

Parrish briefed the audience on their part in building a winning program.

"A great student body is what it takes to get things done," he said. "A year ago - our opener - we had great student reaction. The KU game we had great student reaction. We played a week later at homecoming against Missouri and nobody is in the stands. It is very difficult for a team to remain at a high emotional level without support."

He then promised the team would do its part to build the long-sought-after winning tradition; even in the face of a schedule USA Today rated the toughest in the Big Eight.

"Whatever needs to be done, we'll get it done, and I guess our job is to play better and win," he said.

Parrish was anything but subtle concerning the season opener with Austin Peay, a team many people may write off as easy.

"We are going to prepare ourselves to go out Saturday and play very, very well against Austin Peay — a team not many of us know much about. But not many of us knew much about Northern Iowa either."

Northern Iowa is the NCAA Division 2 school that beat the Wildcats 17-0 in their second home contest last season. Even though the Panthers topped the 'Cats under Jim Dickey in the previous season, Parrish thought he could win that contest.

Parrish summed up the entire evening, as well as a key to the season, in five words: "We need you out there."

Big time awaits Wildcats

By BILL LANG
Sports Writer

For K-State football coach Stan Parrish this is already a very big year.

The "big" refers to some of his new players, who are the size of "BIG" time college football players.

"This year's class is one of the biggest we've ever had here," Parrish said at the Big Eight Skywriters news conference Aug. 20. "The defensive line will be the biggest we've had here in a long time."

The defensive line (counting only the tentative starting players) has increased in size by about 10 pounds per position. Among the linebackers, the weight has increased by about seven pounds and in the secondary the weight has increased by about five pounds per man.

This year's squad is one of the heaviest on record. Among the returnees and scholarship freshmen, some 17 players weigh 250 pounds or more.

The offensive line, which didn't increase in weight too much from last season, may be the telling key in the success or failure of this year's 'Cat football team.

"We'll have to have lady luck riding with us all season long," Parrish said. "We have some big strong kids up front and that's good. What we don't have, though, is depth at any of the positions."

The starting six for this year's offensive line is; left tackle, Russ Stange, 6-6, 240; left guard, Rob Goode, 6-2, 245; center, Paul Yniiguez, 6-3, 265; Matt Garver, 6-4, 285; right tackle, Will McCain, 6-4, 260; and tight end, Kent Dean, 6-4, 245.

Dean, however, is listed as not probable for the Austin Peay game, due to a hernia suffered during fall workouts.

Is this a new and better team that Parrish will be exhibiting this year, or should fans expect another long year?

"We made a lot of personnel

At 6-foot-8 and 270 pounds, defensive tackle Haywood Adams is definitely one of coach Stan Parrish's "big" men.

moves in the spring and I think 99 percent of them worked out for the betterment of our team and of our players," Parrish said. "A few of the key changes included moving Rick Lewis from noseguard to fullback. Dewayne Bazel moved from inside to outside linebacker and did an outstanding job there. Matt Garver went from offensive guard to offensive tackle and Rob Goode went from center to offensive guard. I think that both handled the moves quite well. All in all, I think the moves were good for us," Parrish said.

This year's recruiting class was also a very good sign for Parrish that things wouldn't and shouldn't be all bad at KSU Stadium.

"It was pretty easy to evaluate this year's class," he said. "Most of them were with us during the spring drills. We think we have some outstanding players in that group, also, I think, in time, our recruiting class is going to go down as a very solid one."

One of the biggest players ever to walk the K-State campus is among that class of athletes.

Haywood Adams, No. 97, from Texas is listed at 6-8 and 270 pounds, and should see plenty of action at defensive tackle spot.

Seitzer pleases hometown fans

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Rookie Kevin Seitzer hasn't disappointed anyone this season and he wasn't about to embarrass himself in front of his hometown fans.

A group of about 400 came up from Lincoln, Ill., for "Kevin Seitzer Day," including his high school coach, Sam Medonia. He responded with three hits, including his first grand slam, Sunday to help the Kansas City Royals to an 11-7 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

"I was nervous," Seitzer said. "I usually choke up in pressure situations like that. It really felt good and I got the ball back."

The homer, his 13th of the season, landed in the bullpen and his roommate, catcher Larry Owens, retrieved the ball.

Seitzer's home run came in the eighth and appeared to do little more than extend the Royals' lead from 7-4 to 11-4, but it turned out to be the margin of victory as the White Sox added three runs in the eighth and ninth innings.

Jamie Quirk drove in four runs, including three on a homer off Rich Dotson that capped a five-run sixth that put the Royals ahead to stay.

Quirk struck out in the second and walked in the fifth before hitting his fourth homer.

"The walk was the key at-bat," Quirk said. "It relaxed me and gave me confidence."

The Royals hit four straight singles before Quirk homered.

"I thought he (Dotson) was the victim of some bad defense," White Sox Manager Jim Fregosi said. "There were some balls hit that I thought should have been caught. There were some ground balls that could have been double plays or outs and we just didn't make the plays."

It was the Royals' third triumph in four games since John Wathan replaced Billy Gardner as manager. Bud Black, 6-6, was the winner.

Rituals begin once more as 'Cats prepare to dine

It's that time of the year again.

This is the time when K-State football fans are usually the happiest. Emotions run high as the Wildcats head into the season-opening football game with a .500 record and are primed to play a team the 'Cats should be able to handily defeat.

Fans are hyped and ready to crowd into KSU Stadium to watch their team at the height of its glory. That height is achieved when the 'Cats take a lesser team and beat them to the point of embarrassment, to give the fans a "fix" of what it feels like to be a winner.

Sure, in the 1985 home opener against Wichita State, 21, 399 fans showed up to watch the Wildcats lose 16-10 to mark the beginning of what turned out to be a nightmare of a season, but for the most part, K-State can hold its own against an obviously lesser opponent.

K-State is 16-7 in home openers since 1948, with the only other recent loss coming against California State-Los Angeles in 1983.

So now it's time for the K-State preseason ritual to begin once more. Almost like clockwork, fans will attend kickoff parties, buy new purple sweatshirts and flock to the stadium in droves — smiling all the way, ready for the feast.

The initial contest, which this year is against Austin Peay State University, should prove to satisfy even the finicky Wildcat fan.

This team, whose nickname is the "Governors," will traipse into town as just an actor playing a role — which is to get beat in Manhattan in front of hordes of K-State fans. The script could read: "small school with recognizable name sends football team to midwest to boost morale of win-hungry fans."

But let's put ourselves in the other guy's shoes for a minute.

Austin Peay, which is located in Clarksville, Tenn., is a school with an enrollment of about 5,000. With what I imagine is a close-knit student body, the Governors are probably coming to town looking to kick off their season with a win over a Big Eight Conference team.

Their record was 5-6 last year, with wins coming over powerhouses like Tennessee-Martin, Kentucky State, Tennessee Tech, Youngstown State and an electrifying overtime victory against Middle Tennessee State.

If they were to win against K-State, it might catapult their program to heights yet unseen.

But slow down, Governors, the star of this show is the Wildcat football team. This Saturday is for the purple people, not for some fly-by-night Tennessee school looking for a miracle season.

So fans, get ready for the "feel-good" era of K-State football, when the 'Cats pounce on their prey and Willie Nelson sings the night away.

Of course, with expectations running high and thousands of fans hungry for a taste of victory, it would be terrible — even disastrous — if the Governors were to pull off an upset. Humiliation and disgust might sweep into the stands if the preseason pansy (whose name most people don't know how to correctly pronounce) stamped an "L" at the top of the Wildcats' '87 schedule.

Head coach Stan Parrish is right. This game is definitely a must-win situation.

Garnett Cease, Wamego, grasps a chicken, which he rented for $2, by the legs. Cease was in preparation for the 9th annual chicken flying contest at the Blue River Pub Saturday near Tuttle Creek State Reservoir. More than 500 people attended the contest.

Flying for funds proves profitable

By Janet Swanson
Agri/Business Editor

Some people have fish bowls, others go door to door, but the Joint Union Labor Committee for Charities flies chickens for charities.

More than 30 contestants participated in the 9th annual contest sponsored by the union, Blue River Pub, Anheuser-Busch, area businesses and KQLA-FM.

"You have to select the perfect winged-warrior, one that will fly the furthest of the group," said Melissa Gehrt, secretary of the union.

Competition was fierce with names for chickens like Airplane, Ranch Special and Fred.

California Kid, owned by Shaun McDonald, Manhattan, was the overall winner flying 51 feet 5 inches.

Larger chickens, although older and more experienced at evading their trainer, tended to plummet straight down and land with a thud rather than fly.

Last year, a participant captured the crowd's attention when he used a pheasant rather than a chicken. The pheasant was last seen flying toward Tuttle Creek Dam.

A chicken plunger is used to coerce the birds from their 24-foot roosting place.

Prior to launch the entries squawked their displeasure; below them the chicken chasers waited to recapture them. Using butterfly nets and bare hands, the chasers ran inside the fenced area tripping over each other in an attempt to retrieve the chickens.

Most of the participants were novices at chicken flying.

"I'm just going to shove it out of the box and hope it flies past the fence," said Shannon Osborn, Manhattan, a first time competitor.

The night before the contest, Osborn had to retrieve her chicken from a tree. "We know it's going to do good," she said.

Rather than having to think of something to do with her chicken after the contest, Barb Burton, Manhattan, hoped hers would fly away.

"I hope mine just flies away, but it doesn't I'll probably end up giving it to my sister. She raises chickens in Wamego," Burton said.

"I got drunk last night and bought it at The Ranch Saloon for $10. I don't think I even knew what I was bidding on," she said about her entry, Fred.

But for those without a chicken, the Pub had several to rent for a $10 deposit and $2 rental fee.

Money raised from the day's events will be distributed to local charities. Past recipients include causes such as the Hospice, the Crisis Center, muscular dystrophy, cerebral palsy.

Coaching remains thankless profession

Billy Gardner is a good man. So is John Mackovic. And Jim Dickey. Each possibly too good for his own good.

Each of the three has something in common. Each toiled in one of the most thankless professions on the face of God's green earth—they were athletic head coaches.

Not many sane individuals would enter employment knowing that at sometime or another, sooner probably rather than later, they would be given their walking papers...often as a result of problems beyond their immediate control.

Gardner, who was fired last Thursday as manager of the Kansas City Royals; Mackovic, fired last winter after guiding the Kansas City Chiefs to a playoff berth; and Dickey, who "resigned" under fire in 1985 as K-State head football coach, all were among the most respected men in their sports.

But that wasn't good enough. Not in today's world of high-pressure athletics where most decisions are dictated by the almighty power of the dollar.

Granted, sound reasons were given following the dismissals of the three aforementioned individuals. And this is not to say that I didn't support all three moves at the time and still don't today.

I do, however, think compassion and understanding are words too often forgotten in athletics today. Just because these three men didn't please their employers doesn't make them inherently bad. They were all victims of circumstance.

Gardner was destined to fail from day one. He was replacing the only man who had ever led the Royals to a World Series win, the late Dick Howser, and was doing so with a team that lacks a proven shortstop, a sound bullpen, and a No. 1 catcher that can hit his weight.

Billy was "too nice to his players." He was "afraid to get tough." He "lost control and never could regain it."

Yes, I'd agree with General Manager John Schuerholz when he said that Gardner's inability to get tough with his team was a shortcoming. A manager has to be able to discipline his players if he's ever to gain any measure of respect whatsoever.

Things like the near-fight between pitcher Bret Saberhagen and third base coach Jose Martinez in the club-

Svoboda on Sports

DAVID SVOBODA
Sports Columnist

house earlier this year and Bo Jackson's departure from the clubhouse in Toronto before the end of another game warranted fines, yet none were handed out. Gardner failed to take control when he needed to. Now he no longer has the chance.

Gardner, to his credit, did give the Kansas City players something they rarely had under Howser, who was at best considered distant from his players. Gardner gave them a friend. It's unfortunate Billy didn't know when to quit being a friend and start being a manager. Someone who can do both would be an ideal skipper.

Mackovic fell victim to a different set of circumstances. He had what ownership considered an outstanding group of players, and yet failed to meet expectations set for him by the owner and general manager.

And on top of all of that, his players were basically cold to him. Mackovic, in direct contrast to Gardner, was a man who thought he would operate best by having a relationship that could only be described as professional at best with the men who worked for him.

His inability to fight for his players, and Frank Ganz's seemingly endless desire to do just that, cost Mackovic his job and gave Ganz not only respect but an elusive first NFL head coaching opportunity.

Mackovic was great with X's and O's, but he failed to communicate with his team. Not entirely his fault in a day when athletes are paid so much that what one man ultimately says doesn't often faze them much. The all important "chemistry," just as in the case with Gardner, just wasn't there.

The Dickey story is one all too familiar to those who have followed K-State football for any length of time. He entered a no-win situation and did the very best he could, leading K-State to its only bowl game in the school's less-than-illustrious football history.

K-State, to refresh your memory, is not football Heaven. Far from it in fact. Dickey was like Gardner in some ways and like Mackovic in others—a combination that was deadly in the end.

Dickey was most assuredly quiet and easy going, much like Gardner. He also, in direct contrast to current coach Stan Parrish, was much like Mackovic in that he kept a healthy distance from his players much of the time.

This isn't to say that Parrish is the back slapping fanatic that Ganz is, and that Stan doesn't know how to get tough. It's just that Parrish seems to have a grasp of what it will take to win here—a coach that is completely behind his players but one that won't be afraid to let them know who the boss is.

It was Dickey's easy going nature that cost him his job—that and the arrival of Larry Travis, that is.

Travis, as is the case with many new athletic directors or general managers, wanted to make his mark early on K-State athletics, and most assuredly did just that.

It is the prerogative of these athletic administrators to flex their collective muscle and deal with coaches like subhumans, and nine times out of ten when a new general manager or athletic director is hired, within one year the house has been entirely swept clean of the "rubbish" left by the preceding staff.

Thus, each of the three men mentioned here did partially have themselves to blame for their ultimate downfalls, but the men they coached and the men that hired them had something to do with their failures as well.

Remember that the next time you sit in the stands or in front of the television cursing new Royals manager John Wathan, Ganz or Parrish for being "the biggest jerk on the face of the Earth."

It's a tough thing to do. I know, I've been second-guessing coaches forever. But I've also been a coach for half of my life and know what life on the other side is like.

It's tough. Billy Gardner, John Mackovic and Jim Dickey would no doubt agree. All three will no doubt be back, however—the passion is next to impossible to erase.

Regardless of the fact that a pink slip awaits them on the other side of the door.

Edberg player to beat in this year's Open

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Boris Becker is better known, Ivan Lendl is higher ranked and Mats Wilander has more career titles. But none is playing better than Stefan Edberg heading into this week's U.S. Open.

The 21-year-old Swede has won five tournaments this year, including his second Australian Open and the ATP Championship in Ohio last weekend. His victory over Becker in the ATP finals was his second in a row over the two-time Wimbledon champion after seven straight losses.

Edberg has risen to No. 2 in the world rankings and is seeded second at the Open, which begins Tuesday at the National Tennis Center. Lendl is the top seed, while Wilander is third and Becker fourth.

Last year, he made it to the semifinals before losing to Lendl in straight sets. Lendl went on to capture his second straight Open title.

"He always plays so well at the Open," Edberg said. "I'm sure he will be very difficult to beat this year, but if I'm playing my best I know I can do it."

Edberg's aggressive serve-and-volley game is well suited to the hardcourts at the U.S. Open.

"I've always liked to hit the ball hard and come to the net," he said. "If I stay back and hit from the baseline all the time, I lose my concentration."

Lendl has been ranked No. 1 for the past two years. Although he's next in line, Edberg said gaining the top spot is not his main priority.

"The most important thing to me is winning the Grand Slam events," he said. "I don't think too much about No. 1 because it still seems very far away. Being No. 1 is a totally different world."

Edberg was the No. 1 junior player in the world in 1983, when he became the first person to win the Junior Grand Slam. Since turning professional, however, he has usually been overshadowed by the likes of Lendl, Wilander and Becker.

Part of that is due to Edberg's low-key personality, on and off the court.

"I'm not the type of person who shows his emotions," he said. "I need to stay calm to play my best. If I were screaming all the time, I don't think I would be a very good player."

Edberg is one of five Swedish players ranked in the top 20. The others are No. 3 Wilander, No. 10 Kent Carlsson, No. 12 Joakim Nystrom and No. 18 Anders Jarryd. In contrast, the United States' standing in world tennis has plummeted in recent years.

Vols win over Iowa in opener

By The Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Phil Reich, Tennessee's new placekicker after six years of the Reveiz brothers, kicked his third field goal, a 20-yarder with three seconds left Sunday as the 17th-ranked Vols opened the college football season by defeating No. 16 Iowa 23-22.

Reich also connected from 45 and 25 yards earlier in the fourth quarter to bring the Vols back from a 19-14 deficit after they blew a 14-3 second-period lead in the fifth annual Kickoff Classic.

What proved decisive, however, was Iowa's failure on a two-point conversion pass after taking a 19-14 lead on Kevin Harmon's 20-yard touchdown run late in the third period.

Tennessee scored both its touchdowns in the second period on a 1-yard run by redshirt freshman Reggie Cobb, the game's most valuable player and leading rusher with 138 yards on 25 carries, and a 96-yard run by linebacker Darin Miller after he intercepted a pitchout from Chuck Hartlieb, one of Iowa's three quarterbacks.

Harmon scored Iowa's first touchdown on a 23-yard run after taking a shovel pass from Hartlieb in the second period. The Hawkeyes' other points came on field goals.

7 highway proposals to face legislators

By The Associated Press

The various highway programs that have been proposed include:

The Hayden Initiative

■ Proposed by: Gov. Mike Hayden.
■ New construction: $1.71 billion.
■ Aid to cities and counties: $143 million.

■ Revenue raised: $2.74 billion.
■ Revenue sources: Five-cent increase, motor fuels taxes, $577 million; indexing of motor fuels taxes, $324 million; vehicle registration fee increases, between 50 percent for trucks and 100 percent for passenger cars, $337 million; indexing of fees, $191 million; and bonds, $1.31 billion.

■ Revenue raised: $2.54 billion.
■ Revenue sources: Five-cent increase, fuels taxes, $560 million; indexing of taxes, $327 million; increase in registration fees, between 25 percent and 100 percent, $333 million; indexing of fees, $213 million; and bonds, $1.11 billion.

The Senate Hybrid

■ Proposed by: Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee.

■ New construction: $1.18 billion.
■ Aid to cities and counties: $193 million.

■ Revenue raised: $1.73 billion.
■ Revenue sources: Half-percent sales tax increase, $900 million; four-cent increase, fuels taxes, $484 million; and fee increase in registration fees, between 35 percent and 100 percent.

■ Revenue raised: $1.08 billion.
■ Revenue sources: Six-cent increase, fuels taxes, $728 million, and registration fee increases, between 35 percent and 100 percent, $350 million.

The Two-in-One Plan

■ Proposed by: House Transportation Committee

■ New construction: $864 million, only if voters approve a half-percent increase in the sales tax in the August 1988 primary election.

■ Aid to cities and counties: $121 million.

■ Revenue raised: $627 million, $1.49 billion if voters approve sales tax increase.

■ Revenue sources: Three cent increase, fuels taxes, $363 million; registration fee increases, 25 percent for trucks, $32 for passenger cars, $264 million. A half-percent sales tax increase could raise $864 million if voters approved it.

Note: Programs for maintenance and increased aid to cities and counties would be kept separate from a new construction program.

The President's Program

■ Proposed by: Senate President Robert Talkington, R-Iola.

■ New construction: $530 million.
■ Aid to cities and counties: $121 million.

■ Revenue raised: $1.08 billion.
■ Revenue sources: Six-cent increase, fuels taxes, $728 million, and registration fee increases, between 35 percent and 100 percent, $350 million.

Windfalls and Washburn

■ Proposed by: Reps. Anthony Hensley, Charles Laird, Don Mainey, Bill Roy Jr., Kathleen Sebelius and Joan Wagnon, all D-Topeka; Rep. Robin Leach, D-Linwood, and Sen. Nancy Parrish, D-Topeka.

■ New construction: $80 million, for local traffic decongestion projects.

■ Aid to cities and counties: none.

■ Revenue raised: $959.5 million.

■ Revenue sources: the windfall the state is expected to receive in income tax revenues because of federal tax reform in 1986, estimated at $145 million for the current fiscal year, which ends June 30, 1988. No further estimates have been made by state revenue officials, but the plan's sponsors put the amount at $135 million each fiscal year.

■ Non-highway spending: Financing to bring Washburn University of Topeka into the Kansas State Board of Regents system, $56.9 million; increasing aid to the regents institutions for building maintenance and construction, $120 million; increased aid to local school districts, $160 million.

The Lenexa Alternative

Proposed by: the Lenexa Chamber of Commerce.

■ New construction: $300 million.
■ Aid to cities and counties: $160 million.

■ Revenue raised: $865 million.
■ Revenue sources: Four-cent increase, fuels taxes, $448 million; indexing of taxes, $300 million; registration fee increases, no set schedule of increases, but designed to raise $117 million.

Winter, chairman of the Senate's Economic Development Committee, said he likes the governor's plan, but would modify it so that $83 million that would go to KDOT over the nine years is kept in the state's general fund, to use for education and other programs.

Bogina, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, said he would like to see the governor's plan modified, to give more money to cities and counties. He also would cut the size of the construction initiative down to between $1 billion and $1.25 billion and let KDOT choose the projects.

"It'd be better if we didn't have that many plans, but I'm not surprised that we do," Talkington said.

John Huston, Hollywood director, dies Friday on location at age 81

By The Associated Press

MIDDLETOWN, R.I. — John Huston, a restless talent who bucked Hollywood, drank hard and directed classic films including "The Maltese Falcon," "The Treasure of the Sierra Madre" and "The African Queen," died in his sleep Friday.

At 81, he was on the location of yet another movie.

In a long and adventurous career, the stuff of movie legend, Huston caroused with Humphrey Bogart and Ernest Hemingway, broke his nose in a fistfight with Errol Flynn, directed Clark Gable in his last film and unwittingly led Katharine Hepburn into an elephant stampede.

Huston won Academy Awards for writing and directing "The Treasure of the Sierra Madre," in which his father, Walter, also won an Oscar for best supporting actor. His daughter, Anjelica, won an Oscar for "Prizzi's Honor," which Huston also directed.

His 40 films encompassed the Tennessee Williams play "Night of the Iguana" and the elaborate musical "Annie."

"If there's a pattern to my work it's that I haven't made any two pictures alike. I get bored too quickly," he once said.

His battered good looks and rumbling voice led to a second career as an actor in films and commercials.

Huston, a longtime smoker who in later years was tethered to an oxygen tank, died in his sleep at a home he was renting here during the filming of "Mr. North," said Patty Raya, production coordinator for the movie.

"We will miss him a great deal," Stephen Haft, one of the film's producers, said in a telephone interview from the home. Haft said Huston's longtime companion, Marcella Hernandez, was with him when he died.

Huston had been released last week from a hospital in Fall River, Mass., three weeks after he collapsed due to pneumonia complicated by emphysema.

He had intended to co-star with his daughter in "Mr. North," which his son Danny is directing in nearby Newport. Huston had to give up the role to Robert Mitchum, but intended to remain as executive producer.

This summer, Huston directed his last film, the as-yet unreleased "The Dead," based on a story by James Joyce.

His body was to be returned to Los Angeles for burial.

John Marcellus Huston was born Aug. 5, 1906, in Nevada, Mo. His father was then a utility company engineer, his mother a traveling reporter. He spent much of his childhood shuttling between parents, who split up when he was 6.

Huston worked briefly as a screenwriter, newspaper reporter and editor before joining Warner Bros. as a writer in 1935.

His first work as director was in 1941 with "The Maltese Falcon." Huston wrote a new screenplay from Dashiell Hammett's novel, and cast Bogart, Mary Astor, Sydney Greenstreet and Peter Lorre.

After World War II, Huston directed "No Exit" on Broadway, then returned to film.

Bogart, who became Huston's off-screen pal, worked with the director again in "The Treasure of the Sierra Madre," one of the first American movies made entirely outside the United States.

Huston's other directorial credits include "Reflections in a Golden Eye," starring Marlon Brando; "Key Largo" and "Beat the Devil" with Bogart; "Moulin Rouge," with Jose Ferrer; "The Man Who Would Be King," featuring Sean Connery and Michael Caine; and "The Misfits," featuring Marilyn Monroe and Gable.

In 1983, Huston received the Life Achievement Award of the American Film Institute.

In his later years Huston made his home at Las Galetas, south of Puerto Vallarta, which was so remote it could only be reached by boat.

Huston was married five times, to Dorothy Harvey, Lesley Black, Evelyn Keyes, Enrica Soma and Celeste Shane. All ended in divorce, except for his marriage to Soma, who died after a long separation.

He had five children.

Ag field day adds variety, interest

By The Collegian Staff

Mini-symposiums addressed specific topics in crops and beef cattle Friday at the 73rd annual Fall Field Day and Round-up held at the Fort Hays Branch of the Kansas State Agricultural Experiment Station.

The field day and round-up were combined to offer a "program that more nearly meets the needs of producer and extension clientele in today's highly technical environment," said Pat Coyne, head of the Fort Hays station. Previously, the round-up was in the spring.

The combination field day — round-up provides crop and cattle producers research and management information in a variety of areas. The featured topics were "Calving Difficulty and How to Manage It" and "White Wheat: An Alternative Crop with Value-Added Potential."

Additional updates in research programs addressed crop varieties and hybrids, pest control, cropping systems, soil management and grazing management.

Scientists and extension specialists were available for consultation on grain treatment and storage, crop production and various topics within agricultural economics, agricultural engineering, forestry and horticulture.

Featured speakers for the field day brought together field experts from Kansas State Extension Service, Fort Hays Experiment Station and Kansas State University. Representatives from departments of agricultural economics, agricultural engineering, animal science and industry, entomology and grain science and industry also attended.

Secretary of Agriculture, Sam Brownback was the luncheon's guest speaker. In addition, Kansas State Dean of Agriculture Walter Woods and Associate Dean Kurt Feltner attended.

Approximately 350 attended the field day at the Fort Hays experiment station.

A WEEK AT KANSAS STATE

See ordering information below

At 12:01 a.m. on a Sunday morning in October 1986, a camera shutter was clicked. What happened during the next 192 hours was called AWAKS (A Week at Kansas State).

Former Kansas State University photographers were given the opportunity to return to campus to make pictures of college life in the '80s as it existed for one week during October.

Kansas State has numerous alumni photographers in positions of prominence throughout the country. Some 30 alumni and nearly 15 current student photographers made up the AWAKS shooting team. The result of exposing 1,900 rolls of black-and-white and color film with more than 68,000 exposures is a 10-by-14-inch coffee-table book to be published in September 1987. You can relive the experience of attending college in the 1980s at the nation's first land-grant institution through the pages of this special edition.

Police lobby for Bork's confirmation

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — President Reagan renewed his battle for Senate confirmation of Supreme Court nominee Robert H. Bork and said Friday that "The fundamental purpose of our justice system is to find the truth, not to coddle criminals."

Reagan pictured Bork, a judge on the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Washington, as a strong law-and-order judge during a meeting here with administration and law enforcement officials.

Illinois Gov. James Thompson, a former U.S. attorney, said the group, representing sheriffs, chiefs of police, state troopers and other law officers, unstintingly supported Bork.

"Nearly one-third of the Supreme Court's time is taken up with criminal justice, yet there has been little focus...on Judge Bork's views in this area," Thompson said.

"We told the president that we would go from this meeting today to form a national group of law enforcement officers to lobby for Judge Bork," he said.

Reagan opened the meeting by saying: "I am particularly pleased to have your views on a matter that will have continuing impact on law enforcement and criminal justice long after my administration leaves office."

"The Supreme Court has always had a critical role in the administration of criminal justice both at the state and federal level," Reagan said.

He said it is "important for the courts to take a clear-eyed look" at criminal justice issues.

Noting that Bork had argued in favor of the constitutionality of death penalty laws as solicitor general, Reagan said, "It is important that capital punishment remain on the books if we are to protect innocent lives."

At a news conference preceding the president's meeting with Bork supporters, members of the California-based organization, Access to Government, criticized Bork's judicial record.

"Judge Bork does not believe in law and order," said Karl Manheim, professor of constitutional law at Loyola School of Law in Los Angeles. Manheim maintained Bork's pattern is to "selectively enforce the laws of Congress," ignoring, for instance, portions of the Sherman Antitrust Law, with which he disagrees.

"When it is government against the individual, the government must always win" in Bork's view, said Erwin Chemerinsky, professor of constitutional law at the University of Southern California.

Reagan spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, asked Thursday about Bork's prospects for confirmation, said "We're very optimistic, (we) think his chances are very good."

The Senate Judiciary Committee has scheduled 10 days of hearings on the Bork nomination, beginning Sept. 15., Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., the committee chairman, has said it will vote by Oct. 1.

Annual dance attracts 700

By The Collegian Staff

The All-University Welcome Back Dance brought the Union Cats-keller Room alive Friday night with the sound of music and the sight of dancing.

The dance is sponsored annually by the Union Program Council's Eclectic Entertainment Committee as part of an effort to draw K-State's student body closer together.

"The dance is for people not just in residence halls or greek houses — it's something everyone can get involved in," said Lydee Hawkins, chairwoman of the Eclectic Entertainment Committee. "I think there was a real desire for some kind of all-campus dance. Last year we had more than 350 people, which showed it was a worthwhile event. That's why we decided to repeat it."

"We ended up having 700 plus at the dance (this year). Any time you have that many people show up, you know you're doing something right," Hawkins said.

Hawkins said the age restrictions at the Aggieville bars may have helped to increase the attendance number at the dance.

"I think the new age restriction should help the attendance at all UPC events," Hawkins said. "We've got some top quality events planned this semester and we're expecting good turnouts for all of them."

Many who attended the Welcome Back Dance were students new to K-State.

Hallie Ferguson, freshman in accounting, and Angela Potter, freshman in electrical engineering, went because they "thought it would be fun."

John Mick, freshman in mechanical engineering, attended the dance to relax and to take "a break from the studies."

Angie Arnoldy, freshman in math and computer science, was there "to meet more people."

But not all who attended were freshmen. Susan Link, junior in journalism and mass communications, came with a group from West Hall.

"I've never come to one of these things before," Link said. "I think it's a blast. It's great you can go somewhere that's not so much alcohol and bars. This is so much more relaxing. It's a nice break."

parked on the street jumped out of the vehicle, picked up a 3-year-old girl who was shot and ran through gunfire to hand the girl to his sister, who carried her to rescuers, Nichols said. When police arrived about 3:30 p.m., they found paramedics treating a man, a woman and the 3-year-old shot on a street around the corner from the house into which the sniper fled, O'Toole said.

An Asian woman was found shot on a porch across the street from the house, O'Toole said.

Inside, police found a woman shot in a stairwell, the uncle shot in a hallway and a third woman shot in a bedroom of the apartment in which the sniper apparently shot himself in the head, O'Toole said.

A 9-mm gun was found next to his body.

A 19-year-old man was in critical condition at Boston City Hospital, said Sheehan. The 3-year-old girl was in critical condition at New England Medical Center, a spokeswoman said.

DiWanna Salmons, 14, who lives across the street from the three-story, six-apartment building used by the sniper, said she was returning home and thought she heard firecrackers exploding when she saw the gunman, wearing a trench coat with a rifle barrel protruding from one of the sleeves.

"He came running at me," the crying teen-ager said as she was comforted by relatives. "He chased me into my yard, but he slipped on a piece of board. He shot at me, but nothing came out of the gun."

Two other neighbors, Nancy Feeney and a registered nurse, said they rushed to aid the woman who was shot outside the house.

The woman "had a lot of blood coming from her mouth and nose," the nurse said.

Feeney said the gunman fired several shots at the woman's head after she had been felled by the first shot.

After the sniper rushed into the house, Feeney and the nurse said they heard windows breaking and people yelling, "Get back, Get back." The man then fired additional shots into the street, they said.

Residents of nearby homes crowded onto porches as police swarmed into the neighborhood. Police evacuated several residents from buildings adjacent to the one from which the sniper fired the shots.

The shooting was New England's second multiple slaying of the weekend by a suspect who committed suicide.

Police said a Providence, R.I., woman fatally shot her sleeping boyfriend, sister and son at home before traveling to Skeekonk, Mass., where she killed herself early Saturday after agreeing to surrender.

for him, Wainscott said.

LaPere first enrolled at K-State in fall 1974 after attending Michigan Technological University in Houghton, Mich., he said. However, he was later forced to drop out.

He re-enrolled at K-State in 1984 as a part-time student and then became a full-time student in the fall of 1985, Wainscott said.

You're never too old to quit blowing smoke.

No matter how long or how much you've smoked, it's not too late to stop. Because the sooner you put down your last cigarette, the sooner your body will begin to return to its normal, healthy state.

Council sponsors watermelon feed

By The Collegian Staff

Watermelon, friends and fun: New agriculture students will have the opportunity to enjoy all three at the College of Agriculture's Annual Watermelon Feed, at 6:15 p.m. Tuesday on the front lawn of Waters Hall.

John Riley, assistant director of resident instruction in the College of Agriculture, said the event is a key step in getting the new students involved in the college.

"The watermelon feed is the first agriculture college event of the fall semester," Riley said. "Our college has always tried to create a camaraderie among students and faculty, and this is the first thing we do to encourage good relations."

One of the feed's main objectives is to familiarize students with the College of Agriculture's clubs and organizations. Officers, members and advisers from 22 clubs will answer questions and talk about upcoming activities and events.

David Whetstone, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine and coordinator of the event, said having representatives present at the feed encourages students to get in contact with the clubs in which they are most interested.

"Departmental clubs help students learn more about their career fields," Whetstone said. "The contacts they make here, with other students and faculty members, will be beneficial both during and after their college years."

Philippine coup quelled

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — President Corazon Aquino said Sunday that mutinous troops tried not only to topple her government but aimed to kill her and her family.

Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile said he was not involved in Friday's coup attempt by up to 1,200 rebel troops led by his former aide. The daylong battle left at least 25 people dead and 275 wounded.

Enrile, fired as defense minister last November after a failed coup attempt, said he refused a request by a U.S. diplomat to use his influence with mutiny leaders to halt the attacks.

Loyal troops searched northern provinces Sunday for remnants of the rebel force, including Col. Gregorio "Gringo" Honasan and five other ringleaders.

Aquino laid a wreath Sunday at a Fort Bonifacio military cemetery on National Heroes' Day. Dozens of guards with Uzi submachine guns and M-16 rifles maintained tight security for her first public appearance since the rebellion.

"The aim of the rebels was clearly to kill the president and her family," she said in prepared remarks.

"The size and ruthlessness of the attack, the treachery that marked it, the brutality of the rebels who fired on civilians, and the timing...proves beyond a doubt their murderous intentions," she said.

Her only son, Benigno Aquino III, was wounded and three of his bodyguards killed as they returned to the presidential palace early Friday. He later said the rebels fired on their car after he identified himself as the president's son.

The rebellion was the gravest of several attempts to overthrow Aquino since she was swept to power in a February, 1986 civilian-military revolt that deposed President Ferdinand Marcos.

The mutineers in Friday's attempt had said they were unhappy over government failure to end the nation's 18-year-old communist insurgency.

The coup attempt came while many of the 500-member Presidential Security Guard force were in nearby provinces as advance security for a planned tour, which Mrs.

Aquino later canceled.

Military spokesman Col. Honesto Isleta said 816 mutineers had surrendered or been captured and were being held aboard two navy ships in Manila Bay.

He said 12 loyal soldiers were killed in the revolt and 61 wounded, and six mutineers died and 24 were wounded.

Civilians caught in the cross fires also were killed.

State Legislature's special session begins

Elected officials start debate on road plans

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Senate completed its advance work Monday for what is expected to be a lengthy debate on a major highway improvement proposal after Gov. Mike Hayden made a pitch for his plan before a joint session of the Legislature.

The Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee forwarded its plan to the full chamber for debate, and the Senate passed a resolution that limits the debate to highways. A move to adjourn the Legislature's first special session in 21 years failed easily in the House.

Debate on the Senate committee's plan is scheduled to begin at 9 a.m. Tuesday, and several amendments are expected to be offered. Among them is a proposal from Senate President Robert Talkington, R-Iola.

Talkington acknowledged he sees little consensus in the Senate, whether it be for the governor's plan, which calls for $1.71 billion in new construction over the next nine years, the Senate committee's proposal, which calls for $1.18 billion in new construction, or his plan, which calls for $530 million in new construction.

"I could very easily go all day," Talkington said of Tuesday's planned debate. "Hopefully, by sometime tomorrow there will be some kind of consensus."

In what pretty much was a formality, the Senate committee endorsed a plan it developed last week, heavily amending Hayden's proposal. The panel sent a single bill to the floor on a voice vote. Hayden's plan was contained in a bill to raise motor fuels taxes and vehicle registration fees and a resolution listing preferred construction projects.

Under the Senate committee's plan, the state would build about 880 miles of new highways, mostly along eight existing highway corridors. It also would improve maintenance of existing roads and increase aid to cities and counties and add financing for local transportation programs for the handicapped and elderly.

The proposed highway construction includes upgrading to Kansas 96 and U.S. 160 to a "Super Two" from Beaumont to Neodesha to the Missouri border southeast of Pittsburg. U.S. 69 from the Oklahoma border to Louisburg also would be upgraded to a Super Two, a two-lane highway with 12-foot-wide driving lanes, wide shoulders and occasional passing lanes.

In addition, U.S. 54 from Kingman to the Oklahoma border, U.S. 50 from Bucklin to the Colorado border, and U.S. 75 from Topeka to the Nebraska border would be improved to Super Twos.

The state would build a "northwest passage," four lanes from Wichita to Hutchinson along the K-96 corridor, then a Super Two diagonally from Hutchinson to Wichita to Great Bend to Hays. All routes would be set out in state law.

To pay for the program, the state would increase its gasoline and diesel taxes four cents a gallon and its vehicle registration fees by between 35 percent, for trucks, to 100 percent, for passenger cars. The state's 4 percent sales tax would also increase a half-percent.

"I think it is a starting place, a point of departure," said Sen. Bill Morris, R-Wichita, chairman of the committee.

Hayden's plan called for construction of 1,319 miles of new highways, with a five-cent increase in motor fuels taxes and increases in registration fees of between 50 percent and 100 percent. Both would be adjusted annually for inflation, and the state would issue nearly $1.3 billion in bonds.

Talkington's plan calls for a flat six-cent increase in fuels taxes and increases in vehicle registration fees of between 35 percent and 100 percent. Talkington said he will propose his plan as an amendment during

About 200 activists gather peacefully on the steps of the capitol building in Topeka hoping to convince Kansas legislators to debate the state's involvement in the low-level radioactive waste compact.

Bill May, Tipton, displays his feelings toward the waste compact. The state that will host the dump site must be chosen by Dec. 31.

Activists urge legislators to debate waste compact

By Patti Paxson
Staff Writer

TOPEKA — On the opening day of the Kansas legislature's special session, about 200 activists gathered peacefully on the steps of the capitol building with hopes of convincing Kansas legislators to debate the state's involvement in a controversial five-state, low-level radioactive waste compact.

However, the efforts of the demonstrators were to no avail. Gov. Mike Hayden made it clear in his brief statement to the demonstrators that he would not ask lawmakers to add the waste compact issue to the special session's agenda. The only topic of debate is to be the funding of highway development.

Hayden said his administration has taken the initiative on the compact issue and reminded the demonstrators that he appointed a task force to review the compact's policies, and it determined that Kansas should remain in the compact — which is comprised of Kansas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Nebraska and Oklahoma.

The demonstrators — a majority of whom are members of the Kansas Coalition on Nuclear Waste — sported signs which read: "Become active now or radioactive later," "Keep it at Wolf Creek," "US Ecology's host state criteria: Host state must start with 'K'" and "Do all new highways lead to the dump?"

Laura Menhusen, president of the 3,000-member coalition, said the purpose for the demonstration was not to request Kansas'

Residents protest regulation

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

Residents of Jardine Terrace Apartments protested Monday a new parking regulation that requires them to buy a parking permit in order to park on campus.

Thirty-seven residents attended the first meeting of the Council on Traffic Parking and Police Operations in the Union.

Until this year, Jardine parking permits were valid in all on-campus student parking areas. In an effort to create a better flow of traffic, this privilege has been revoked. This year, the Jardine permit is good only for that housing area's lots.

"We did not feel we had the authority to give away parking spaces when those spaces were not being paid for by the state, but rather by the users," said John DeVore, committee chairman.

Seven major problem areas were identified during the meeting. Because of the problem complexity, no decisions were made.

Privileges denied

"We just want them to reconsider. We don't expect them to drop a decision this minute," said Mark Lamberson, one of five area mayors of the Jardine complex.

The main complaint concerned multiple permits.

Jardine residents may park both on campus and in the apartment lots, but they must purchase two $22 permits to do so, DeVore said.

"We support this school just as much as anyone else, but we feel that we're being discriminated against with these outrageous fees," Lamberson said.

For the first time this year, dorm residents are being offered the opportunity to park on campus. Previously, they were restricted to parking in the lots designated for their particular residence halls.

Now they have the option to purchase the $22, on-campus parking permits in addition to their regular dormitory permits — the same as for Jardine residents, DeVore said.

Multiple permits for multiple cars was another complaint presented at the meeting.

Historically, an empty parking lot — called the "storage area" by Jardine residents — was the parking site for second and third cars owned by the residents. Lamberson said temporary permits were issued free by the campus police. The police will now be ticketing any untaxed cars parked in this lot.

The residents also complained that the price of Jardine parking permits should be reduced to compensate for the multiple permits.

"Being a single parent, it does make it inconvenient to pay an extra $22. Also, it is unfair to make me pay an additional $22 to park where I live. I propose that the fee be at least reduced," said Marlene Reed, graduate student in elementary education.

The residents also complained about the condition of the parking areas. Many of the lots are either gravel or broken pavement, Lamberson said.

"We feel that $22 is a little expensive," he said, "and it (the parking regulations) states part of this money goes to improvements. Since I've been in Jardine, we've seen little if any improvements."

Many of the residents who attended the meeting also said information about the meetings and the changes in the permit laws was not circulated well.

Many of the residents did not even know about the meetings, Lamberson said.

"The reason that we didn't get out before is because we didn't know (about the situation)," he said.

Two informational meetings were held last spring about the upcoming

Nation's AIDS count to grow noticeably

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA — The nation's AIDS count, now at more than 40,000, will start a noticeable jump Tuesday as federal health officials begin counting thousands of cases they have never before recognized.

The increase comes from a change in the official Centers for Disease Control definition of what AIDS is, in medical terms.

There will be no dramatic announcement that thousands of Americans believed to have suffered from other diseases actually had AIDS. And the disease will not suddenly be found to be attacking groups not previously considered at risk.

Rather, the CDC will begin listing in its AIDS statistics patients whose physicians may have presumed they had the deadly disease, but whose cases did not meet the agency's definition.

As those cases are added into the total, more Americans than ever before will be deemed AIDS patients — and AIDS fatalities, which now number more than 23,000.

Federal health officials estimate that the case count could jump by 10 percent to 15 percent.

"I expect there will be a jump over the course of a month or two," said Dr. Tim Dondero, chief of the surveillance and evaluation branch for the CDC's AIDS program.

"We now have a number of states have a backlog of cases initially picked up and labeled 'suspect' cases, or 'AIDS-like disease,' that will now qualify as AIDS under the new definition. How long it takes to report them, we don't know."

The goal is to give state and federal health officials a more accurate picture of how widespread AIDS is. Dondero said researchers have, since the disease was first reported in 1981, been careful not to be too quick to pronounce a case AIDS.

Mine elevator kills at least 8 workers

By The Associated Press

WELKOM, South Africa — A mine elevator cable failed Monday, sending a metal cage full of miners crashing to the bottom of a 4,500-foot shaft, company officials said. At least eight men were reported killed and 42 were missing.

The accident occurred as hundreds of thousands of blacks returned to gold and coal mines after a three-week national strike.

Five miners were pulled alive from a small excavated platform 2,300 feet down where rescuers found them. Eight bodies were found nearby.

All five were hospitalized with burns, one in serious condition.

Mine manager Gregory Maude said: "We certainly seem to be leaning towards an explosion but we can't say what caused it."

"There is good medical evidence of burns, which certainly seem to indicate an explosion. According to a mine overseer who has seen the eight dead, some are also burned. There is, however, nothing to indicate sabotage," he said.

Rescuers loaded the survivors one by one into a chair attached to a rope and pulled them up 90 feet to the rescue elevator. It took half an hour to drag each man through the mangled concrete and steel lining the shaft walls.

Most of the missing men — 38 blacks and four whites — were believed to have been in the two-deck elevator measuring 11 feet by less than six. Mine officials initially reported an explosion in the shaft at 6:45 a.m., and at one point expressed fear that 92 men were missing.

Miners of both races worked through the night under strong lights at the isolated shaft of the St. Helena mine less than two miles down a dirt road from Welkom, a town of about 50,000 in the red dust and brown grassland of the Orange Free State.

Miners were trying to reach the trapped elevator through tunnels linked to an adjacent shaft, but Maude said the job could take days because of the danger of cave-ins.

"We believe...the lift is probably at the bottom of the shaft," along with a pile of debris 125 feet deep, most of it mangled metal, Maude said.

The nationwide walkout ended Sunday when the National Union of Mineworkers accepted a wage offer the top six mining companies made six weeks ago.

Officials of General Mining Union Corp. said there was no indication Monday's accident was connected with the strike. Seventy percent of workers in the mine 140 miles southwest of Johannesburg worked during the strike and the No. 10 shaft, where

Audit shows fund short $20,314

McPHERSON — The McPherson County Commission was told Monday that former county treasurer Richard Cobb spent a total of $20,314 out of a motor vehicle fund without having proper documentation. Cobb, who committed suicide on Aug. 6, had sole authority over the fund, which was derived from such things as motor vehicle registration fees. The fund, about $56,000 annually, was used to cover travel and other expenses. County Counselor Gary Flory and County Administrator Ann Gottberg audited the fund for the county, after a preliminary study found that slightly more than $2,000 had been spent in 1986 without the proper documentation. They told the commissioners that a more thorough study revealed that $6,682 in expenses in 1986 did not have proper documentation. Another $13,632 had been spent beginning in fiscal year 1987 through Aug. 5 this year, the report showed. Some of those expenses were "unrelated to office functions."

Teenager admits to murders

EL DORADO — A Butler County teen-ager charged with killing his parents has pleaded guilty to two counts of first-degree murder and is awaiting sentencing, according to a prosecutor. Charles Campbell, 15, was charged in a Butler County District Court juvenile petition in the July 17 deaths of his mother, Cherie Barnes, 32, and his stepfather, Gary Barnes, 36. Both were shot once in the head with a rifle as they lay in bed in their rural home about four miles south of Leon. Campbell will have a sentencing hearing Oct. 9. Assistant County Attorney Michael Ward said. He could be sent to the Youth Center at Topeka until he turns 21. Campbell didn't enter into a plea bargain, Ward said. Gene White, Campbell's court-appointed lawyer, declined to explain his client's Thursday plea. Two other teen-agers charged in connection with the killings have Oct. 22 juvenile hearings scheduled. Campbell's cousin, Chris McGee, 15, had been living with the family for two months and is charged with two counts of aiding and abetting in the murders. William Carson, 17, of Wichita, a friend of the two cousins, is charged with two counts of aiding and abetting a felon.

Wildlife, parks meetings set

TOPEKA — Chairman Merrill on Werts announced Monday that the Legislature's interim Committee on Energy and Natural Resources will hold hearings next week in Wichita and El Dorado to take public comment on the new state Department of Wildlife and Parks and its programs. The Wildlife hearing will be at 1:30 p.m. Sept. 10 in the Marcus Center at Wichita State University. The El Dorado hearing will be at 9:10 a.m. Sept. 11 in the student union at Butler County Community College. The Wildlife and Parks Department came into being July 1, the result of an executive order issued last winter by Gov. Mike Hayden that merged the Fish and Game Commission and the Park and Resources Authority. The Legislature approved Hayden's order during its regular session which ended in May. Besides the hearings, Werts, a Republican senator from Junction City, said the committee will tour El Dorado State Park and Wildlife

Companies collaborate on plane

TUCSON, Ariz. — Gates Learjet Corp. announced Monday that it and Seattle-based Boeing Military Airplane Co. will collaborate on a bid to produce training aircraft for the U.S. Air Force. Boeing would serve as prime contractor and Gates Learjet as a major subcontractor on the project, which is expected to be subject of an Air Force request for proposals in mid-1988, Gates Learjet said. Gates Learjet said the program likely would involve an existing type of aircraft. The Air Force is expected to seek approximately 215 aircraft to be used for training crews for bombers, transports and tankers, Gates Learjet said. The training aircraft would be used to "give pilot trainees assigned to tankers, transports or bombers experience in a crew environment, where a pilot-copilot situation exists," the company said.

Bird to receive new hearing

EMPORIA — A hearing on a motion for a new trial for convicted murderer Thomas P. Bird, a former Emporia minister, has been rescheduled at the request of Bird's attorney. Monte Miller of Emporia asked the court today to reschedule the hearing because two witnesses could not attend Tuesday's hearing. District Judge Gary Rulon set a new hearing for Sept. 18. Bird was convicted in Emporia two years ago of the first-degree murder of his wife, Sandra Bird. He is serving a life prison sentence. Sandra was found dead near the wreckage of her car in July 1983. Her death originally was ruled an accident but a grand jury investigation resulted in Bird's indictment for murder. Bird is seeking a new trial based on new evidence that Sandra may have committed suicide. At least two witnesses are expected to testify that they heard Sandra discuss suicide before her death. An amended motion for a new trial also claims that the state failed to disclose to the defense reports of Kansas Bureau of Investigation interviews of potential witnesses concerning a possible suicide. The Rev. Al Boysen and his wife, Patricia, of Memphis, Tenn., and the Rev. Charles Smith and his wife, Carolyn, of Richmond, Va., are expected to be called as defense witnesses. The court has certified those four people as material witnesses in the case to ensure their attendance at the hearing. Miller said today that the state of Virginia failed to process the material-witness certification papers in time for the Smiths to attend Tuesday's hearing. The law requires a motion for a new trial to be heard within 45 days of its filing. That deadline is Friday. Miller said his client will waive any claim of prejudice if the court does not rule on the motion in time.

Jackson releases 'Bad' album

NEW YORK — Record stores were splashed with a new wave of Michael Jackson mania Monday as fans around the country flocked to buy "Bad," his first album in 4 1/2 years. "Every other call seems to be, 'Is the Michael out yet?'" said Foster Grimm, floor manager of a Sam Goody store in Manhattan. Grimm predicted he would sell all of his store's 400 records, 500 compact discs and 600 cassettes in a day or two. There were no lines outside but business was brisk. "The reviews were so positive they overcame my skepticism," said customer Victor Love, a New York actor "over 25 and under 30." "The price was right," shrugged Tom Walker, 33, of Washington, D.C., who stopped to buy "Bad" while in town on business.

Correction

Due to an editor's error, it was incorrectly reported in Monday's Collegian that Vernon Larson, assistant provost for international programs, accompanied a K-State group that traveled to Central America in early August. Larson did not make the trip.

ELIGIBILITY FOR CARE AT LAFENE STUDENT HEALTH CENTER

- Health fees are established upon the recommendation of the Student Senate with approval by the Board of Regents.
- All students who are enrolled and attending classes during a regular semester or summer session who have paid health fees are eligible for care.
- Those enrolled in Special Courses, for varying periods of time, who have made previous arrangements for health care coverage at Lafene are eligible for care. (Lists of these students must be furnished prior to being seen at Lafene.)
- Only students, who have paid the health fee, may elect to have their spouse also covered at Lafene; however, they must pay the spouse fee within 10 days of the time their own health fees are paid. (Children cannot be seen.)
- Emergency care, prior to referral, will be given anyone who comes in.
- Students enrolled in 6 hours or less, electing not to pay the health fee during the Fall or Spring semesters, who wish to be seen, will be charged $20 for each office visit. This charge continues until the full health fee has been exceeded, then that student will be afforded the same privileges as the regular fee paying student for the remainder of that semester.
- Students who were enrolled in the Spring and pre-enrolled for the Fall semester but not attending summer school may pay $15 and be eligible for care during the summer. This fee may be paid within 30 days prior to summer registration and ends the day classes begin. A late fee of $20 will be accepted for the remainder of the summer.
- Health fees are good until 12 o'clock the night the next semester begins.

NOTE: In addition to the above mentioned fees, there are minimal charges for certain supplies and services and the charges are subject to change without prior notice.

Iranian commandos assault freighter

Kuwaiti crew, wives escape injury

By The Associated Press

MANAMA, Bahrain — Iranian commandos raked a Kuwaiti freighter with machine-gun fire and rocket-propelled grenades in the Persian Gulf Monday in retaliation for three days of Iraqi air attacks, shipping sources said.

Iraq's attacks, aimed at forcing Iran to accept a U.N. cease-fire resolution in their 7-year-old war, came as a convoy of reflagged Kuwaiti tankers under U.S. escort anchored off Bahrain. U.S. helicopters looked for a reported mine.

In Washington, the White House on Monday termed the timing of Iraq's attacks "deplorable," but called on Iran to comply with the cease-fire resolution.

Iran said its artillery shelled Basra in southern Iraq and other border towns in retaliation for the Iraqi air strikes. Iraq's Baghdad Radio, monitored in Nicosia, said several civilians were killed and wounded.

Iranian commandos in patrol boats attacked the 24,349-ton container ship Jebel Ali off the United Arab Emirates coast near the Strait of Hormuz.

The owners, the Kuwait-based United Arab Shipping Co., said the ship was bound for Dubai when attacked "by a speedboat firing rockets and machine guns."

The 32-man crew and two wives who were aboard were unhurt and the ship reached Dubai for repairs, the company said.

It was the first such incident attributed to Iranian forces since Iraq resumed air attacks on Iranian targets in the gulf Saturday, ending a 45-day lull.

Tehran has said Kuwaiti ships and any U.S. warship escorts would not be exempt from its retaliation against Iraq's weekend resumption of air raids.

Iraqi jets, in their longest ranging missions in months, ranged 600 miles to the Strait of Hormuz to strike near Iran's Larak island oil terminal.

Military communiques from Baghdad said Iraqi jets hit two Iranian ships Sunday night and Monday morning.

The London-based Lloyds Shipping Intelligence Unit confirmed only that the 113,788-ton tanker Shoush, owned by the state-run Iranian National Tanker Co., was hit Sunday.

The ship's engine room was set ablaze, but there was no further word on damage or injuries, shipping sources said.

The sources spoke on condition of not being identified.

In dispatches monitored in Cyprus, the Baghdad government's official Iraq News Agency quoted a military spokesman as saying Iraq will continue striking Iran's oil terminals and other vital targets.

"Iraq is capable of sending 100 fighter jets to raid Iranian towns several times a day if Iran decides to resume the war of the cities," the unidentified spokesman was quoted as saying.

The latest U.S.-escorted convoy of two Kuwaiti tankers was anchored off Bahrain, halfway along its 550-mile voyage up the gulf to Kuwait's al-Ahmadi oil terminal and near waters where a threat of Iranian-laid mines was considered highest.

British Broadcasting Corp. reporter Kate Adie and other witnesses said the U.S. missile cruiser Reeves and missile frigate Hawes circled the two tankers, but none of four other warships that accompanied the tankers Sunday was visible.

The helicopter carrier Guadalcanal was believed to have sailed ahead so its eight RH-53D Sea Stallion mine-hunting helicopters could clear a path through suspected danger areas.

mines had been encountered by any U.S.-escorted convoy since the supertanker Bridgeton was holed by one on the first convoy July 24. They said, however, they believed more mines had been sown.

Iraq says it hit numerous "economic targets" since Saturday — including oil facilities, power stations and at least five ships — in an avowed attempt to disrupt Iran's war effort and force it to accept the U.N. cease-fire resolution passed July 20.

Traffic accident injures new dean

Isenhour to arrive by Oct. 1

By The Collegian Staff

Thomas L. Isenhour, new dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, sustained multiple injuries Thursday in a one-vehicle accident near Morehead, Ky. He was listed in satisfactory condition Monday morning at St. Claire Medical Center in Morehead.

John Lambert, public affairs officer with the Kentucky State Police, said Isenhour was riding his motorcycle in a thunderstorm about 4:30 p.m. Aug. 27, when a lightning bolt apparently struck the ground near his motorcycle, causing him to lose control.

The vehicle struck a guard rail and Isenhour was thrown from it, Lambert said. Isenhour's was the only vehicle involved in the crash, which occurred on Interstate 64 about eight miles east of Morehead.

Morehead is about 45 miles northeast of Lexington.

Shirley Caudill, administrative secretary with St. Claire Medical Center, said Isenhour probably would be released within a week. She wouldn't say what the extent of his injuries were.

Isenhour was en route to Manhattan from Washington, D.C., where he had been conducting research this summer for the National Bureau of Standards.

President Jon Wefald said he talked to Isenhour by phone about 2 p.m. Aug. 30.

"He sounded very cheerful and very enthusiastic," he said. "And, as you can imagine, he's looking forward to getting back to work."

Wefald said Isenhour was scheduled to assume the dean duties on or about Sept. 1. However, as a result of the accident, Wefald said he will begin work by Oct. 1.

Jack Carpenter, associate dean of arts and sciences, will continue serving as acting dean until Isenhour begins work, Wefald said.

Isenhour was named dean of the college last spring after William Stamey announced his retirement from the position effective July 1. Isenhour was most recently dean of science at Utah State University.

Universities see student increase

By The Collegian Staff

Four of six Regents universities increased in first-day enrollment compared with 1986 figures.

The University of Kansas showed the largest increase, with 882 more students enrolled than last fall. K-State's enrollment increased by 596 students. Pittsburg State University and Emporia State University had increases of 48 and 37 students, respectively.

Fort Hays State University and The Wichita State University had decreases in enrollment from 1986. FHSU's enrollment was 12 fewer than last year, while WSU experienced a decrease of 128 students.

Final enrollment figures are not announced until the end of the 20th class day.

K-State expects final enrollment figures to top 18,000, said Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement. Other schools and their anticipated enrollments are: PSU, 5,500; ESU, 5,280; and FHSU, 5,530. KU does not release 20th class day enrollment projections.

Joe Kleinsasser, media relations coordinator at WSU, said enrollment should "hold its own" in comparison to last year's figure of 16,843.

Kleinsasser attributed a small part of WSU's 128-student decrease to the cancellation of its football program last December. He said, however, it appears WSU's enrollment will remain constant this year.

Sally Bryant, KU's assistant dean of educational services, attributed the rise in enrollment figures at Kansas schools to a variety of factors, including fewer students leaving the state and out-of-state students recognizing "high quality education at a bargain price."

A WEEK AT KANSAS STATE

See ordering information below

At 12:01 a.m. on a Sunday morning in October 1986, a camera shutter was clicked. What happened during the next 192 hours was called AWAKS (A Week at Kansas State).

Former Kansas State University photographers were given the opportunity to return to campus to make pictures of college life in the '80s as it existed for one week during October.

Kansas State has numerous alumni photographers in positions of prominence throughout the country. Some 30 alumni and nearly 15 current student photographers made up the AWAKS shooting team. The result of exposing 1,900 rolls of black-and-white and color film with more than 68,000 exposures is a 10-by-14-inch coffee-table book to be published in September 1987. You can relive the experience of attending college in the 1980s at the nation's first land-grant institution through the pages of this special edition.

Airplane rescheduling to benefit consumers

Airline travelers can now plan their schedules with more assurance. Starting in December, they have a fair chance that their flights will not be more than 30 minutes late.

Six major airlines agreed to reschedule flights that were chronically late because they were due to arrive at airports during the busiest times of the day. Some of the flights were more than 30 minutes late 70 percent of the time.

The Transportation Department pressured the companies to accept the agreement by threatening carriers with stiff civil penalties for flights that were repeatedly late. It has been campaigning to reduce the numbers of chronically late flights at the nation's busiest airports. The airlines' agreement reschedules the late flights arriving at Hartsfield Atlanta, Chicago O'Hare, Dallas-Fort Worth and Boston Logan airports.

Under the agreement, the airlines must shift the schedules of their chronically late flights so that they arrive within 30 minutes of their scheduled arrival time 50 percent of the time by November and 75 percent of the time by April.

The airlines under the agreement — Eastern, American, Continental, United, USAir and Delta — have complained they were "presented with a fait accompli" by the Transportation Department and not given a chance to rectify the problems among themselves.

Passengers can be relieved that the problem is being solved — regardless of who planned the solution. For whatever reason, the airlines decided the scheduled flight time made more difference to consumers than the inconvenience of waiting or being late.

It is the Transportation Department's responsibility to assure airports are running smoothly. A log of planes waiting to land or take off hinders the smooth flow of airports. For the consumers and airports — rescheduling is for the best.

Highway construction creates political wars

The Kansas Legislature has no easy task ahead.

The special session called by Gov. Mike Hayden opened Monday with nine plans for highway improvement programs on the table. They all propose some degree of new highway construction, but they disagree on how to finance it.

All proposals include state gasoline and diesel tax increases, which vary from 3 cents to 6 cents a gallon. All include an increase in vehicle registration fees, but the amounts raised differ from $117 million to $350 million.

Then comes the political game-playing. The House Transportation Committee's plan would finance $864 million in new construction, but only if voters approve an amendment for a half-cent increase in the state's 4 percent sales tax. The "Windfalls and Washburn" plan would finance $80 million in new construction, but only for local traffic decongestion projects. At the same time, it would raise money to bring Washburn University into the Kansas State Board of Regents system and increase aid to local school districts.

If the proposals don't confuse the constituents, Hayden's beliefs might. To promote the concept of highway improvements, he insisted that road improvements are tied to economic growth. Granted, many parts of the state — the southeast in particular — desperately need road improvements. But the assumption that everyone will benefit as much as they pay for the highways is naive. Many Kansans would rather see the gas tax and registration fees raised less than have unneeded highway in their area.

It is also naive to ask the Legislators to try to keep politics out of their decision-making process. The best they could do is to come up with a plan that raises only the revenues necessary to finance the highway construction programs needed.

Cats lose personality City strips pets of uniqueness

Throughout the ages, no animal has been as great a source of myth, legend, symbolism, history and interaction with humans as the cat. For more than 4,000 years, its presence has been recorded by mankind around the world. While felis domestica has seemingly adapted to an ever-changing environment by growing more intelligent, it would seem that people, in particular the Manhattan-Riley County Health Board members, have become a little denser.

The Manhattan City Commission and Riley County Commission will soon consider a "model" ordinance drawn up by the local health board that, among other things, will require cat owners to keep their pets from "running at large." The proponents of the law would force cats into leashes whenever outdoors.

At an informational meeting on "the cat problem" about a year ago, the list of cat atrocities ranged from paw prints on car hoods to — heaven forbid — defecation in a garden. Of course, the lady with the garden claimed that the Manhattan-Riley County Health Department director had confirmed her fear that such an act was indeed a public health problem.

Those pressing for mandatory vaccinations were of two schools of thought. The animal shelter people wanted cats protected from feline leukemia, while the ailurophobes (cat haters) thought a cat-induced rabies epidemic was of the most concern. It was clear that the ailurophobes knew they couldn't succeed in raising public opinion over the word "leukemia."

All this hubbub seems to go back to one observation I always wonder about: although cat lovers don't necessarily hate dogs, most dog lovers hate cats. This is evident in today's driving habits. The only two things a motorist seems to accelerate for are yellow traffic lights and a cat crossing the street.

Commentary

JUDD ANNIS
Collegian Columnist

The amusing effect of this ordinance will be seen as one strolls about town observing cat owners trying to take their pets for a walk on a leash. It is almost impossible to teach or train a cat to do "tricks" like walking on a leash. A cat doesn't do what it doesn't want to do. Its independent nature is too strong. It's not by accident that circuses feature dog acts and not trained domestic cat acts.

It's sad to note how far the domestic cat has fallen from its glory days of old. Those who built the Sphinx would be appalled at this "model" ordinance. So would the residents of Venice, Italy, whose forefathers imported cats and allowed them to roam to control that city's rodents.

Health board members see the ordinance's primary purpose to be to cut down on the number of dogs and cats that wander loose and create health hazards. But what of the mice and rats that "run loose"? Ask any farmer to tell you about the importance of cats. I never saw a mouse near my house when I got my first cat, and I know it wasn't because they just weren't being social.

The cats obviously reduce a health hazard, but what health hazard do they create? And how serious is it when compared to other hazards? These are questions the "cat problem" zealots either answer in vague generalities or not at all. One source indicates that there hasn't been a confirmed case of cat rabies locally for six years. But if cats are a "health problem," how does the problem rank with better known health risks? On a scale ranging from global thermonuclear war and an AIDS epidemic down to surplus cheese, where does the "cat problem" rank? Seemingly, no public official wants to talk in these terms.

Perhaps these public officials have chosen to attack the "cat problem" at just this time to take their minds, and ours, off more serious problems. I would imagine that the Manhattan-Riley County Health Board would rather tackle the "cat problem" than worry about their obligation to protect the public from AIDS. No matter what you propose on AIDS, you will anger some organized pressure group. The Manhattan City Commission would undoubtedly rather discuss cats running rampant in the city than the huge tax increase they just passed or the ghost town being created on Poyntz Avenue by the opening of our new mall.

If one can't appeal to government officials' reason, perhaps we can appeal to their pride. While the musical "Cats" has been playing to sellout houses in the Big Apple for five years, the "Little Apple" is considering an ordinance restricting the natural freedom of cats. While "Cats" is unabashedly a celebration of the cat, Manhattan's cat ordinance will be unabashedly a demeaning of the cat.

T.S. Eliot, whose book "Old Possum's Book of Practical Cat" was the source of the lyrics for "Cats," provided words of wisdom for lawmakers when he wrote:

*"You now have learned enough to see
That Cats are much like you and me
And other people whom we find
Possessed of various types of mind....
So first, your memory I'll jog,
And say: A Cat Is Not A Dog."*

University neglects student programs

Have you ever had a difficult question to answer, a tough time finding something or someone on campus, or a problem defining your occupational interests? The vast majority of K-State students would answer "yes." Have you ever contacted U-LearnN to assist you with any of these problems? I hope many of you would also answer "yes."

Then why is it, I ask myself, that U-LearnN is stuck in the basement of Holton (no, not Holtz) Hall — a building, by the way, that is terribly inadequate for all the information, assistance networks and programs it contains.

But, you may retort, I hear the Student Senate is financing the renovation of Holton Hall — expanding, enlarging and cosmetically improving the building. The first question that comes to mind when met by this argument is: Why is the Student Senate sponsoring this renovation in the first place? A task, I might add, which has long since been halted due to funding problems.

If U-LearnN is the only extensive information network at this University, assisting not only the campus but also the local community, why are the repairs of Holton Hall not funded by the state? What about the Women's Resource Center, the Dean of Students, the Counseling Center, Minority Affairs, the Academic Assistance Center and all the other offices which are cramped in Holton? The disdain with which the administration has treated these programs makes them seem negligible to the welfare of this campus.

Construction work has stopped, leaving an interesting litter of scaffolding on the east side of Holton Hall, but hey, let's build another stadium or spend a few thousand dollars more diminishing parking space on campus instead.

It is only logical to me that a program such as U-LearnN — run entirely by students, and with a goal of furnishing the Manhattan community with easily accessible resources and information — should receive more support from the University's administration. But again, you may object, just how much assistance does U-LearnN furnish K-State?

Commentary

MICHAEL NICHOLS
Collegian Columnist

According to statistics for the 1986 school year, U-LearnN received over 29,000 inquiries. More than 28,000 of those were made by telephone. Which leads me to a conclusion, recently confirmed by my roommate (who asked me, "Where the hell is Holton Hall anyway?"), how can students make use of a program when it is in a building they don't know exists?

U-LearnN connects students to numerous organizations, answers practically any type of question, trains para-professionals as peer counselors, offers career exploration assistance and provides a variety of other services.

Why, then, is it not located in the building with the greatest student activity, to better serve this campus? I speak, of course, of the K-State Union. If Student Governing Association has offices in the Union, why can't U-LearnN? I am not trying to diminish the need or importance of SGA's present location, but U-LearnN's services would be sought out at least as much (if not more than) by students.

But, I forget whom we are dealing with. What can you expect from a University that relocates its post office from Anderson Hall to Dykstra Hall, K-State's own version of the dark side of the moon?

One may argue that there is not enough space in the Union to house yet another service. But what of all the empty rooms on the second and third floors?

I speak of the ones where various organizational and club meetings are held. They are well-used at the moment, but are never occupied all at once. Although offices may need to be rearranged, it would not be impossible or even highly unfeasible for U-LearnN to move to the Union.

The major problem, in my view, is the lack of interest in this matter by administrators. This is not restricted to U-LearnN's condition alone, but also to the entire range of services offered in Holton Hall. Why are these programs continually at the bottom end of the University's list of priorities?

We paint our trash cans purple and remodel our president's house, but when it comes time to appropriate funds for assistance programs, our resources begin to fall short.

All departments have suffered serious budget cuts, and "surplus" has become an obsolete term as far as funds are concerned. However, we cannot ignore this campus's need for information and social assistance programs.

Business Briefly

From Staff and Wire Reports

US West searches for location

US West's selection process for its $50 million telecommunication research center is under fire from regulators.

The company has been looking for a location since April, but has stated that it will only locate the center in a state served by one of its three subsidiaries: Pacific Northwest Bell, Mountain Bell and Northwestern Bell.

In a meeting last month, regulators accused US West of using the center and 1,500 workers it would employ as an incentive for states to loosen their regulatory control.

Farmers' total debt decreases

More farmers were able to repay their loans and still make a profit in 1986 as compared to 1985.

A report released by the U.S. Agriculture Department's Economic Research Service also stated that the total farm debt declined.

Lower fuel and fertilizer costs were attributed with the shift as were larger government support payments.

The value of farm land dropped 8 percent in the last year — a decrease of $44 billion.

Wichita bank plans takeover

The takeover of Union Financial Corp., Manhattan, by Fourth Financial Corp. of Wichita is awaiting approval by the government and Union Financial's shareholders.

Almost 95 percent of the capital stock in Union National Bank and Trust Co., Manhattan's largest bank, is owned by Union Financial Corp. Union National's assets are listed at more than $158 million.

The transaction is expected to be approved by the end of the year. At that time, Union National will change its name to BANK IV.

Hesston cuts operating losses

The Hesston Corp., which has been battling a slump in the farm equipment industry, reported smaller operating losses for the second quarter and the first half of 1987 than a year ago.

The company said it had cut its operating losses to $6.8 million, $1.96 per share, on sales of $47.4 million during its second quarter that ended June 30. Hesston reported a $9.3 million loss, $2.65 per share, on $35.8 million in sales during the comparable period in 1986.

Hesston, owned by Fiat, is the country's third-largest maker of hay balers and forage-handling equipment.

Coalition opposes takeovers

Stop the Raid on America is not an insect repellent, but a coalition lead by Moon Landrieu against hostile corporate takeovers.

Landrieu was secretary of Housing and Urban Development in the Carter administration and a two-time mayor of New Orleans.

The campaign is limited to those takeovers that benefit the raider at the expense of the company's employees and communities.

Many companies that survive takeover attempts are so weakened by debt that they can no longer compete effectively, coalition members have said.

Number of oil rigs increases

The number of working oil and gas rigs in the United States increased by 37 last week to 1,049, Baker Hughes reported Monday.

A year ago, the count totaled 731, the Houston-based oil toolmaker said.

"It's pretty much on track in the U.S.," said Ike Kerridge, Baker Hughes vice president of stockholder relations and keeper of the rig count. "We expect (the rig count) to exceed 1,200 by December."

Baker Hughes' count tallies the number of rigs actively exploring for oil, and not rigs producing oil. The count, considered a yardstick of drilling activity, reflects the number of rigs working as of last Friday.

Hughes Tool Co., which merged this year with Baker International Corp. of Orange, Calif., has kept track of the number of working rigs since 1940.

A little more than a year ago, the rig count fell to 663 — the lowest since Hughes began compiling figures — as oil prices plunged to less than $10 per 42-gallon barrel.

The count reached a peak in December 1981, the height of the oil boom, when 4,500 rigs were active.

Computer programs aid farmers in crop planning

Staff/Mary Ward

By Janet Swanson
Agri/Business Editor

Farm machinery has taken on a new look with its multi-thousand dollar price tag, but so has the farmer's office and bookkeeping system.

Only 5 percent of today's farmers have a computerized system, but that number is growing, said Mike Christian, Riley County Extension agricultural agent.

"The farmer can come in and go through many more scenarios of the same situation. It doesn't replace common sense."

—Stephen Welch

"The main computer use for farmers is to figure budgets, project feasibility and feed formulations," Christian said.

But the traditional pen, paper and adding machine can't be replaced, said Stephen Welch, computer systems coordinator.

"The farmer can come in and go through many more scenarios of the same situation," he said. "It doesn't replace common sense."

"Computers enable you to have so much more information than you can ever have without one," said Deanna Munson, wife of a Junction City farmer.

Munson's husband, Chuck, plans to expand their system to include breeding information on their 500 registered Angus cattle.

"We presently do spreadsheets and inventory on our herd," she said. "We can figure yields, cost per acre and can ask 'what if?'"

The Munsons have their monthly expenses entered into a farm management system at their local cooperative extension office in Abilene.

"We have a computer of our own that we do a lot of wordprocessing on, but the co-op program is so quick and efficient that we probably won't get a spreadsheet program of our own," she said.

Kansas State University has developed a variety of programs that range from record keeping to inventory and breeding information.

"FINPACK," developed by K-State, is a total farm system management program. It allows the farmer to make changes on the screen that can't be made during a season, said Welch.

The program is used in 36 states by over 3,000 farmers.

G.A. "Art" Barnaby Jr., K-State Extension agricultural economist, said computers' speed is their greatest advantage.

"Most farm managers don't have the time to look at all the possibilities that it takes to make the best choice," he said.

Don Pretzer, assistant director of Extension of agriculture and natural resources agrees with Welch.

"Computers don't allow farmers to do anything that they weren't able to do before. It's just that computers allow them to do more things, more rapidly and efficiently," he said. He added that many computations farmers deal with are complex.

As helpful as a computer may be, Pretzer said that farmers must first have a good set of records to work from.

"The programs provide a framework and a systematic approach to record keeping," he said. "You can find what the necessary returns are for a change or improvement to be profitable."

"Computers allow the farmer to evaluate a system not only on the engineering aspect, but on all of the factors that influence it," said Welch.

"The programs provide a framework and a systematic approach to record keeping."

—Don Pretzer

An addition to "FINPACK" is "ProtAg," formerly called "Proseries."

The original "ProtAg" supplement was developed five years ago for corn. Since then, sections on beef, wheat, soybeans and swine have been started and are in various stages of completion.

The University received grants for portions of the "ProtAg" program from W.K. Kellogg, the Federal Extension Service, National Cattleman's Association and the Kansas Soybean Association.

"We are working on a sharing agreement with other states to generate these programs and be able to get the maximum benefit for the users," said Welch. "We need to recognize that we are not the sole source of information and cultivate all of the available avenues."

For the swine portion of "ProtAg," 13 states are combining their efforts, said Pretzer. "Somebody from one state will do one thing and someone else will do another part," he said.

"ProtAg" as well as "FINPACK" allows the farmer a chance to look at several alternatives and select the best solution for each situation, said Welch.

By expanding goals set for the farmer in "FINPACK," "ProtAg" brings the total plan together, he said.

"K-Farm," developed by Barnaby in 1982, is a spreadsheet program that allows farmers to project crop yield, cash flow and credit. The Kansas Financial Analysis and Resource Management program is designed to be as general or specific as the farmer needs.

"It's a chance to look at different alternatives from different perspectives," said Barnaby.

"K-Farm" was updated in 1985 to its present version and work on the program is fairly complete, said Barnaby.

"We are presently working to develop a video tape that will illustrate the instruction process," said Barnaby. "It will make the learning process more flexible."

He said that work is beginning on a program that will transfer information and be compatible with the Farm Management Association System.

"It's a chance to look at different alternatives from different perspectives."

—G. A. "Art" Barnaby

"But in order for that to be any good to the farmer, they have to be a member of the association," he said.

The program is sold to farmers for $250 without a training session and $100 with a training session.

"That is opposite to the industry, but that's because our primary function is education," Barnaby said.

Besides record keeping and inventory control, Welch said that computers can be used as an environmental control measure.

"Some big farmers have a computer that registers their animals' feed and water, and the barn's temperature for ventilation," he said.

Center benefits downtown

The Manhattan Town Center opens Oct. 26, 1987. The 300,000-square foot regional center is located "in the heart of it all" — in the heart of Manhattan and the downtown retail area. Upon opening, the Manhattan Town Center will introduce many exciting concepts.

The unusual location stresses the center's development goal of keeping downtown alive. It will work together with the main street to coordinate promotions and holiday decorating. There are 10 local merchants coming into the center, some of which will vacate main street locations.

Manhattan Town Center developers addressed this situation by building as an addition to downtown rather than choosing a mall's usual placement on the outskirts of a town. This will prove to be a leasing tool for main street due to the added traffic from the mall. The Center will be an evolution of the downtown retail district. Main street will be stronger than ever as main street and Manhattan Town Center will complement each other.

The picnic place is one of the Center's new concepts. Located near one of the center's four fountains, it will have seating for 500 patrons.

On a regular basis, background music, played on a baby grand piano, will accompany the dining crowds. Also, each month the picnic place will host its own special event. The promotions and entertainment within the center will be tailored to regional interests, while also being unique to most mall marketing. For the fashion conscious, Manhattan Town Center will feature professionally produced fashion shows and a personal shopper service. For the business minded, Manhattan Town Center will have its own radio station, KMTC, broadcasting upcoming mall events, contests and shopping news.

The Manhattan Town Center will provide fashions from casual to elegant, showcasing an assortment of fine stores, specialty shops, restaurants and services. So that visits are always a pleasure, the Information Desk, centrally located in the mall, will provide wheelchair and stroller loans, lottery tickets, Manhattan Town Center Gift Certificates and friendly greetings.

DIRECT offers business tips, solutions to callers' problems

By Jennifer Dorsch
Staff Writer

For Kansans who have questions regarding economic and business development, a new service at K-State can help them find the answers.

DIRECT, Development Information: REferral, Coordination and Training, was introduced as part of the K-State Cooperative Extension Service last May.

The program was designed to make it easier for people or communities with questions about industry or business to find information at no cost to the caller.

The service doesn't try to answer the questions, but rather find a resource person for the caller to contact.

"The main purpose of DIRECT is to make a point of contact for people out over the state. We can find a person knowledgeable about the question the caller has and get them together," said E.J. Sonny Sisk, extension specialist with DIRECT.

When a Kansan dials DIRECT, 532-7987, the wheels at Umberger Hall begin to turn. The request for assistance is taken and one of four DIRECT staff people begin a search for a resource using computer networks and a knowledge of state agencies.

When a resource is located, DIRECT asks that person if they would be willing to help the caller. Sisk said almost all of the resource people have been very cooperative.

One frequently contacted resource, David Darling, assistant professor of community development, said, "It may take me six or ten phone calls to find the answer, but the person with the question usually has no idea where to start looking."

"Most of the questions have a very specific answer. We have resources and statistics available to find those answers," Darling said.

Depending on the depth of the question, a single resource may be found or a team of experts may be assembled. The response is given in information, a referral or a visit.

"We try to get a response back to the caller within 24 hours," Sisk said.

Within two weeks after receiving a request call for assistance, DIRECT contacts the caller and asks if they were satisfied with the information they received and if they have any other questions. "The follow-up gives us an evaluation of the program as it goes along," Sisk said.

The program was introduced to county extension agents, mayors and community development groups through letters, brochures and posters.

Since the program's arrival in May, DIRECT has received 135 calls or about one per day. Topics of inquiry have included home food processing, land restoration, copyright laws, snail culture and small-business setup.

"It's a one-of-a-kind program," Sisk said.

DIRECT was the idea of Walter Woods, dean of the college of agriculture and director of the agricultural experiment stations.

Lobbyist speaks for K-State's interests

By Patti Paxson
Staff Writer

Politics and higher education have always had their hands in each other's pockets. But here at K-State, Michael Johnson, assistant to the president for external affairs, tries to keep the two in their place when he lobbies for K-State's interests in Topeka.

Johnson said he serves as a legislative liaison for K-State, as opposed to the "traditional, stereotyped lobbyist with a fistful of $20 bills, donating to PACs (political action committees) and buying drinks and dinners for legislators in order to influence legislation.

"My role as the lobbyist for K-State is not that way at all," he said. University lobbyists in other states often make donations to PACs, but Johnson said he thinks "that is totally inappropriate" and that it does not happen in Kansas.

"You would like to think that a university's budget requests and projected needs could stand on their own," Johnson said.

As an assistant to University President Jon Wefald, his primary responsibility is to handle governmental relations, both state and national.

"I respond to and interact with off-campus interest groups, troubleshooting as needed in handling the University's relationships," Johnson said.

Johnson explained that most of his work is with the state legislature and governmental entities such as the State Board of Agriculture, the Department of Commerce, the Department of Administration, the budget division of the legislature and the legislative research staff.

He said he also works with such groups as the University's deans, the Faculty Senate, alumni groups and the KSU Foundation, conveying their requests to the Board of Regents and the legislature.

Johnson's first obligation is to the Board of Regents, though, when K-State makes its requests to the state legislature.

"I really work for the Board of Regents. (In regard to) my counterparts in the other Kansas universities, our first responsibility is to the Board of Regents," Johnson said. "Before I can aggressively work with the legislature to achieve (a particular) program, my first obligation is for the system-wide requests: faculty salaries, operating expenses, utilities, equipment and so on.

"We (the Board of Regents) are a system. For us to be a system, we have to work together. If we don't work together, then we're in trouble," Johnson said.

The legislative committees most often associated with K-State's interests — and therefore the ones Johnson spends the most time with — are the Ways and Means Committees, the Agriculture and Livestock Committees and the Joint Building Committees.

Johnson deals with a wide range of University projects. Lack of research funds for a particular department, answering informational requests from the governor or testifying for various legislative committees about such issues as promoting a grain science program are areas that Johnson regularly attends to, he said.

Student issues are best brought to the attention of the Student Governing Association, the Associated Students of Kansas or to the Board of Regents via the student body president rather than to his office, Johnson said. Additionally, he said he usually directs purely academic issues to the chief academic official of whichever particular program the problem concerns.

Johnson spends quite a bit of time in Topeka working with various governmental entities and has found it necessary to go to Washington, D.C. only a few times as a lobbyist for K-State, he said.

Freshman Roxanne Finley tries out for a position on the women's tennis team during walk-on tryouts Saturday morning at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Area. Other teams offering walk-on tryouts this season were volleyball, baseball and men's and women's golf.

K-State teams hold open tryouts to supplement scholarship talent

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

It's not every athlete who comes to college with a full scholarship and practically a guaranteed spot on the varsity team. At K-State there are some who walk on during open team tryouts.

Four K-State varsity athletic programs, volleyball, baseball, tennis and golf, have held tryouts during the past two weeks with the hope of finding someone that can be a positive addition to the squad.

"We hold tryouts every year," K-State volleyball coach Scott Nelson said. "It's part of the athletic department's philosophy of having an open athletic program where the general student can walk in and tryout and possibly make it."

"In our situation we just have a varsity team in volleyball," Nelson said. "If a student tries out and is good enough, she actually makes the varsity team."

Nelson has held tryouts for eight years now and has found it to be a good way to strengthen weak spots on the team and increase overall depth — neither of which he needed to do this year.

"Traditionally we've added people fairly regularly through our open tryouts," Nelson said. "But this year our numbers were real low at tryouts so we didn't keep anyone. Our team was already pretty well structured through recruiting and things like that from last year."

"Tryouts, basically, by my philosophy, are to aid our team in areas that need supplementing," Nelson said. "Any area that I perceive as being weak, we'll look for people that can fill that need and strengthen that area."

Open team tryouts are a fairly new idea to some programs at K-State, but that doesn't mean they haven't been productive.

"This is just the second year we've conducted tryouts," K-State assistant baseball coach Jeff Stewart said. "We had a little bit of success last year and the program became more attractive so there are more kids trying out."

"Last year we had 32 try out and this year we have 52 after we turned some away because they didn't follow procedure."

"Of the 32 who tried out last year, we kept seven originally and they worked out with the existing squad, but after three weeks we cut four of them. Right now, the three that made it are still on our squad list," he added.

Giving each person who tries out a fair chance is a priority with the baseball open team tryouts at K-State.

"We give them a lot more chances here than most places," Stewart said.

The main reason behind the walk-on program for most coaches may be to fill weak areas of the team or increase depth, but there's also another reason behind it.

"We're trying to do two things here with tryouts: provide an opportunity for girls who want to play to continue playing and also to build a pool of players to help feed our program," said K-State women's tennis coach Steve Bietau.

Last year Bietau worked with seven or eight girls who wanted to tryout but none of them ended up making the team, but it isn't always that way.

"I've had a couple that have made it before. We actually didn't have tryouts," Bietau said. "They contacted me individually and came out to practice and tried out. Usually there aren't a lot of girls who try to walk on that are going to put in the time and energy we feel is needed."

Coach says students must rock stadium

K-State football coach Stan Parrish is somewhat upset. He feels betrayed. He has guaranteed the 1987 Wildcats are vastly improved from last year's 2-9 squad, and yet student season ticket sales are down almost 1,000 from last year's final total of 4,970 at the close of business Friday.

"We need to get the students up on their feet," Parrish said. "When our overall ticket sales are up the way they are, and we have 1,000 new students on campus and our student sales are down, we've got a problem."

But unlike last year, Parrish won't traipse around the University in an effort to promote K-State football to the student body. Nope, he's got a simpler solution.

"What I'm going to try to do is have our team play well," Parrish said.

"In the last year and a half, I've been about everywhere on this campus. Our kids believe in our program, now we've got to get our students out here supporting our team," he added.

There is a glimmer of hope, though. Mike Jones, the athletic department's business manager, said he isn't ready to raise a white flag as long as student ticket sales are progressing.

"The problem is that last year we were down 1,500 student season ticket sales from the year before," Jones said.

"To get the football program going, we need student support. We need a lot of loud, obnoxious students just raising holy hell (in the student section) and then they'll wake up the rest of the crowd," he said.

Parrish agreed with Jones' assessment of the situation.

"There's no question. (The students) are the people that make 80 percent of the noise in the stadium," Parrish said.

Parrish has plenty of help this year as far as promotion is concerned. "I Contributed A Twenty" club members are contacting fraternity and sorority members and students who live in residence halls. There is a table in the Student Union and ads will be run in this week's Collegians. The promotion appears to be paying off, Jones said.

Tom on Tuesday

TOM MORRIS
Sports
Writer

Jones said there are variables to be considered when comparing last season's to this year's ticket sales.

"Last year we sold a lot of student tickets the week before the Kansas game," Jones said. "I'll tell you one thing, if I were a student and was wanting a single game ticket for the Kansas game, there ain't going to be one around."

He said ticket orders for the KU game Nov. 7 are up by a margin of 2 to 1 over last year. The ticket office is receiving 200 requests for Kansas tickets per day, and Jones said he is planning on ordering end zone seats within the next week or two.

It may be shades of 1974 when a record 43,576 fans packed into KSU Stadium (capacity 42,000) to see K-State play the Jayhawks. Also, it could be close to a sellout when Oklahoma comes to Manhattan for the Homecoming game Oct. 17.

Jones' advice? Buy a season ticket for $30 which admits the student to six home games. For $5 a game, "Cat fans can see Willie Nelson, No. 1-ranked Oklahoma and the bitter rivalry between KU and K-State all in the course of one season. Not a bad deal."

"I hope this place is mobbed Saturday night," Parrish said.

Compared with last year's opening day attendance of 18,394 against Western Illinois, the first-game crowd could seem like a mob. Jones expects 25,000. The Willie Nelson concert promoter expects up to 30,000 in attendance.

And if the new and improved Wildcats measure up to their preseason expectations, Parrish should get his wish and will be "mobbed" with student support for the duration of the season.

Quisenberry having problems this year; GM shows concern

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Dan Quisenberry, once the ace of the Kansas City Royals' bullpen and five-time winner of the Fireman of the Year award, has pitched just 45 1/2 innings this year. He hasn't shown the effectiveness that earned him a lifetime contract with the team.

Quisenberry is upset about the situation and blames his decline in part to a lack of pitching time. But the Royals say he needs to be more effective to get more time.

"I have anger. I have hurt. I have embarrassment," Quisenberry told The Kansas City Times in an interview published Monday. "It gets tough for me about 3:30 each day, the time I have to leave for the ballpark. I want to come to the ballpark and have a good day. But the way things are now, it's impossible."

Quisenberry has recorded eight saves this season. Since July 19, he has appeared in eight games and has had only one save opportunity since the All-Star break.

Royals General Manager John Schuerholz said Quisenberry must improve his game before he can see more innings.

"The whole issue is the effectiveness of his pitching," he said. "Does opportunity affect effectiveness? Or does effectiveness affect opportunity? You have a fair argument for either side."

"I know this is very frustrating for him. He's a man with a lot of pride, and rightfully so. He's been one of the premier relief pitchers in all of baseball. The man is one of the fiercest competitors I've ever seen in a baseball uniform," Schuerholz said.

The arrival of new manager John Wathan last week signaled a new opportunity for Quisenberry. Wathan was Quisenberry's teammate when he piled up 217 saves between 1979 and 1985. Wathan has said Quisenberry will get more work.

"Maybe he can bounce back. I don't know," Schuerholz said.

"But there was a time when John Hiller was no longer the stopper," the general manager said. "There was a time when Al Hrabosky wasn't the stopper. There was a time when Hank Aaron was pinch hit for."

Crowds give support

By Staff and Wire Reports

The K-State women's basketball team topped attendance during the 1986-87 season in the Big Eight Conference, according to recent statistics released by the NCAA.

The Lady Cats' average attendance of 887 was increased by an average of 69 people per game last season. The 5,319 total attendance in six home contests ranks as the 32nd leading net home attendance of NCAA Division I schools, while the Big Eight was ranked as the sixth leading Division I conference in women's basketball attendance.

"The city of Manhattan and students at K-State have always supported women's basketball, so it's not surprising that we once again led the Big Eight in attendance," said Matilda Mossman, head women's basketball coach. "We have an exciting style of play and once people see us for the first time they usually come back."

"Our staff and our players are very excited about the enthusiasm people show for Lady Cat basketball."

'Cats in shape for season opener

By Staff and Wire Reports

With K-State President Jon Wefald looking on in support, head football coach Stan Parrish took his team into its final week of practice before its season opening contest against Austin Peay State University.

Clad in office attire, Wefald slung his suitcoat over his shoulder and observed from the sideline as Parrish shouted instructions to the Wildcat offensive unit.

During practice, Parrish seemed especially concerned with avoiding injuries, as he urged his players to be cautious and "stay off the ground" during a brief intrasquad scrimmage at the conclusion of today's drills.

The head coach probably has good reason for concern.

After being out all of last week, running back Maurice Henry and linebacker Dewayne Baziel both returned in full force for today's practice.

After sitting out most of last year because of a broken bone in his foot, the 6-1, 220 pound Henry has been out with a pulled hamstring since almost the beginning of fall practices this year. Baziel has been out of action with a slightly strained knee.

Tim MacDonald, a senior defensive tackle, was held out with a throat infection, while senior linebacker David Wallace missed with a bruised thigh.

If healthy, MacDonald and Wallace are scheduled to start in Saturday's contest.

Lafene renovations continue

By Jan Schwartz
Collegian Reporter

Speeding up patient flow and creating a more efficient workplace are the aims of renovations underway at Lafene Student Health Center, said Dr. Robert Tout, director.

The renovations, which began this summer, are taking place in the reception area and the records office.

The estimated cost of the renovations is $11,000, and funding will be derived from the $60 student health fee paid by full-time students at the beginning of every semester. Lafene receives no money from the state or federal government.

Tout said renovations were scheduled to be completed Aug. 14, but because of setbacks the work is expected to continue into December.

Tout said the problems contributing to the delay include moving electrical and telephone lines, tearing down old walls and dealing with water pipe breakage.

"What you see (upon entering Lafene) will be completed within the next two weeks," he said. "What you don't see won't be completely done until Christmas."

The renovations are a direct result of a study ordered by former University Vice President William Sutton. The study recommended terminating kitchen services and closing inpatient care during vacations when few students are on campus.

Eric Muehleisen, administrator at Lafene, said kitchen services were terminated last spring. He also said all inpatient care services will cease at the end of this semester. Two observation beds will be available for emergencies, however.

"The inpatient facilities were very expensive and there was no point in having the facilities for the few number of students hospitalized," Muehleisen said.

Other concerns listed in the study included patient flow and efficient use of physical space.

Muehleisen said renovation of the nurses' station last December was one way to address the problem of increasing patient flow and to offer more privacy to patients.

Tout said future renovations planned for Lafene include moving the Eriksen Sports Medicine Clinic from the basement into the area on the first floor formerly used as the kitchen. He hopes this move will be completed by the beginning of the spring semester.

Muehleisen said Lafene has two internal committees that will be involved in future renovation plans at Lafene. The Program Development Committee evaluates student services, and the Space Utilization Committee examines the long-term planning of utilizing space at Lafene.

Thai plane crashes near Phuket Island, 2 Americans die

By The Associated Press

BANGKOK, Thailand — A Thai Airways jet plunged into the sea near Phuket Island on Monday and officials said they believed all 83 people aboard were killed.

Two Americans were said to be among the 37 foreigners on the Boeing 737.

Spokesmen said 17 bodies were recovered before search operations halted for the night because of high winds and poor visibility. Meteorologists said skies were clear when the crash occurred.

"As of 10:30 p.m., Thai Airways believes there are no survivors," a statement from the airline said.

Air Marshal Narong Dithipeng, managing director of the state-run airline, told a news conference earlier Monday that the plane was trying to evade a 737 of the Hong Kong-based line Dragonair when it crashed into the Andaman Sea eight miles from the resort island's airport.

A statement from Dragon Airlines Ltd. in Hong Kong said company officials spoke to the captain of its aircraft and were "assured that the Dragonair aircraft was not involved." It gave no details and the Dragonair jet's crew would not talk to reporters when the plane returned to Hong Kong.

Prayoon Thavisang, manager of the Phuket airport, said the aircraft were following a landing procedure that caused no problems in the past. He told The Associated Press by telephone he doubted there were any survivors.

In Bangkok, a spokesman for Thai Airways said 17 bodies had been recovered when the search was called off at 7:30 p.m. He said there were no reports of survivors.

Narong said the plane carried nine crew members, 35 Thai passengers and 37 foreign passengers: 30

Malaysians, two Americans, two Japanese and two Europeans. He said the other two passengers were children accompanying adults.

A partial passenger list from the airline identified the Americans as William N. Ward and his Thai-born wife Jantree Ward. No further information about them was available.

Officials said the sea search by a patrol vessel and 20 fishing boats was suspended about 3½ hours after the crash, but rescue boats ringed the crash area to prevent bodies from being swept into deeper waters.

The Thai Airways flight originated in Hat Ya, a commercial center 155 miles east of Phuket. After the Phuket stop it was to continue to about 540 miles northeast of the island.

According to Narong, "the reason for the crash was to avoid a Boeing 737 of Dragonair, which also was descending." He told the news conference he did not know the reason for the suspected near collision.

Crew members of the Dragonair jet, which carried 127 people and landed safely, reported the crash of Thai Airways Flight TH365 to the control tower.

Prayoon said he was in the tower and the incoming jets were in contact with it as they approached the airport at an altitude of between 4,500 to 5,000 feet.

He said the Dragonair jet landed on schedule at 3:36 p.m. and the Thai airliner was to have touched down four minutes later.

The landing procedure was routine, Prayoon said, and was never a problem. He speculated that the Thai pilot may have decided not to land immediately after the Dragonair jet and was circling when the crash occurred.

It's busy time in drop/add center

By Julie Key
Collegian Reporter

The drop/add center located in the basement of Farrell Library has been a busy place since it opened Aug. 24.

Donald Foster, University registrar, said he has no record of how many students go through drop/add each semester. He estimates the number is 7,000 to 8,000 students. Last year, the center handled 65,000 drop/add transactions.

Foster said the busiest days at the drop/add center are the first three days of classes. Another busy day will be Sept. 28, the last day to drop a class without a withdraw being recorded.

In order to add a class already full, "we have to have a letter of permission," said Elaine Baxter, office assistant at the center.

The letter must be on letterhead from the instructor of the class, not from the student's adviser, Baxter said.

The procedure for going through drop/add differs according to which college a student is enrolled. The College of Engineering requires an adviser's signature and the dean's signature to drop or add a class. Graduate students and students in the colleges of Arts and Sciences, Business Administration and Human Ecology never have to obtain signatures.

Students in the colleges of Agriculture, Architecture and Design, and Education need to have an adviser's signature to go through drop/add. Starting Monday, students in these colleges will also need a dean's signature.

Angie Hacker, freshman in special education, had an unusual reason for going through drop/add.

Hacker was late in arriving to school this semester. Although she was pre-enrolled, the computer dropped her from all her classes. She picked up her appointment card on Aug. 25 and was not able to go through drop/add until Aug. 27. Hacker said drop/add is a hassle. She thinks the center should get rid of the appointment cards.

Foster said K-State has used the appointment card system for about 10 years. Prior to this, students went through drop/add on a first come, first serve basis.

"Students were experiencing a terribly long time waiting to drop/add (on a first come, first serve basis)," Foster said. "So to save students the hassle of standing in line, we went to appointment cards. In effect, this still puts students in a line, but for a shorter period of time."

withdrawal from the compact — although this is the group's ultimate goal — but to get the legislators to discuss the compact's problem areas. The compact issue has been debated in the Senate, but not in the House, Menhusen said.

"Most of the legislators are not aware of this issue," said David Ebbert, a farmer from Gove County and a member of the KSNW.

"The majority of Kansans are against the compact," Menhusen said. She noted, however, that some legislators and Hayden are calling the issue "dead" since they recently have seen more Kansans slowing down in their opposition to the waste compact.

"It's not too late to pull out of the compact," Menhusen said. Legislators often point out the fact that if Kansas pulls out of the waste compact now, it will have to pay $25,000 a year for five years to the compact commission for breach of contract.

"However," she said to the demonstrators, "this special highway session costs the state $37,000 a day to have."

Though the compact issue was not added to the agenda of the special session yesterday, Reps. Kathleen Sebelius of Topeka and Delbert Gross of Hays will "offer a resolution in the House to make this part of the agenda, and to establish a special joint committee of the House and Senate to continue to review this issue during this special session," Ebbert said. The next regular session of the Kansas legislature does not begin until January.

On Sept. 22, the Central Interstate Compact Commission will meet in Little Rock, Ark., to discuss the contract with the waste site developer, US Ecology.

the accident occurred, had continued to operate.

The longest and costliest mine strike in South Africa's history turned primarily on the union's demand for a 30 percent wage increase, which it lowered to 27 percent six days before the strike ended.

Union negotiators also asked for higher death benefits, which the mining houses agreed to provide, and danger pay in an industry that has an average of 700 deaths and 20,000 injuries a year.

Management rejected the demands for danger pay, more vacation time and an extra holiday, but slightly improved the holiday pay and granted pay increases of 15 to 23.4 percent.

Black miners made $140 a month when the walkout began, according to the union, and $250 by management's account. A black miner's pay is about one-fifth that of a white mine employee.

Nine miners were killed during the strike, and the union said more than 500 were injured and 400 arrested. Tens of millions of dollars in wages and corporate profits were lost.

Gencor, as the company is known, said at first Monday's accident was caused by an explosion of unknown origin. Some of the 400 men who escaped through excavation tunnels to an adjacent mine shaft and reached the surface said they heard a very loud noise, Maude told reporters.

Company spokesman Harry Hill said late Monday evening company officials believed the accident involved the cable breaking or separating from the elevator, which plunged to the bottom of the shaft carrying rock, steel supports and platforms with it.

changes. They were scheduled in the afternoon and evening so the majority of residents would be given the opportunity to attend, Devore said.

Last spring, the council proposed a three-fold plan to remedy the short supply of on-campus parking spaces, Devore said.

Parking for state vehicles, previously unregulated by the campus police, is to be limited.

A $2-a-day parking fee for all conference attendees was proposed but failed approval.

The proposal to alter the Jardine parking situation was the third part of the plan.

Factors uncertain in student's death

By The Collegian Staff

Autopsy reports for Earl R. LaPere, senior in accounting, have shown no definite cause for his death.

The coroner's report ruled LaPere died from undetermined causes, said Sgt. Rodney Jager of the Riley County Police Department.

He said the report showed there were no indications of trauma, suicide, drug abuse or foul play.

Police authorities are trying to place the time of death around Aug. 20, Jager said.

LaPere was found dead in his apartment Aug. 28 after a letter carrier became suspicious and reported a large accumulation of mail and a foul smell emanating from the apartment.

debate on the resolution, Talkington said the resolution would be necessary to prevent a six-week or two-month session.

"What that would come down to is that we wouldn't have a special session — we'd have another general session," Talkington said. "The people of Kansas treat this as a special session. I don't think they want us here another month or two in the fall."

Other senators argued it would be foolish for the Senate to attempt to debate highways in a vacuum. Senate Minority Leader Michael Johnston, D-Parsons, said the resolution eventually would be ineffective.

"If members have the passion or the ingenuity, clearly we're going to address other issues," Johnston said.

House Speaker Jim Braden, R-Clay Center, said he will not offer a resolution limiting House debate and will instead use his powers as speaker to keep bills that do not pertain to highways off the House floor. He has said he wants to avoid a long debate on the resolution.

The Senate's actions followed an attempt in the House to adjourn the session on its first day. Rep. Gary Blumenthal, D-Merriam, led the effort, but an adjournment resolution was defeated, 20-99. Blumenthal said he offered the resolution to make a point.

"I think the point had to be made that a number of us were opposed to a calling of a special session," Blumenthal said. "There are some Republicans who've told me they have resolutions ready for later in the week."

However, Blumenthal's resolution even received opposition from House Minority Leader Marvin Barkis, D-Louisburg, a vocal critic of Hayden's highway plan. Barkis said the resolution was "inappropriate" on the first day of the special session.

"It might be proper at some point, but this is not the time," Barkis said. "We've already wasted money just to be here. The people expect us to do something since we're here."

Both chambers convened shortly after 9 a.m. and took care of house-keeping chores before Hayden spoke about two hours later.

In his address, Hayden urged lawmakers to embrace a statewide vision and avoid partisan battles over a highway program. He said a comprehensive plan, like his, was necessary if the state was to "move into the 21st Century."

"I would remind you that the first word in your titles is 'state,'" Hayden said. "I submit to you that we cannot and we dare not fail."

Hayden also defended his proposal for financing his highway program against criticisms from oil marketers and truckers that the increases and accompanying indexing would put an undue burden on those industries.

EPA grants $1 million to Fateley

By Deron Johnson
Editor

A K-State researcher has been awarded $1 million from the Environmental Protection Agency to determine if hazardous waste is present in air emanating from landfills across the country.

William Fateley, chemistry professor, received the grant Tuesday from Morris Kay, district director of EPA, at the agency's office in Kansas City, Kan.

He was awarded the money, which will be distributed in three $330,000 increments, based on a breakthrough device he developed that uses laser light to detect chemicals in air vapor above landfills.

"Once we get this started, I don't know how many places will call us. It's quite a breakthrough. We're pretty excited."

—William Fateley

"It had been a proposal that had been examined for nearly a year," said Fateley, who learned about a month ago he was going to receive the grant, which he called "exceptional."

Fateley said the device, which took him about a year to develop, is able to detect chemicals at one part per billion. He believes his services will be in high demand.

"Once we get this started, I don't know how many places will call us," he said. "It's quite a breakthrough. We're pretty excited."

The EPA is responsible for monitoring hazardous sites and ensuring their safety.

Part of the applications of Fateley's work will involve EPA's "Superfund" sites, those locations the agency has determined to be among the worst in the nation.

"Our concentration will be first, of course, in Kansas," he said, adding he didn't know the priority of state sites.

"(The EPA) will give us a direction on that," Fateley will supervise on-site research.

The device is able to measure chemicals in any weather condition, and it's able to not only determine the chemical that's leaking, but also its intensity, he said.

"Before, it was just one big puzzle that didn't have a good solution," he said.

The work will enable K-State to strengthen ties with the University of Kansas, he said.

"One of the more interesting things is that we're going to be able to work with the people at KU," he said.

KU researchers have the capability to generate clouds of harmless chemicals that will be used to calibrate the equipment Fateley will use. The equipment will be tested this fall.

Fateley has been at K-State since 1972 and is internationally known for his work in spectroscopy, which is a way to investigate the atmosphere and identify chemical compounds.

Fateley believes that within three years the technology will exist to manufacture inexpensive devices that can be placed in a landfill and monitored by telecommunication.

"It's new high technology, and we're moving with it," he said.

"I think we're going to see a new era of interaction between K-State and the EPA."

Dole seeks plan

By The Associated Press

MIAMI — U.S. Senate Republican leader Bob Dole returned from Central America Tuesday and blasted Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega, questioning his willingness to fulfill his part of the Central American peace plan.

Dole and the four fellow Republican senators who accompanied him engaged in a heated exchange with Ortega in a public meeting in Managua Monday.

The senators were touring Honduras, Costa Rica and Nicaragua as part of their study of the Central American peace plan signed Aug. 7 by Ortega and four other presidents in the region. A key point of the pact calls for an end to U.S. aid to the Contras in exchange for more democracy in Nicaragua.

"We didn't go down to torpedo anything," insisted Dole, saying the group only wanted to assess the plan's chances for peace.

He criticized what he called Ortega's "antics in Managua," and questioned the Sandinista leader's sincerity about sharing power with other groups under a democratic government.

"I've never known a Marxist to give up power," said the senator.

Dole called for Congress to adopt some plan to keep aid to the Contras in suspense until Nov. 7, when the plan is supposed to be fully in effect, to ensure Nicaragua abides by the agreement.

Such a move "would demonstrate to the Contras that we're not walking away from them," Dole said.

Sen. Steven Symms of Idaho took pains to blast Rep. Peter Kostmayer, D-Penn., who also attended the meeting with Ortega.

He accused Kostmayer of "a tragic mistake," saying the congressman had told Ortega he would have to do "less than he thought" to win an end to U.S. aid to the Contras.

Marine's donation creates scholarship

By Tom Denzel
Staff Writer

A retired merchant marine whose only link to K-State is through a niece and nephew has donated nearly $400,000 to the University.

William Haak's gift, donated in June, establishes the William Haak Endowment Scholarship Fund.

The fund will provide scholarships to students who have shown high academic achievement and a need for financial assistance.

"This is quite a unique and interesting story," said Mark Moore, the Foundation's vice president for major gifts.

"(This was) a man who started out with nothing and with the proper planning has amassed a large estate that was valued at about $1 million at his death."

Born in 1894, Haak at age 8 immigrated to the United States from the Soviet Union with his father.

After his father's death, Haak lived in foster homes until he joined the merchant marines and retired as a chief engineer. He died Aug. 2, 1986.

Although he did not attend K-State, Haak developed an interest in the University because of the quality of education his niece and nephew received at K-State.

"The future of our country is with the young people," Haak told Moore at their last meeting two years ago.

Haak's niece, Caroline J. Burke, received a bachelor's degree in business administration in 1956 and now resides in Chanute.

His nephew, George W. Krieh, received a bachelor's degree in civil engineering in 1957 and is now living in Independence, Kan.

Krieh and Moore met in 1981 to set the ground work for the scholarship.

In a meeting with Haak and his nephew in 1981, Moore learned Haak had never been married and had no formal education or training in investment strategy.

Haak developed a keen ability to invest in the right stocks, Moore said.

Some of the 16 companies Haak invested in were AT&T, Eastman-Kodak, Nabisco and Westinghouse.

The KSU Foundation will manage the gift with the assistance of the Student Financial Assistance Program. The scholarships will be awarded annually by the permanent endowment's interest income.

The amount and number of scholarships awarded will be determined by the Student Financial Assistance Program Department.

The selection process for scholarship recipients will begin this spring, Moore said.

The first scholarships will be awarded in the 1988 fall semester.

Mine explosion leaves 50 dead

By The Associated Press

WELKOM, South Africa — Fifty men were killed in an underground gold mine explosion that sent a mine elevator crashing to the bottom of a 4,521-foot shaft, the St. Helena mining company said Tuesday.

It said the 40 men trapped in the elevator Monday must be presumed dead.

The General Union Mining Corp., owner of the St. Helena, said the elevator was almost certainly buried beneath 132 feet of mangled steel and concrete at the bottom of the No. 10 shaft.

"There is no hope that any of the 40 persons still unaccounted for could be found alive," said St. Helena chairman Steve Ellis.

Rescuers located two more bodies Tuesday, bringing to 10 the number of confirmed deaths from the disaster, about 140 miles southwest of Johannesburg.

Ellis made his announcement after rescuers established "beyond doubt" that the missing elevator was not stuck in the shaft and had not fallen into a side cavity above the pile of debris.

Five injured miners and eight bodies were found late Monday at a pumping station platform about a half-mile down the shaft.

One survivor, Mlamli Mazi, 38, described his rescue Tuesday to reporters from his bed in a mine hospital, where he was being treated for head injuries and slight burns.

Senate fails to concur in debate

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Senate struggled Tuesday to find a highway plan upon which a majority of its members could agree, failing to agree on an alternative to Gov. Mike Hayden's comprehensive proposal during a day-long debate.

Senators effectively scaled back a plan the Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee had proposed, cutting out a proposed half-percent increase in the state's sales tax that would have financed $828 million of a proposed $1.18 billion new construction initiative.

However, the action came after the chamber rejected proposals from two of its leaders to cut back the committee's plan. Progress was generally slow on the second day of the Legislature's first special session in 21 years.

Members also agreed that, whatever the size of their program, projects should not be listed in the law or in a resolution giving direction to the state Department of Transportation.

Senate President Robert Talkington, R-Iola, had originally planned to have a highway plan passed by the Senate and sent to the House by the end of the day, but as the evening approached, the debate did not near its end.

"I've had good plans go awry before," Talkington said.

The committee's plan would increase motor fuels taxes 4 cents, vehicle registration fees between 35 percent and 100 percent and the state's 4 percent sales tax a half-percent, for a total pricetag of $1.6 billion. That would have paid for $1.18 billion in new construction, improved maintenance and increased aid to cities and counties.

However, the Senate voted, 29-10, to strip the proposed sales tax increase from the committee's plan and in effect cut the size of the program.

However, that decision came after Talkington's highway proposal failed on a 9-22, and one Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Lenexa, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, failed on a 12-23 vote. Both would have financed less than $500 million in new construction over the next 10 years.

Talkington's plan called for a 5-cent increase in the state's gasoline and diesel fuel taxes and increases of between 25 percent, for trucks, and 100 percent, for passenger cars. Bogina's proposal called for the same registration fees but a 4-cent increase in the motor fuels taxes.

Bogina's plan would have raised $860 million in taxes; Talkington's nearly $1.06 billion. Both would have paid for increased maintenance and increased aid to cities and counties. Talkington's plan would have provided $435 million for new construction; Bogina's about $300 million.

Under Hayden's plan, the state would have increased its fuels taxes by 5 cents and registration fees by between 50 percent and 100 percent. The taxes and fees would be adjusted annually for inflation, and the state would issue nearly $1.3 billion in bonds. The plan would have financed $1.71 billion in new construction.

Talkington said he based his plan on what he had heard from constituents and other state residents who contacted him before the Legislature's special session began Monday.

"I would say 70 or 75 percent of the people (in some areas, 80 percent) said, 'I'm in favor of a highway program but one not as big,'" Talkington said. "I determined what I thought the general public, my constituents — the taxpayers — would feel is justified."

Sen. Bill Morris, R-Wichita, chairman of the transportation Committee, opposed both Talkington's and Bogina's plans, because of the amounts of money they provided for new construction.

CIA employees under suspicion

WASHINGTON — Misprinted stamps worth thousands of dollars apiece were discovered by CIA employees who virtually cornered the market by taking 95 of them from the agency's supplies, according to a published report.

The CIA is investigating the nine employees for using their government positions for private profit. The Washington Post reported in its Wednesday edition.

Only 100 of the misprinted $1 stamps were produced, according to the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, when a single 100-stamp sheet out of 400 was inadvertently reversed. On the misprints, a candlestick is upside down.

The Post, quoting a stamp dealer, a writer for a collectors' publication and a government report obtained under the Freedom of Information Act, said 95 of the stamps were purchased from a McLean, Va., post office for CIA use on March 27, 1986.

The CIA employees who spotted the misprint sold 86 of them to a New Jersey dealer and evidently kept the remaining nine, the newspaper said.

The CIA involvement is detailed in the latest issue of Linn's Stamp News, due to reach subscribers this week, the Post said.

CIA spokeswoman Sharon Foster confirmed Tuesday evening that the Bureau of Printing and Engraving was investigating the case. She declined to discuss details or possible involvement by CIA employees, but said the agency "takes seriously any allegations of misconduct."

"If we determine that there has been any criminal intent, then we refer that to the proper authorities," she said.

Bill Bergstrom, office manager of Jacques C. Shiff Jr. Inc. of Ridgefield Park, N.J., the dealer that obtained the stamps, told the Post that one was recently resold for $17,600.

He and Yeager said the misprints' value ultimately could be as high as $115,000 apiece, or more than $10 million total for the group of 95.

Postage stamps — by phone

RAYTOWN, Mo. — The U.S. Postal Service's new national telephone sales program will be based in the Kansas City area, where a Raytown telecommunications company will act as a clearinghouse for the service.

Under the new program, postal patrons ordering a minimum of $11 worth of stamps, pre-stamped envelopes or postcards will be able to place their order over the phone and pay by credit card. Each transaction will carry a $2 service charge to help cover costs.

As the clearinghouse, USA 800 Inc. of Raytown expects to receive about 2 million calls and several million dollars in revenue a year under the program, said Jeane E. Miller, the firm's director of marketing and public relations.

The program will initially be tested in Miami, New York, Baltimore, Boston, Minneapolis, San Diego, and Sacramento, Calif. It should later be expanded nationwide.

O'Connor visits Thailand

BANGKOK, Thailand — U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor met leading justice officials and spoke on American constitutional law and civil rights Tuesday during a two-day visit to Thailand.

America's first woman Supreme Court justice is here on a program sponsored by the Asia Foundation, a private American group that fosters exchanges between American and Asian leaders.

Governor to be in 'Doonesbury'

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Gov. Evan Mecham, the object of a recall drive over some of his controversial statements and appointments, will get more national attention when he's featured as a character in "Doonesbury."

The governor declined to comment on cartoonist Garry Trudeau's use of a Mecham character in a series of six comic strips for next week.

"I haven't seen 'em, heard of 'em or thought of 'em," Mecham said Monday.

One strip shows a caricature of Mecham patting a black child on the head and saying: "My, what a cute little pickaninny."

Last spring, Mecham defended the use of the word "pickaninny" as a reference to black children.

Trudeau, interviewed Monday by telephone from New York by The Phoenix Gazette, said he had been following Mecham since he took office in January.

"It's a splendid little morality play," Trudeau said.

No stewing for contestants

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Entrants realize there's no use stewing about it, because it'll be still three or four weeks before the winners of a national soup-recipe contest are announced.

"We still have to double check," said Peggy LeBrun, public relations manager with Campbell's home office, who was in St. Paul Monday for the competition. "We have to make sure the winners are not professional cooks. This is for amateurs only."

The winners of the contest, sponsored by the Campbell Soup Company of Camden, N.J., will pocket $10,000, $5,000, $3,000 and $2,000 in prize money.

Competition has been high and so has security. The names, residences, even the sex of the contestants, have been kept from the judges.

Model-T traded for '85 Bronco

GREENFIELD, Mass. — Dennis Duguay drove down out of the Vermont hills and into a Ford dealership here, telling salesmen he was in the market for a newer model and was willing to trade ... for his 1923 Model-T express wagon.

"It was crazy," said Wayne Barber, a manager at the Sweeney Ford dealership. "This guy comes driving down in the pouring rain in an open car — no roof on it — dressed in a poncho and says 'OK. This is the trade.'"

But Barber closed the deal last week, and Duguay exchanged wooden wheels and kerosene head lamps for a 1985 Bronco II with 4-wheel drive and electric headlights.

In addition to the restored Model T, Duguay paid $2,500 for the Bronco, which Barber said was worth $10,000.

Duguay, 47, said it took him about three hours at top speeds of 25 mph to drive to Greenfield from Jacksonville, Vt., where he deals in antique cars and parts and owns a store.

His wife, Carol, said the Bronco was for their 20-year-old son, Dennis Jr.

Marshall says no to drug cases

NEW YORK — Thurgood Marshall, who has one of the most liberal records among U.S. Supreme Court justices, says he never votes to consider appeals by convicted drug dealers, according to Life magazine.

"If it's a dope case, I won't even read the petition," the 79-year-old former civil rights lawyer said in an interview. "I ain't giving no break to no drug dealer."

K-State receives NASA research grant

By Brett Hacker
Collegian Reporter

Terry Johnson has a vision. Johnson, director of the Division of Biology Life Sciences, predicts K-State will be in outer space by 1990 through NASA's new Bioserve Space Technologies program.

The program is a joint effort over the next five years among K-State, the University of Colorado at Boulder and the University of Utah. The program will focus on the design of biomedical, biotechnical and agricultural research projects.

Johnson will direct the life sciences research efforts of the program. Funding for the program will be provided by NASA with a grant of $5 million over the next five years. It will be split among the three schools.

Johnson said K-State is expected to receive about $500,000 per year for research. Fourteen commercial participants will also provide $600,000 to $700,000 per year.

One company — Monoclonal International of Fort Scott — is working on cell growths in artificial cultures. Johnson said this research could help in the development of artificial skin.

"We hope to gain an understanding of the aging process and the causes of many diseases, including diabetes, osteoporosis and cancer."

—Terry Johnson

He hopes Bioserve will become self-supporting within five years, when the NASA allocation ends.

One of NASA's prime interests in the project is research of a drug to counter the effects of osteoporosis. Although most common among older women, it also affects astronauts during prolonged space flights. The disease causes a calcium deficiency in bones.

"We hope to gain an understanding of the aging process and the causes of many diseases, including diabetes, osteoporosis and cancer," he said.

"The experiments are going to be done with both plant and animal cells," Johnson said. "We will be interested in applications that would be helpful in the development of new agricultural chemicals and agricultural methods, new drugs for anti-cancer treatment as well as just fundamental information about developmental biological genetics."

Johnson said the experimental stations will orbit the earth after being released from a space shuttle. Robots will carry out the experiments, which will be conducted in canisters about the size of a 10-gallon drum, he said. Each will contain several experiments and have the ability to be recovered by the space shuttle for analysis.

He said most of the experiments are being done for the first time and will be building blocks for future research.

Students will benefit from the opportunity of working with people in both the private and government scientific communities, Johnson said.

City Commission disputes bonus

City fire fighters said they would "swallow their medicine" when the Manhattan City Commission failed to approve the pay raise requested by the fire fighters' Local 2274.

"That's all we can do," said Arlen Loecker, union spokesman. "We tried arbitration last year, but we'll bypass it this year because it's futile."

Local fire fighters wanted to settle the impasse in wage negotiations at Tuesday's city commission meeting. The union requested a 3.65 percent increase in average pay on top of the pay-for-performance program.

Commissioners voted instead to give a 1.5 percent increase for "satisfactory" performance with additional pay provided for "exceptional" performance. This results in an average raise of 2.38 percent and a total increase in the city budget of 3.65 percent.

Most of the debate, however, centered around the pay-for-performance program, which is in its first year of application. Under this policy, fire department employees who receive an "exceptional" evaluation will receive $500 at the end of the calendar year.

"We see the bonus program as 'pie in the sky,'" Loecker said. "We don't know if we'll get that or not."

Loecker also expressed concern because of a rumor that city staff would make employee evaluations more strict, and thus limit the number of "exceptional" ratings given.

Commissioner Kent Glasscock answered Loecker's fear by saying such a practice would be "absolutely wrong."

"I don't ever want to hear that we restricted the exceptional rating in order to stay under budget," he said.

According to Jim Pearson, assistant city manager, the city did post a memo in the department stating that supervisors are required to justify their evaluation ratings if the ratings are under the "exceptional" or "unsatisfactory" category.

Although a review by city staff revealed that possibly 89 percent of the fire department employees could be eligible for meritorious pay, the commissioners emphasized that exceptional work should be rewarded.

The commission again discussed the possibility of adding a fourth tier, or evaluation category. Commissioner Richard Hayter proposed adding a "meritorious" pay category, as the fire fighters requested, and still figuring the increases based on 3.65 percent of the total budget.

Pearson felt that the plan would not offer as much incentive to the employees in the long term.

Pearson also explained that the city's budget is only sufficient enough to offer the average wage increase of 2.38 percent along with the bonus program, based on figures from last year.

"I know the (raise) is certainly not sufficient," said Commissioner Dave Fisher. "I'd like to pay a lot more than that."

Nichols has false alarm

By The Collegian Staff

A system malfunction in Nichols Hall about 8 a.m. Tuesday sounded an alarm for the Manhattan Fire Department.

"It was a simple system malfunction," said Battalion Chief Chuck Tannehill. "The detector could have been set off by a piece of dust or some cigarette smoke."

He said one fire truck responded.

Kansas' lack of worry could affect proposal

The debate over whether Kansas should pull out of a five-member low-level radioactive waste compact is, admittedly, not as fashionable as it was a couple of months ago.

The initial furor over the waste dump's possible consequences has subsided, and the state is now preoccupied with a multi-faceted highway bill. Furthermore, the compact debate is one the people of this state have heard myriad times.

But that doesn't make it any less important for our legislators to consider, or any less urgent a plea that the state abandon the compact.

On Monday, the first day of the Legislature's special session, Gov. Mike Hayden told a group of anti-compact activists that he wouldn't even ask the Legislature to consider the compact issue. Not only was such a request politically risky, but it was also unwarranted, he said.

Hayden is at least obligated to ask the Legislature to consider it. Granted, the chances that it would take him up on the offer are slim, but that's a decision the legislators should make.

Hayden shouldn't have automatically written it off, especially since 33 Democrats introduced a resolution Tuesday requesting appointment of a special legislative committee to review the state's membership in the compact.

However, the governor has an ally in Speaker Jim Braden, who declared: "My intention is to debate only matters related to highways. The committee will not meet, and the resolution will not be debated. I'm going to make sure it doesn't happen."

Such an attitude is politically irresponsible and potentially catastrophic for the state.

Landon lectures help K-State's academics

The Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues committee deserves to be thanked for maintaining the quality of lectures in one of the most prestigious series in the United States.

Costa Rican President Oscar Arias Sanchez, Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor and Sen. Sam Nunn are scheduled to speak in Manhattan this academic year. All of these speakers are well-respected and valued as lecturers.

The series adds a diversity to the University community. It enables students and faculty to hear discussions on immediate concerns — discussions students would not be able to hear in classrooms. The series has a history of drawing prominent speakers; four U.S. presidents, vice presidents and heads of state have been guest lecturers. Both the campus and the city have benefited from increased awareness and increased discussion of worldwide issues.

The series not only initiates academic discussion but also raises the University's image. The series helps K-State set itself apart from other Kansas universities — indeed, from all universities.

Big brother fears drugs

Well, gang, I've got bad news. You're not going to believe this, but we're all going to be feeling the business end of a pitchfork — compliments of the red guy with horns — unless our government saves us from ourselves. I discovered this just the other day while in Topeka.

"Say there, son." An older man in a business suit nudged me as I lunched in the downtown McDonald's. "You're a college student, aren't you?" I'm not sure whether it was my Hard Rock Cafe T-shirt, Corona cap or top-siders that gave me away.

"Yes, sir, Kansas State University," I answered, glancing at the name tag on his lapel. He was a lobbyist for "Self-righteous Kansans for a Decent, Moral and Controlled Lifestyle and Good Personal Hygiene," or something like that.

"K-State, you say? I wonder if you could tell me what the kids there think of this proposal to test incoming freshmen for drugs. I've been pushing pretty hard for it. We've got to keep the hippie pinkos from poisoning our institutions of higher learning, you know."

"Oh yes, sir," I nodded fervently. "I'm sure the students will be more than willing to urinate for the Board of Regents and the Legislature. There'll be pants coming down all over campus," I assured him.

The lobbyist straightened his tie. "I'm, um...I'm pleased to hear that — I think. But I was told there might be some resistance among the students. You know, protests and the like."

"Oh, rats! I told them sweet-and-sour sauce for my McNuggets," I complained. The lobbyist glared impatiently. "Oh yes, protests," I answered, reaching for the ketchup.

Commentary

DOUG FOLK
Collegian Columnist

"As a matter of fact, I did overhear some grumbling in the Union the other day — you know, personal liberties, constitutional rights, that kind of thing."

My lobbyist friend put his hand on my shoulder and smiled. "I like you, son. You've got to shield yourself from these radical influences. Every time you hear propaganda like that, go home, flip on the TV and watch two hours of television evangelists. That should cleanse your mind of any leftist drivel, and you'd better keep some Jerry Falwell videos handy in case there's nothing on a channel. I just happen to have a list of books you can burn, if you need room on your shelves." He handed me a pamphlet with a skull and crossbones on the cover.

I leafed through the pages. "Hm, 'Oliver Twist,' 'Catcher in the Rye,' 'Alice in Wonderland,' 'Huckleberry Finn'...this is some pretty dangerous stuff. Just one question: Won't it be kind of tough to do some of my schoolwork if I burn the dictionary?"

He lowered his voice. "You have no idea of the kind of words they put in those filthy references to," he leaned close and whispered, "parts of the body."

"Imagine!" I gasped.

"Look, son, let's get back to the subject. We don't want any flack from the students on this drug testing. I need good kids like you to drum up support on campus. Can you do that, son?"

I slammed my fist on the table, spilling what was left of my fries. "I'll sure give it the old college try!" I quipped. The lobbyist glared impatiently again.

"It won't be easy, though," I continued. "What if they bring up Big Brother? You know, government intervention into individuals' lives. After all, our country was founded on the basis of personal freedoms."

His voice sharpened. "You tell them that good Americans support their government. Besides, we have to be sure our citizens are leading moral lives."

"Well, what if they bring up the Fourth Amendment of the Constitution, which guarantees against any unreasonable search of one's person without probable cause?"

The lobbyist pointed his finger. "Just tell them that if they don't have anything to hide, they've got nothing to worry about."

"Well, OK," I then thanked him for the chat and turned to leave.

"Make sure you buckle your seat belt!" he shouted as I walked out.

I hope that you will be able to understand my friend's reasoning on this pressing issue, because frankly, I had a little trouble following his logic. But isn't it comforting to know that your government is keeping such a close watch on your personal life?

Listen — can you hear it? That's George Orwell whispering, "I told you so."

Landfill dispute

Editor,

The article regarding the closure of the Riley County Landfill, which appeared in the Aug. 24 Collegian and the subsequent editorial on Aug. 26, contained serious factual errors and omissions.

To be sure, a landfill closure notice was sent by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, but this was several weeks after the Riley County Commission had written KDHE informing the department that the commission had made the decision to close the landfill. The details of the closure and the time table established for closing it were worked out by the commission and KDHE.

Twenty-two test wells ring the landfill which have been, and continue to be, closely monitored. In addition, Riley County paid to have every residential well in Moehlman Bottoms tested. Only two homes had wells that indicated contamination and immediately the county commission took steps to see that they received good water. Furthermore, a letter was sent to all residents of Moehlman Bottoms offering to pay $20 a month to assist them in getting good water even though their wells were not contaminated.

Even before the determination was made to close the landfill, the commission initiated development of a water benefit district for Moehlman Bottoms with Manhattan agreeing to sell water to residents. This involved an engineering study and design, and public hearings. Part of the delay in advertising for construction bids was due to the residents' delay in granting easements for the pipes to be laid in ditches on their land. Some owners waited over a month to grant the easements after the request was made. Then, by law, a period of time must elapse after the advertisements for bids are published and bids are opened. The successful bidder was Larson Construction Inc. of Manhattan with a low bid of $40,708 and a completion time estimated at 75 days. Construction will begin right away.

Religion debate

Editor,

I was shocked to read Mike Krueger's column on religion. I feel that it was poor journalism and taste to take cheap shots at "religion" in general, with no regard to faithful, hardworking Christians that don't "delay peace."

There are radical religions and perverted people that do unbelievable acts in the name of God, but there are loving, peaceful and caring Christians too. I hope Krueger meets one someday.

No one is "forced into conformity." Think of religion as a job. You can work hard in this job or take it easy. No matter how hard you work, you will still get paid, like any other job. But remember the wage for sin is death, but a saved Christian is guaranteed everlasting life.

Thousands of Christians give money because they want to. Guilt and preachers with their hands out are not the reasons for giving. I believe that is why the Collegian sells ads. How else can you put out a paper? Then think of the cost of nationwide broadcasting. Have you? Even a columnist should know more about the subject before sitting at the keyboard.

The Bible is a history book, to be sure, but it is filled with prophecy. A libelous article such as yours shouldn't be printed even in the name of the First Amendment.

One more thing. If you are not advocating religion — one that the Bible teaches about death, resurrection, and the coming of Jesus — exactly what do you stand for? Partying, drinking, drugs, premarital sex, atheism? I believe I can do one-half of the research that Krueger has done and cover this editorial page with responsible journalism, even if it is an "opinion."

Product problems

Editor,

In response to the article titled "Dispute continues over products," some significant points were left unsaid that need to be said.

In a letter, Leonard Ewell, director of Kansas Correctional Industries, wrote to Mark Bonjour, assistant director of general services. He stated that the consultant, Larry Patch, reported that Lafene Student Health Center is having good results with KCI floor products. This is a blatant misrepresentation because we are not having excellent results with KCI products on our floors. Our floors were completely refinished last summer with "Thermo-Gloss," a commercial product. Since that time, another commercial product spray buffing program had been employed with excellent results. Those are the "excellent results" that Ewell refers to. Either Ewell misinterpreted the consultant's report or the report is erroneous.

When we applied a coat of KCI wax on top of the excellent floor finish we had, the results were water streaks and pockmarks in the finish. KCI wax spoiled the excellent results we already had, and it had to be scrubbed off.

KCI products are more costly. Not the purchase price, but in labor costs.

The bottom line is that KCI is taking credit for other products and denying that theirs is inferior and costly. Rather than arguing with us, I wish they would produce a product we can use. This argument would end, and we could all get on with the jobs we are paid to do.

Parking blessing

Editor,

Has the long walk from your car to your dorm room got you down? Consider yourself lucky, there are places out there a lot worse.

I spent six years in the Navy before coming here, and three of them were spent in San Diego which houses the largest naval base on the West Coast. At any given time, there are about 30 ships in port, and that number is higher near the holidays. As a rough estimate, those 30 ships hold about 15,000 people. Add the military people working for the base, and the number goes to about 25,000.

About one of 10 people in the Navy are officers, and about one of 10 are senior enlisted, called chief petty officers. The smaller parking lot is split evenly between the officers, CPOs and everyone else. The larger lot is one big free-for-all. So for junior enlisted people, which makes up about 80 percent of the Navy, there are about 175 spaces plus the free-for-all lot to satisfy about 20,000 people.

Believe it or not, this gets worse.

The bigger lot is about one mile from the ships. It is unpaved and has not been smoothed in about 10 years.

So when you walk to or from your car in the winter, even though it won't make the walk any shorter or warmer — remember, it could always be worse.

Smoking areas

Editor,

In reference to the editorial in the Aug. 31 Collegian titled "Union treats smokers unfairly in Stateroom," I will be short and to the point.

On my own "stroll" through the Union's first floor — excluding the Stateroom — I found five designated smoking area signs and one non-smoking area sign which is of all places on the women's restroom door.

Obviously the signs on the entrances to the Union referring to the Kansas law banning smoking in public places mean nothing. I find it extremely difficult to have any sympathy whatsoever for smokers in the Stateroom who have to "strain their eyes to read" when I cannot find a place to sit and study on the first floor of the Union — excluding the Stateroom — without having to "strain my lungs to breathe."

Jardine parking

Editor,

As a resident of Jardine Apartments, I would like to voice my objections to the proposed policy of charging separate fees for parking on campus and at the Jardine Apartments. We are already required to buy campus permits to park in Jardine. Given the circumstances and conditions of the Jardine parking lots, I think it is highly unethical and unnecessary to be asked to buy two different permits. Half the parking spaces at Jardine are just gravel lots and, as such, require very little maintenance. Also, as residents we should be entitled to free parking in Jardine because paying for parking at one's own residence is unheard of.

I also strongly object to the removal of storage parking space in Jardine. In fact, I think both the spouses should be entitled to a parking space, as would be the case for single students living in residence halls where all roommates are entitled to a parking space each.

I hope the Traffic Council will heed our concerns and spare us from paying for two parking permits. Instead, I request the council to have all the Jardine parking spaces paved, allot spaces to each apartment by numbers and also allot two spaces for each apartment.

Church chatter

Editor,

Let us hope that Mike Krueger's column, "Religion Delays Peace," is not indicative of this semester's editorial staff.

Spiritual leaders have built the foundation of civilized society. Consider the teachings of Moses, Buddha, Mohammed and Jesus. Each imparted wisdom which gave rise to rich cultures and relatively harmonious societies. Religion bound the rough sinews of man, enabling our species to grasp for such noble ideas as truth, destiny and free will.

In our own time religion has inspired prophets of peace — Martin Luther King, Mother Teresa and countless others who reformed inadequacies within the status quo.

As for Krueger's suggestion of conformity, I would ask him to consult the yellow pages. Scores of religious affiliations of astounding diversity abound in this and other nations — orthodox, liberal, deist, evangelical. Each with differing ideas and interpretations yet bound by honored traditions of reverence, authority and community.

Krueger also cries that religion hurts pocketbooks. When did it become mandatory to contribute to the church in the United States? People fill the coffers because they want to. Disgusting as the television ministries may seem, the majority of contributions serve to establish churches, schools, hospitals, poverty programs and other items which Krueger thinks we don't need.

As often as humanity has gone to war with a prayer on its lips, the primary motivations for war are far more complex than religious fanaticism. Some fight for political freedom, money, for survival, and others for one's country. More often than not, war is a tool of economic rivalry, cultural antipathy and the sheer quest for power.

Randal Beeman graduate in history

Religion not old

Editor,

Mike Krueger is entitled to hold any ignorant opinions he likes, but if he wants to inflict them on a university community, he should at least get his facts in order.

The most reliable and time-tested religious writings are 2,000 years old. Far more numerous are the religious writings that are less than 100 years old. Worthless books do not survive that long.

The editors of the Collegian could have changed and hidden the true meaning of Krueger's commentary, but I don't think they did because it is unethical and it is too easy to verify. The translators of the Bible are under a similar ethical and practical constraint, and since they sincerely believe they have to answer to a moral God, they are more likely to tend toward intellectual honesty than someone without such ethical absolutes. Anyway, I personally have checked many of the recent translations, and they are accurate and faithful to the original text. Does Krueger read Greek? I do.

While it is true that religious wars have shed a lot of blood, automobiles have killed more people in the last 20 years than all religious wars in history. Yet I don't see Krueger advocating the elimination of that transportation "crutch." Furthermore, the most bloody wars of recorded history were not religious in nature but territorial. Hitler's pogrom against the Jews was racist, not religious. He was equally willing to kill Jewish converts to Christianity and atheist Jews as Orthodox, just so long as they were not of his "Aryan" race.

Sure, Catholics teach their members not to use birth control. That is unlikely to lead to the spread of AIDS because they also teach monogamy, which is the only proven protection against AIDS. One priest in Wichita who is unwilling to practice the teachings of his church does not invalidate the whole moral code successfully practiced by millions of people around the world.

'Footfrat' organization to help team

Charter to unify football players

New K-State football players who don't know anything about Manhattan, the University or the people they will be with on the field will have a new organization to familiarize them with their surroundings.

As part of an effort to unify the team and change the image of its players, Lee Pickett, junior in social sciences, along with several other players, is trying to organize a charter of the National Football Fraternity Organization, or "Footfrat."

Pickett, a fullback and president of the organization, transferred from Northwestern Junior College in Mississippi to K-State in January 1987. He had been introduced to the fraternity there and saw a need for it at K-State.

"The organization started at a school in Tennessee as a way to unify the players," Pickett said. "I think it's a good way for the team to get involved in community service and to get to know each other better."

Steve Hall, sponsor of Footfrat, said, "Many of the players are from out of state and have never seen the other people on the team before. When you're far from home, it can be really hard to adjust."

Hall, who is primarily the academic counselor for the football team, is enthusiastic about prospects for the fraternity's future.

"I plan to get some speakers from the professional community to come to some of our meetings, and I think this will help our players look past their football careers," he said.

One of the speakers Hall is trying to contact is Henry Childs, a former K-Stater who is involved in an organization called Careers After Sports. Childs speaks to athletes across the country about how to manage their money and the realities of an end to their athletic careers.

Hall would like to bring several speakers of this kind to meetings, which are held every Monday. He wants the players to be aware that there is life after football.

"Players, like Tony Jordan, who have a good chance to go professional need to be aware of the kind of people they are going to be dealing with," he said. "There are agents who will try to take a player for everything they can get."

"I'm really pleased the guys trust me enough to ask me to be a part of this. I really have fun with these kids. I like them and I believe in them."

—Steve Hall

"I'm really pleased the guys trust me enough to ask me to be a part of this," Hall said. "I really have fun with these kids. I like them and I believe in them."

Hall said he likes that players can come to him when they need to talk, or have problems. He said this will help him be a good sponsor for the fraternity.

Dewayne Bazel, outside linebacker and junior in social sciences, said the fraternity is looking for several more players to become involved within the next few weeks.

"We have a better opportunity to recruit the players than some of the other fraternities because we see each other all the time," he said. "Our pledging is not much different than the greek organizations."

Two of the requirements of pledging or being "on line" are regular church attendance and a mandatory study table which continues an hour after the rest of the team's 90-minute requirement.

Parrish requires all incoming freshmen and transfer students to attend study table four nights a week.

Bazel, vice-president of the organization, said Footfrat isn't any better than other fraternities, but because the people in it are all members of the team, it will help when they are trying to plan activities.

Pickett said the organization would like to become involved in "any charitable organization or community service that needs our help." He has also discussed going to grade schools to speak to kids about the importance of an education.

Noseguard Mark Young, a junior in mechanical engineering and member of the fraternity, said he thinks the organization is "a great idea, and a good thing for the players to become involved with."

Hall said the fraternity is a good measure in support of Parrish's unification plan, as well as being a good outlet for out-of-state players.

"The organization will be good for all new players, but at least the Kansas kids have an idea about each other," Hall said. "Most of them have played against each other at some point and therefore have something in common. But the kids from Texas, New Jersey or wherever are totally disoriented."

At practice, the young men spend most of their time working with position coaches, and there is rarely a chance for the guys to get to know each other as people, Hall said.

He added that part of Footfrat's plans are to begin changing the general image the community has of football players.

"It's too bad, but some of the players in the past have given the team a bad image," he said. "The majority of the players are really good kids, and for their own self pride, they would like to be known as more than just football players."

He said the team as a whole is "living in a fishbowl" with the media always ready to report the negative. One of the things they try to stress when they are recruiting is the responsibility which goes along with playing for K-State.

"Hopefully Footfrat will help some of our players deal with this responsibility in a way that benefits the entire team," Hall said.

The fraternity has officers, but it has no calendar of events ready for the fall semester. There are 10 members, and fall recruiting won't get underway until after the first game.

Footfrat is not a member of the Interfraternity Council, but is planning on petitioning for membership as soon as it gets organized.

GPA affected by new grade policy

By Corbin Novolny
Collegian Reporter

With the new policy for incomplete grades taking effect this semester, a large number of students could be affected and not be aware of it, said Don Foster, University Registrar.

In the spring semester of 1987, Faculty Senate passed a new incomplete grade policy. It requires all students who receive an incomplete to make up the course work during the next semester in which they are enrolled.

Upon receiving an incomplete, an "I" is recorded on the student's transcript. If the course work is not completed in the next semester that the student is enrolled, the "I" will be changed to an "IX". This is weighted as zero points per credit hour in the student's grade point average. In the past, it didn't effect the overall GPA.

The policy also covers non-credit courses and applies only to incompletes received since the spring of 1987. Independent study courses and research work are exempt from the policy, Foster said.

The previous policy had no specific time limit for a student to make up an incomplete on their transcript. After a review and evaluation of the old policy, and policies at other universities, the Academics Affairs Committee proposed to the Faculty Senate a one-semester time limit for completion of the required work.

The issue was brought to note when faculty advisers started investigating the large number of students receiving incompletes and found only a small portion of the incompletes were being made up.

"It was clearly an abuse," said Albert Davis, associate professor of human development and family studies. Davis said most of the students being granted an incomplete were just trying to get out of taking the class.

Even though the new policy cracks down on the students who abused the old one, it also helps those who are making the effort. Caroline Guiliam, junior in retail floriculture, is one example.

She took a summer internship this summer at a florist in El Dorado. Because she did not complete her "assignment," she received an "I" on her transcript. This semester she has been unable to find a job here in Manhattan to finish the hours that she lacks.

With the new policy, students who receive an "I" during an internship have an indefinite amount of time to find another one to complete the requirements.

A student who is enrolled in a regular course can only remove the "IX" grade by talking to the instructor. It is possible for the instructor to grant a special grade change if the circumstances warrant consideration.

The new grade policy also allows that a "grade of incomplete is given in regular courses upon request of the student for personal emergencies that are verifiable."

Reagan may avoid questioning

By The Associated Press

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — President Reagan's spokesman declined to say on Tuesday whether Reagan would agree to be interviewed if asked by Independent Counsel Lawrence E. Walsh, but said the president has cooperated with Walsh's investigation of the Iran-Contra affair.

Spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, responding to questions about a published report, said no request for an interview has been received and no decision will be made until one is.

In Washington, meanwhile, a source familiar with the case said Walsh is weighing whether to question Reagan orally or to submit written questions.

No decision has been made on how to proceed, said the source, who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

Fitzwater said that when White House officials raised the issue in a meeting last week, lawyers in Walsh's office were "fairly negative on giving us any indication of a request."

"They just said if we are going to, we will let you know," he said.

The president is vacationing at his ranch north of here and will return to Washington Sunday, ending a 25-day California stay.

The spokesman also announced that the president will have lunch at the White House on Sept. 25 with King Juan Carlos and Queen Sophia of Spain and that President Jose Napoleon Duarte of El Salvador will make a state visit to Washington on Oct. 14.

United drops Topeka, six other cities

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — In hopes of improving profits and service to the business flier, United Airlines announced Tuesday a realignment of its flights that will end service to seven cities and expand flights to nine others.

Beginning Oct. 31, the Chicago-based airline plans to discontinue its operations to Topeka, Kan.; Bakersfield, Calif.; Lexington, Ky.; Casper, Wyo.; Wilmington, Del.; Klamath Falls, Ore.; and Islip, N.Y.

Also, nonstop flights will begin Oct. 31 between Chicago and the following cities: Memphis and Knoxville, Tenn.; Little Rock, Ark.; Jackson, Miss.; Sioux City, Iowa; Charleston, W.Va.; Denver; Fargo, N.D.; and Moline, Ill.

"I lost consciousness, when I finally came to my senses, I saw bodies sprawled around me. I saw a torch light (flashlight) 12 hours later and I shouted for help. I was then rescued. I thought I was going to die."

Rescuers placed the injured one by one in a metal chair and hauled them by rope 100 feet from the pumping station up to an elevator, which took them to the surface.

M.B.A. changes to allow specialization

By Lareina Waldorf
Collegian Reporter

Only through change, it has been said, can progress occur.

David Andrus, assistant dean and director of graduate studies for the College of Business Administration, is strongly in favor of the proposed changes in the master of business administration curriculum.

The changes would allow an

M.B.A. student to take more specialized courses than the program does now. The student will be able to take 24 hours of 800 level basic business courses, such as accounting, and nine hours of 900 and above level classes in a selected field of interest.

Currently the student can enroll in straight analytical base, business core, capstone and one graduate elective course.

Because the changes were approved by the faculty this summer, there was no time to implement them for the fall semester. Andrus said he hopes the changes will be in place for the 1988 spring semester.

He said the M.B.A. curriculum was upgraded in order to keep up with the general trends of the other 194 business schools accredited by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business.

"Tremendous job opportunities are available to a student holding any type of M.B.A. degree from any university," Andrus said, "but we want employers to continue to come to K-State first when looking for prospective employees."

"Therefore we feel the need to enhance our program in order to maintain academic quality, especially since the number of students enrolled in K-State's program has dramatically increased from 42 students in the fall of 1984 to 190 students this fall."

To be accepted into the 33-hour M.B.A. curriculum, Andrus said a student must have a 3.00 or higher undergraduate grade point average, or a high score on the Graduate Management Admission test.

He said an anticipated increase in the number of faculty for the program along with the changes in the M.B.A. curriculum will give K-State one of the top M.B.A. programs in the Midwest.

"If several changes in our M.B.A. program can take place in the near future, Kansas will undoubtedly benefit economically," Andrus said. "This change is as important as the state highway renovation or a state lottery."

College receives grant

By The Collegian Staff

The College of Veterinary Medicine has received a $5,000 grant to establish a Veterinary Medical Clinical Nutrition Resource.

Russell Fry, professor of nutritional physiology and clinical nutrition, originated the grant proposal in February to submit to the Merck Company Foundation. The Foundation notified the College of Veterinary Medicine of its proposal acceptance in July.

"The Merck Company Foundation is an arm unit of Merck, Sharp and Dohme Pharmaceutical Company," Fry said. "They set aside a certain amount of profit to support teaching grants for departments of veterinary science and colleges of veterinary medicine, primarily in land-grant universities."

In his proposal, Fry outlined the purpose of the center.

"The purpose of this proposal is to develop a teaching resource to be used in the teaching of clinical nutrition and its interaction with species medicine and management for veterinary medical students..." Fry wrote in his proposal.

Fry said the resource center is to be equipped with slide sets, video tapes and reference material including current nutritional requirement tables.

Currently, Fry will be in charge of the resource center and its reference materials.

"Eventually, we hope to incorporate a residency in clinical nutrition that will be involved with the operation of the clinical resource center," he said.

Fry said the resource center will be located within the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

"We plan to develop a location where veterinary clinical nutrition material will be made available primarily for seniors in their clinical studies," he said.

Fry said the Veterinary Medical Clinical Nutrition Resource is projected to be in operation within a year.

Firefighters battle blazes

By The Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Thousands of firefighters called in from across the nation were deployed Tuesday in the forests of Northern California, battling hundreds of lightning-spawned fires that blackened 68,000 acres and forced evacuations in some mountain communities.

Three rural communities in western Oregon were threatened by fires surging through tinder-dry timber, while firefighters in Idaho slowly gained ground against a range blaze that menaced an affluent neighborhood of Pocatello.

In California, nearly 9,000 firefighters battled major blazes in the Stanislaus, Klamath, Tahoe and Shasta-Trinity national forests and nearly 300 smaller fires, said Mike Milosch of the U.S. Forest Service in Sacramento.

Milosch said firefighters have controlled about 700 other blazes ignited by nearly 5,000 lightning strikes since Saturday.

"But we're probably going to get some more fires, with lightning activity expected to continue for a day or two," Milosch said.

It is the worst onslaught of its kind in California since the lightning-plagued summer of 1977, when a fire in the Los Padres National Forest blackened nearly 200,000 acres, according to fire officials.

The federal and state firefighters employed at least 48 air tankers, 296 fire engines, 31 helicopters, and scores of bulldozers in the latest battle, officials said.

A U.S. Forest Service firefighter, Bruce F. Visser, 34, of Mountain Center, was killed Tuesday when he was hit by a motorcycle near a fire line, said Harley Greiman, a forest service spokesman in the Klamath National Forest.

The unidentified driver was under investigation for felony hit and run, Greiman said.

Montgomery to decide lottery

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Kansas Lottery Director Larry Montgomery will decide whether Kansas enters a multi-state lottery.

The Kansas Lottery Commission adopted a resolution giving Montgomery that authority at a meeting Tuesday night.

Missouri is among other states considering joining the lottery, which could offer larger pay-offs than individual state games. The first multi-state game is being planned for 1988.

Montgomery and other lottery officials attended a multi-state lottery planning meeting earlier in Des Moines.

Sept. 16 is the deadline for applying for membership in the multi-state lottery.

"That's like throwing up a bucket of wheat in the air and hoping it comes down in an area you're interested in," Morris said. "It holds out nothing."

Talkington's and Bogina's plans failed after the Senate voted, 22-18, to strip a list of proposed projects out of the committee's proposal, something the two leaders had proposed.

Sen. Jim Allen, R-Ottawa, said KDOT would be better equipped to handle decisions about where to build or improve roads than the Legislature.

"It's not our cup of tea — it's KDOT's," Allen said. "What do we know as legislators but pork barrels, our own interests?"

However, others argued they could not go home after increasing taxes without being able to tell constituents exactly where the money was going.

"We may hear the laughs from plumb across the border," said Senate Minority Leader Michael Johnston, D-Parsons.

The Senate began its debate by rejecting Hayden's plan as the basis of its discussions. Some senators argued the Senate should have used Hayden's plan as its starting point because it was based on a proposal from the Governor's Highway Task Force which was put together over several months.

The question came up when the Senate was considering whether to adopt the transportation committee's report, usually a routine matter. However, adopting the report put a substitute bill and not Hayden's plan on the floor for debate. The report was approved, 28-9.

Johnston maintained rejection of Hayden's plan would be premature.

"It seemed a bit clear to me and to most of you that the governor's plan was not the basis for serious discussion," Johnston said.

Morris defended the committee's plan and said it wouldn't make much difference whether the Senate started with Hayden's plan or the committee's proposal.

"When you can't do what you like to do, you do what you can do," Morris said.

Memorial Hospital cares for children through Wee Care

By Susan Staggberg
Features Editor

A new program initiated by Memorial Hospital may be a lifesaver for parents with sick children who are unable to go to school or attend their regular daycare center.

The hospital announced Monday its plans for Wee Care, a daycare program designed to meet the needs of working parents with sick children and provide parents with an alternative to staying home from work with their child.

"Wee Care was developed in response to a need in the community," said Mike Nunamaker, administrator. "We set aside an area in pediatrics in hopes to provide a needed service with this program."

Memorial Hospital is utilizing extra space to run Wee Care, and extra staff will be hired to assist the registered nurses in pediatrics.

Parents are asked to call prior to bringing their children into Wee Care to make sure space is available. If needed, an over-the-phone analysis can be made also.

Upon arrival, all children will be evaluated by pediatric nurses and then segregated by illness into separate rooms.

Children will be admitted based on the symptoms they show. Respiratory problems such as fever, cough and runny nose is one category approved by the hospital staff. Others include vomiting and diarrhea. The staff will also be able to accommodate post-operative problems such as a tonsillectomy.

Children with chicken pox cannot be accepted into the daycare due to the risk of spreading the contagious virus.

Wee Care will be having an open house Sept. 18-20 in conjunction with National Child Care Week to give parents a chance to see the facility.

The open house will also enable parents to come and fill out forms prior to their first visit to Wee Care. It is recommended that parents take care of this paperwork ahead of time.

Wee Care is designed to help a child feel more at ease at a hospital.

"A hospital for most people is hostile," said Nunamaker. "With a child, you try to make the environment as non-threatening as possible," he said.

The hours for Wee Care will be from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. They will take children from age 6 weeks to 14 years into the program.

The cost for the service will be $3 an hour with a minimum of four hours a day.

Wide-eyed watermelon

Pat Root, 1, Manhattan, had more than a mouthful of watermelon while feasting at the College of Agriculture's Annual Watermelon Feed Tuesday in front of Waters Hall. "I don't think he is going to leave me any," said Buck Root, Pat's father and a senior in pre-veterinary medicine. "I thought that was a big enough piece for both of us." Buck ended up getting some watermelon. Nearly 150 students and faculty attended the event designed to familiarize students with the college's clubs and organizations.

"I think it's important that foreign policy be bipartisan," said Symms.

From Costa Rica, Kostmayer, who said he was preparing to meet with Costa Rica's President Arias, dismissed Symms' criticism.

"I have the strong impression that there are a number of people in the right wing of the Republican Party who want to sabotage the plan, and Sen. Symms is one of those people," said Kostmayer.

He said all he did Monday was present "a more positive approach" after the meeting started badly.

To make the plan work, the congressman said, "We're going to have to hold the presidents' feet to the fire — both Reagan and Ortega. Both are looking for excuses to make the plan fail."

At their news conference, the five senators made public a letter submitted Monday to Ortega.

It calls for Ortega to release two opposition leaders, Lino Hernandez and Alberto Saborio, whom they said

Ortega ordered arrested "within days after your signature on the Aug. 7 agreement."

Symms said that despite assurances from the Sandinistas that the senators could go anywhere in Nicaragua, they were refused access to Hernandez and Saborio.

Sen. John McCain of Arizona said for the plan to work, "there must be peace with freedom in Nicaragua — not just peace."

McCain and Symms visited Contra military camps in Honduras as part of the tour. McCain said there would be no trouble eliminating the camps, as is required under the peace agreement, if Nicaragua keeps its promise to become more democratic.

Sen. David Karnes of Nebraska said he had visited Nicaraguan refugee camps in Honduras, and said the exiles strongly backed the Contra rebels, as did many in the Nicaraguan countryside.

Sen. Thad Cochran of Mississippi said that despite the senators' doubts, "we're prepared to give the Aug. 7 agreement ... a chance to work."

Veteran struck by munitions train

By The Associated Press

CONCORD, Calif. — A Vietnam veteran kneeling on a track in an effort to stop a munitions train outside the U.S. Naval Weapons Station was critically injured Tuesday when the train struck him as onlookers watched in horror.

S. Brian Willson, 47, of San Rafael, suffered a skull fracture, lost one leg below the knee at the scene and had the other leg amputated below the knee during eight hours of surgery, according to a spokeswoman at John Muir Hospital.

He was listed in critical condition late Tuesday after the surgery.

Dan Tikalsky, a spokesman for the weapons center, said the crew members later were interviewed and that drug tests may be ordered. It was not immediately known if the crew were members of the military.

"We are cooperating fully with the investigation," he said.

Friends of Willson gathered for more than an hour along the tracks Tuesday night, constructing the word "peace" from pebbles between the rails. They also placed two white crosses at the site, bearing the names of people they said had been killed by Contras in Nicaragua.

Endless Pasta-bilities

They're colorful, they're curly, they're positively fun!

Positively pasta. Those curly, colorful salads in salad bars these days have become the rage.

Pasta has taken a new twist and is being paired with more things than tomato sauce.

Teamed with vegetables, meats and herbs, pasta salad is a light, nutritious way to round out a meal. The salads can be made as extravagant or as simple as the cook's imagination will allow.

Seasonal vegetables such as tomatoes and cucumbers make a light and cool salad for a hot summer day, and winter vegetables such as broccoli and cauliflower provide a "winter mix" suitable for a meal by itself. Most, however, are suited for serving year-round.

These salads can be made well in advance of serving and contain hints of cultures and cuisines from around the world. They can be served chilled at room temperature or slightly warmed.

Pasta salads are remarkably adaptable. They can cost a few pennies a serving or, when paired with more expensive ingredients, sufficiently divide the wallet. They can be served as first courses, entrees or side dishes. And they're never out of place, they appear at elegant dinners, large buffets and even family picnics.

Like any salad, fresh ingredients and quality count. Pastas made from semolina or durum wheat flour are the best quality because they hold their shape and texture better than other flour.

The type of oil used to make the dressing should be fresh smelling and tasting, and white vinegar instead of plain vinegar adds an extra snap.

Feel free to use one vegetable in place of another, but keep in mind that the character of the dish may change.

Pasta shapes may be substituted, but keep the shapes similar. Recipes calling for linguine can be substituted with any thin pasta. Shell pasta could also be substituted with wavy or wheel pasta.

Pasta should be cooked al dente — meaning cooked through but still firm to the bite. Start testing packaged pasta after five minutes or so. The meaty pasta reaches the al dente stage, quickly drain it. Most fresh pasta cooks in minutes.

If the pasta is to be mixed with a dressing or sauce, well in advance of serving, reserve a little sauce. Pasta tends to absorb liquid, and you may want to add more dressing just before serving.

Chilling tends to decrease the intensity of some flavors. You may still want to taste a chilled salad just before serving and adjust the seasonings to your taste.

Pasta salads are colorful and sophisticated. Show off their different colors and shapes by presenting them in clear glass bowls. Layer the ingredients to show the detail. Trays and casseroles all make attractive serving pieces for pasta salads.

Pasta alone is full of nutrients. These nutrients come from the durum or macaroni wheat. Durum wheat is a much harder grain than the regular wheat grain used for breads and cereals.

If you follow these guidelines, the most pleasing of pasta salads could be on your table tonight.

PASTA AND HAM PICNIC SALAD

- 8 ounces rigatoni or elbow macaroni
- 1 pound cooked ham steak, julienned into 1 1/2 inch lengths
- 2 red or green sweet peppers, diced
- 1 large red onion, diced
- 10 small sweet pickles, sliced
- 1/2 basket cherry tomatoes, halved
- 2 hard-cooked eggs, chopped
- 2 tablespoons chopped fresh dill

DRESSING

- 1 cup mayonnaise
- 1/4 cups sour cream
- 2 teaspoons dry au jus gravy mix
- 2 tablespoons pickle juice

- 1 tablespoon vinegar
- 1/2 teaspoons salt
- 1/4 teaspoons pepper

- 1-2 garlic cloves, minced

Cook pasta until al dente, drain, rinse with cold water and drain thoroughly. Chill in large bowl.

Mix well all ingredients.

Add ham, peppers, onion, pickles, tomatoes and eggs to pasta. Add dressing and mix thoroughly. Sprinkle chopped dill on top and refrigerate until serving time. Toss before serving.

Serves 6

ROTELLE, MUSHROOMS & BROCCOLI IN A CREAMY TOMATO SAUCE

- 8 ounces rotelle
- 1 pound mushrooms, quartered
- 1 1/2 cups broccoli, coarsely chopped and blanched
- 3 tablespoons olive oil
- 1 cup light cream
- 1 cup canned tomatoes, drained and coarsely chopped
- 1 teaspoon crushed dried oregano
- 1 teaspoon crushed dried basil

- 1/2 teaspoon salt or more to taste
- 1/2 teaspoon freshly ground pepper

Freshly grated Parmesan cheese to flavor

Cook pasta until al dente, drain and toss with 1 tablespoon olive oil.

Heat 3 tablespoons olive oil in a large skillet, add the mushrooms and saute quickly over high heat until golden.

Remove from heat and add cream, tomatoes and seasonings. Mix well and cool to room temperature.

Toss the mushroom, tomato and cream mixture with the pasta.

Add the broccoli just before serving and toss gently again. Taste for seasonings.

Serve at room temperature. Serves 6

Union juice bar to offer healthy drinks

Well, it has been one of those weeks. I wasn't quite sure whether a food page on salads was appropriate since it's getting colder. In fact, it's almost Crock-Pot weather.

I was walking — actually, creeping — through the Union cafeteria the other day when I noticed some large display cases standing outside the turnstiles. I got closer to the cases as the hungry crowd pushed me forward, and I noticed the brownies, fancy cookies and pies. Funny, I didn't remember seeing them before or even think that they were offered to students. I thought they were for President Jen Weiland and others who eat in the Blumont Room.

Looking among the usual pies and "monster cookies" in the cafeteria, I did not see one fancy brownie or decorated cake. I decided to find out what the deal was.

Miller Simon, food service director, was kind enough to explain to me the real purpose behind these delectable desserts other than drying them out in the display cases.

The Union wants to get away from single-service baked goods and to promote prepackaged goods in quantity for the students, Simon said.

One-pound loaves of quick breads such as banana nut are available for students to purchase. Brownies, packaged doughnuts and cookies by the dozen are also available.

In addition, they decorate cakes and have ice cream cakes and pies made to order.

The Union will also prepare hors d'oeuvres and cheese trays for parties. It's a good idea if you need food for a party — the Union is close to home.

Coming soon is the Union juice bar, which will offer blended drinks made to order. The drinks are made with various juices, including papaya and pineapple.

Some of the drinks have combinations of dairy products and juices, while others have protein powders — like Student Power Plus, one of the drinks to be offered, Simon said.

Practical Pointers

Words to live by and hints to remember are back again.

To keep in tune with this week's food page, the first helpful hint will bring limp pasta back to life. Pasta can be re-heated by placing the pasta into a colander and pouring boiling water over it. Pasta will then "spring" back to life.

Greasy, bland french fries were not what you expected when you got your "Fry Daddy" out. Crisp up those fries by dusting them with flour before you dunk them. They'll be crispy and crunchy, not soggy and greasy.

Swing band drummer turns 'Cat counselor

by Chase Clark
Sports Writer

How does someone go from being a drummer for the Glen Miller Band during the sixties to being the academic counselor for the K-State football team?

Well, it wasn't easy but that's exactly what Steve Hall has done. After dropping out of college in the sixties, he went around the country as a drummer for the Glen Miller Band before being drafted into the Army during the Vietnam War.

Hall came out of the Army in 1967 and worked at a brewery in Missouri. Later, he was the Head Start project director in St. Joseph, Mo. for five years before deciding to finish his college degree.

After receiving his bachelor's degree from Missouri Western State College, Hall went to the University of Colorado and got a master's in history. Currently, he is in his second year as the academic counselor for the Wildcats and is still working on his doctorate from the University of Arizona.

K-State isn't entirely new to Hall, though. He was the assistant registrar at K-State before he took his current position with the athletic department — a job that keeps him busy.

"My wife and I kid about it (how much time the job takes up). Last week, I told her I'd see her February 12, after (football recruit) signing day," Hall said. "It varies a lot, but right now we're working weekends and it's very rare if I get out of my office before 6 to 6:30 in the evening."

Being in charge of student athletes, Hall has more to do than a normal student counselor.

"Basically, I'm in charge of their degree status, their enrollment and registration each semester, and I make sure they are in degree bearing courses," he said.

"I also make sure that their graduation checks are done properly, help and assist with the study hall for the student athletes and then lastly, I do

Steve Hall, academic counselor for the Wildcat football team, had seen a variety of careers before moving into his present position. Hall works grade checks periodically throughout the semester to track their progress."

Hall does have someone to help him with counseling. Mike Fisher, who recently joined the athletic department as director of academic services, helps him with the football program while Hall assists him with other sports.

Fisher's help is appreciated by Hall considering the number of athletes they must counsel each year.

"We'll run anywhere from 280 to 300 student athletes a semester, of which football will probably represent between 120 to 130 of those people," Hall said.

Athletes are harder to counsel than other students because of the limited time during the day they can attend classes. Because of this, special considerations are sometimes made for athletes, which give some the untrue view that athletes are special and above other students.

"The stereotype is that the student athletes are treated preferentially and get all kinds of considerations other students don't get," Hall said. "In reality, if you look at their schedule, this isn't true. Their day is very compact. If they have to be at practice by 2:30 in the afternoon, that limits the hours of classes they can have.

"They may start classes at 7:30, they have to be out by 2:30, they go on the practice field from 2:30 to 6," he added. "They are at study table from 7 to 8:30 or 9. There's not a lot of slack time for them and that's probably the biggest difference between a normal student and them."

Hall realizes he can't always help an athlete who is having problems with classes or grades, but he does his best anyway.

"I can't force them to like school and I can't force them to do well, there's no way I can do that," Hall said. "But I constantly work with them."

Perhaps the biggest help to Hall, may be K-State football coach Stan Parrish.

"Coach Parrish is extremely committed to education," Hall said. "K-State is not, at this point, a football factory. It's not an Oklahoma or Nebraska where a kid plays four years and still needs 75 hours to graduate."

"Parrish feels very sincerely for the work that those guys (the athletes) put in."

Parrish to name starter

By Staff and Wire Reports

K-State Coach Stan Parrish says he'll make up his mind today about which player will be the Wildcats' starting quarterback Saturday against Austin Peay State.

Parrish, who had said Monday that he might wait until game time before choosing a starter, announced Tuesday he was near a decision.

Junior transfer Gary Swim, who was the favorite after spring drills, and senior Tim Hanson, who has come on strong the past few weeks, are vying for the starting quarterback job.

Hanson quarterbacked the first-team offense during Tuesday's two-hour practice, when the Wildcats practiced game-like situations.

Earlier in the season, Hanson was impressive in a public intrasquad scrimmage in KSU Stadium, as he completed five of eight passes for 62 yards.

Parrish said although only one of the two can start the game, both Hanson and Swim will see action Saturday.

"We tried to be physical. We tried to keep ourselves sharp," Parrish said.

Sophomore Marcus Miller, listed as a starting right cornerback, missed Tuesday's workout with a shoulder bruise. Parrish said Miller would return Wednesday.

Perennial optimists abound at K-State before grid season

For some reason, K-State football fans are incurable optimists. Season after season, loss after loss, Wildcat fans somehow retain hope, no matter how little promise K-State has shown on the field the year before.

This year is no different. K-State is coming off yet another losing season, their 14th in the last 15 years. Outside the 1982 "dream season" when K-State finished 6-5-1 and lost to Wisconsin in the Independence Bowl, the best record a Wildcat team has had during that span is 4-7.

Still, K-State fans come back for more. Season ticket sales this year are up overall from last year (even though student sales are down) and enthusiasm seems in evidence. I'm just not sure what's getting people so stirred up.

Now, don't get me wrong. I think having a positive outlook and getting excited about the 'Cats is just fine. A K-State fan practically since birth, I even find myself feeling these mysterious surges of optimism from time to time lately.

Maybe being a K-State football fan also requires being an optimist. At least that way, you can enjoy the feeling of excitement before the season instead of taking the safe route and predicting yet another dismal one.

It's a lot more fun dreaming about how great it would be if K-State could somehow find its way back to a bowl game again than it is questioning your common sense for buying a season ticket — especially to watch a team that hasn't won a conference title practically since the beginning of time.

It would seem seeing all those years of losing football would bring me to my senses, but so far it hasn't. I still think K-State has a chance to be a respectable football team this year — not necessarily good, just respectable; say 5-6.

Mid-Week Commentary

TOM PERRIN
Sports Column

For the record, I'm predicting 4-7 (wins over Austin Peay State, Tulsa, Kansas and Iowa State).

Each of the four teams are very, very beatable. Austin Peay is Division I-AA and picked to finish either in the middle or near the bottom of the Ohio Valley Conference. This is a must win.

Tulsa traditionally respectable team, has a new coach and a new offense that players have reportedly had trouble adjusting to this year.

Iowa State is on NCAA probation and very, very low on personnel. As for KU, the Jayhawks were awful last year and could be even worse this year. If they are, Coach Bob Valesente may be in the market for a new job.

The only games K-State will enter with little or no chance of winning are against Iowa, Oklahoma, Nebraska and Colorado. Pulling an upset is one of the team's goals, but beating a traditional power like Iowa or one of the Big Eight's top three will be next to impossible. The Army, Oklahoma State or Missouri games are more realistic targets.

However, in order to have any chance at all at a respectable season, K-State must first look impressive in beating Austin Peay. A look at what happened to K-State after it lost to I-AA Northern Iowa last year provides plenty of indication of how important the Austin Peay game really is.

Volleyball squad to take on UMKC

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Sometimes a team must experience its share of hard times before the good moments begin to develop. The K-State women's volleyball team last year weathered the rough spots; now Coach Scott Nelson said it's time to play alchemist and turn last season's losses into success.

But before evaluating this season's squad — which opens its 1987 campaign at 7:30 tonight in Ahearn Field House against the University of Missouri-Kansas City — Nelson first likes to remember what happened last year.

Injuries to Helen Bundy and Mary Kinsey forced Nelson to field an inexperienced squad which included five freshmen, one junior-college transfer and fifth-year senior Cindy Durham, who spent the previous four seasons playing basketball. The result? A 12-17 overall record, and 2-8 and sixth place in the Big Eight Conference.

"It was a real tough learning experience for us. We struggled just as much with ourselves as we did with our opponents," Nelson said.

"Looking back on it now, from this year's perspective, it's a great experience simply because we have five young players who have a year of collegiate experience under their belts."

Naturally the team has higher expectations, but can it withstand a non-conference schedule that Nelson said was the toughest in his eight-year reign here? Early-season opponents include Top 20 teams Colorado State, Purdue and Arizona.

"So, right off we're going to get a great challenge...just to see how we stack up against those teams," Nelson said.

In the conference race, once again Nebraska will be the team to beat. The Cornhuskers finished No. 2 in the nation last year, but graduated three All-Americans. This doesn't make a difference, Nelson said.

"Even though (Nebraska) graduated some All-Americans, they always seem to have twice as many the next year. I don't look for them to be down, they never are down," he said.

K-State's strength lies in its outside hitting attack with sophomore Lynda Harshbarger, Kinsey and Shawnee Call, the Wildcats' outstanding player last season.

Call, the 5-foot-11 junior from Ellsworth, garnered several honors last year. These included being named to the Midwest all-region team by the Collegiate Volleyball Coaches Association, five all-tournament teams, All-Big Eight first team and being one of two sophomores invited to try out for the United States team that competed in the World University Games in Zagreb, Yugoslavia this summer.

"(Shawnee is) probably our most heralded player right now, with the honors she seems to receive weekly," Nelson said.

Other players to watch include senior middle-blocker Kristi Jacquart — a four-year starter — and seniors Kelley Carlson and a healthy Bundy.

Nelson said the team has no glaring weak spots except for developing quality setters. What concerns him most is the Wildcats' ability to play as a team.

"We've got as talented athletes as there are in the conference and the Midwest...I don't feel like physically we have to hide things, and some years you have to do that...It's just a matter of blending together as a unit," Nelson said.

"That was another tough part of last year. Not only did we have to develop physically, but we were so new together that it was hard to develop a continuity of the team.

"In volleyball that's probably the most significant part of being a successful...team because you can't clear out and go one on one. You can't hand the ball off to your All-American running back and have that person dominate the game," he added.

Lovastatin to help millions

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The federal government on Tuesday authorized the sale of a cholesterol-lowering drug that could help millions of people reduce their risk of heart attacks and strokes.

Lovastatin will be recommended primarily for patients with a genetic condition that makes it virtually impossible for them to control cholesterol by diet and exercise alone.

It will be labeled as intended for use in those patients and, for others, only when diet and exercise alone have not reduced cholesterol sufficiently.

However, now that the drug has been approved by the Food and Drug Administration, it will be up to physicians to decide which of their patients to prescribe it for.

Given the numerous studies that have established a link between high cholesterol and cardiovascular disease — coupled with the millions of Americans with elevated blood cholesterol — the new drug is likely to be prescribed for far more than the estimated 400,000 Americans with the hereditary condition that renders them incapable of controlling the condition with diet and exercise.

FDA approves drug

Indeed, a leading researcher who hailed development of the drug acknowledged that the "greatest risk of misuse" will be patients and physicians who turn to lovastatin prematurely, before being certain that diet and exercise won't work for them.

"Diet will remain the cornerstone of treatment for the majority of patients," added Antonio Gotto, chairman of the Lipid Research Clinic at the Baylor College of Medicine in Texas.

He was joined at a company-sponsored news conference by Michael S. Brown, professor of genetics at the University of Texas Health Center, and Joseph L. Goldstein, of the institution's department of molecular genetics.

Brown and Goldstein shared the 1985 Nobel Prize in Medicine for their research on how cholesterol acts in the body.

Brown complimented researchers at Merck Sharp & Dohme Research Laboratories for "tremendous faith and perseverance" in pushing development of lovastatin, and Goldstein said "everyone in basic science and clinical research is very excited about this drug."

One reason for that excitement, said Goldstein, is that it "acts to stimulate a normal process" and seems to have few serious side effects. "One is capitalizing on a normal bodily process" by which the liver controls cholesterol levels in the body.

Officials of Merck Sharp & Dohme, the U.S. manufacturing and marketing division of the parent Merck & Co., Inc., of West Point, Pa., said the new drug, to be sold under the brand name Mevacor, should be available in pharmacies in two or three weeks.

One tablet, the anticipated daily dose for most patients, will be sold to pharmacies for $1.25 each. The retail cost to patients will depend on how much their drug stores mark it up.

Jonathan A. Tobert, director of Merck Sharp & Dohme's cardiovascular clinical research, said cholesterol levels rise again once the medication is stopped.

"As soon as you stop taking it your (cholesterol) level goes back up," he said. "Normally, you would take it the rest of your life."

Dr. Richard Havel, director of the Cardiovascular Research Institute at the University of California, San Francisco, one of the centers that conducted the first clinical trials of the drug in 1984, said there are still some reservations about the drug's long-term safety.

"We will need more experience with it before we start giving it to all people with high cholesterol levels, who could be taking it for decades," he said.

In its announcement of the approval, the FDA said lovastatin reduced total cholesterol in clinical trials by from 18 percent to 34 percent, depending on dosage, and reduced the particularly dangerous low-density lipoprotein, or LDL cholesterol, by from 19 percent to 39 percent.

Conversely, the agency said levels of so-called "good" cholesterol, high-density lipoproteins, increased by from 3 percent to 13 percent.

Residents deny shunning 3 boys

By The Associated Press

ARCADIA, Fla. — While Louise and Clifford Ray searched for a school where their three AIDS-exposed sons wouldn't be shunned, the little town of Arcadia reeled Tuesday from the sting of publicity "which makes the world think we are heartless."

"We are not heartless. We are not violent," added Danny Tew, head of Citizens Against AIDS in Schools, which led a boycott to protest the boys' enrollment under court order last week in a DeSoto County elementary school.

The enrollment led to threats against the Ray family, and on Friday night, fire gutted their home. Fire officials called it a suspicious blaze.

The Rays haven't decided where to move, but their attorney, Bill Earl, said on NBC-TV's "Today Show" that Dade and Sarasota counties had more "enlightened" school systems.

"We are not in this to fight the Rays," said Tew in an interview following the "Today Show," where he appeared opposite the Rays. "From the beginning we decided if the Rays packed up and left our problem would still be there. We have got to have mandatory testing in our schools to identify all the people with AIDS virus."

Those who test positive for exposure to immune deficiency syndrome should be identified and educated in a controlled environment where they would pose no risk to others, he said.

Tew's group called for a week-long boycott when the Ray boys — Ricky, 10, Robert, 9, and Randy, 8 — returned Aug. 24 to Memorial Elementary School under a federal court order. Only half their classmates showed up.

Angry Jewish leaders meet with pope

By The Associated Press

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy — Jewish leaders on Tuesday told Pope John Paul II of their anger over his audience with Kurt Waldheim, and the Vatican said it would issue a major document on anti-Semitism and the Holocaust.

The Jewish representatives termed their historic meeting with the pope a success, although the pontiff did not directly respond to their anger over his June 25 audience with the Austrian president, alleged to have been involved with deporting Jews during World War II.

The pope also did not respond to the Jews' questions on the Vatican's lack of diplomatic relations with Israel.

The Waldheim issue was taken up in detail in talks between the Jewish delegation and Vatican officials in the past two days.

"This encounter was a historic one in a very positive way," said Henry Siegman of the American Jewish Congress. "It was the first time the head of the Roman Catholic church engaged in genuine conversations with representatives of the Jewish community."

Rabbi Mordecai Waxman, chairman of the International Jewish Committee for Interreligious Consultations, said after the papal audience that the relationship between Jews and the Vatican was raised "to a new plateau."

A joint communique said the Vatican delegation in the meetings Monday and Tuesday defended the audience with Waldheim but acknowledged that the church understood Jewish concerns over the meeting with the Austrian president.

"We agreed where necessary to disagree agreeably," said Rabbi Gilbert Klaperman, part of the nine-member delegation that met with the pope at his summer residence near Rome. "That does not alter the cordial and warm spirit" of the meeting.

The delegations met for 75 minutes in the 17th century papal palace. The representatives, including two wearing yarmulkes, sat in a semicircle around the white-robed pontiff, who greeted them with the traditional Hebrew greeting "Shalom," which means peace. The talks were in English.

The controversy over the pope's meeting with Waldheim had threatened to disrupt the pope's 10-day visit to the United States that begins next week, including a planned boycott in Miami on Sept. 11.

But the Jewish representatives said after Tuesday's meeting that mainstream leaders planned to attend the Miami ceremony and other interfaith gatherings.

"I think the pope will be received well in Miami," said Seymour Reich, president of B'nai B'rith International.

Waldheim, who served as a German army officer in the Balkans in World War II, has been accused of helping to deport Jews to Nazi concentration camps. He denies the allegations.

While the pope did not specifically address the Waldheim issue, Jewish representatives said Vatican Secretary of State Agostino Casaroli had agreed to meet with them on a regular basis to head off similar jolts to Jewish-Catholic relations.

The joint communique also said the Vatican planned to issue an official document on the Holocaust, "the historical background of anti-Semitism and its contemporary manifestations." It will be prepared by Dutch Cardinal Johannes Willebrands, president of the Vatican's Commission for Religious Relations with the Jews after consultations with Jews.

"To us, in a sense, this proposed document by the church is a response to the Waldheim affair," said Klaperman, president of the Synagogue Council of America.

The communique said the pope

"affirmed the importance of the proposed document ... for the church and for the world" and "movingly expressed his deep convictions that, with God's help, evil can be overcome in history, even the awesome evil of the Shoah (Holocaust)."

The Jewish delegation believes the document "will contribute significantly to combatting attempts to revise and to deny the reality of Shoah and to trivialize its religious significance for Christians, Jews and humanity," it said.

Cons don't outweigh pros for arrested man

By The Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — A banker accused of fleeing with more than $200,000 in cash, checks and money orders after writing out the pros and cons of such an act was arrested Tuesday in Georgia, FBI agents said.

David Hale Messer, 29, was arrested in Savannah by federal agents who say they caught up with him after he used his American Express card to rent a car.

The FBI alleges Messer fled Tampa five months ago with the cash and negotiables after weighing his choices, pitting the attractions of parties and island living against "if caught will go to jail."

FBI spokesman Larry Curtin said Messer recently had been living in Savannah under the name of David Hale. When he returned to his apartment early Tuesday, he was met by federal agents and local police, the FBI said.

Agents said Messer was armed but offered no resistance.

According to authorities, investigators discovered $161,130 in cash and nearly $40,000 in checks and money orders missing from a Southeast Bank branch where Messer was manager after he failed to report to work on April 9.

Left in a file folder behind Messer's desk was a hand-written list divided into "pros" and "cons," authorities said.

Among the cons were: "Regret w-no return possibly; money won't last forever; if caught will go to jail."

Among the pros were: "Won't flip out w-wife & kid; life on island; meet many women; party and prevent heart attack."

And beneath, investigators said the following message, written by Messer, was scrawled:

"Dave, let's face the hard facts you are a loser. This guilt & self doubt and vascilating that you are experiencing is all very fatal."

"If you don't take it then you will regret it forever."

Ortega selects critic to oversee panel

By The Associated Press

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — President Daniel Ortega on Tuesday named one of his government's leading critics, Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo, to head a panel that will monitor compliance with the Central American peace plan.

"I have accepted the presidency as a service," said Obando y Bravo, who leads the Roman Catholic Church here.

Sergio Ramirez, vice president of the Sandinista government, will be vice president of the four-member National Reconciliation Commission.

The panel's other two members are Mauricio Diaz, president of the opposition Popular Social Christian Party, and Gustavo Parajon, president of the Evangelical Committee for Development.

Formation of the national commissions is set out in the peace plan the presidents of five Central American countries signed Aug. 7 in Guatemala City.

The panels are to verify compliance with commitments in the plan on amnesty, cease-fires, democratic reforms and free elections.

The State Department said last month the Nicaraguan panel appeared to have been stacked with Sandinista supporters.

Obando y Bravo said the commission will meet Sept. 8, and "should verify if we are taking steps toward reconciliation (and) democratization."

Administration shift limits confusion

Krause named chief student affairs officer

By Ann Iseman
Collegian Reporter

An administration realignment over the summer may provide a beneficial impact for students.

Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, was appointed as the University's chief student-affairs officer. Krause is now in charge of both the Division of Institutional Advancement as well as the Division of Educational and Student Services.

Krause's appointment came about after William Sutton announced his resignation June 10. Sutton, the former vice president of educational and student services, decided to return to the biology department.

"We saw it (Sutton's retirement) as a good opportunity to phase out the position," said President Jon Wefald.

Wefald said the reason for the administration realignment is to offer the students one area of contact from the time they are recruited to the time they become alumni.

The institutional advancement division deals with enrollment, financial aid, career planning and placement, and University relations.

The educational and student services division deals with academic assistance, development and retention programs.

"The new office structure helps with getting people coordinated," said Krause. "Before, people were reporting to different supervisors and then the supervisors had to get together. Now they are merged and everyone reports to the same office."

The divisions are concentrating on student recruitment and retention and the role student services play in that area.

An example of their efforts is the upcoming "K-State Cares" program. College ambassadors will encourage retention by calling all new freshmen and transfer students "Just to see how things are going; to see if anything needs to be done or any questions need to be answered," said Michael Lynch, director of academic assistance.

"We've got all these new students here and now we want to let them know we care."

Several divisions and groups are involved in the program, and Lynch said it's easier now than it was in the past.

"Now the left hand knows what the right hand is doing," he said.

The division heads meet periodically and call each other to make the system flow easier and to eliminate the danger of duplication, he said. This new system also makes it easier for students.

"I want to follow up on the concept of coordinating programs to limit duplication while adding strength," Krause said. "Although it is a little early to tell, it has helped in terms of cross-fertilization of programs dealing with recruitment and retention."

House leaders stress opposition

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Thirty-three Democrats introduced in the House Tuesday a resolution requesting appointment of a special legislative committee to review Kansas' membership in the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact.

"My intention is to debate only matters related to highways. The committee will not meet and the resolution will not be debated. I'm going to make sure it doesn't happen."

—Speaker Jim Braden

Speaker Jim Braden and Rep. Ron Fox, chairman of the House Energy and Natural Resources Committee, said the resolution would not be considered in committee, much less debated by the House during the special session which opened Monday.

Braden said the resolution would be assigned to Fox' committee and it

Waste compact issue lives

won't come back to the House — at least not during the special session. "My intention is to debate only matters related to highways," Braden said. "The committee will not meet and the resolution will not be debated. I'm going to make sure it doesn't happen."

"I don't intend to have the committee meet," Fox said. "Our interim committee has been meeting all summer and has addressed the issue. Where were these people during our meetings? I do not intend to call the standing committee together to reinvent the wheel. We've already considered it."

Kansas Coalition on Nuclear Waste held a rally on the Statehouse steps Monday urging consideration of the low-level radioactive waste disposal issue during the special session. Gov. Mike Hayden spoke to them, saying his administration is on top of the issue and he doesn't want it discussed during the special session. Legislative leaders are supporting the governor in that stand.

Braden said the citizens of Kansas want only highways discussed during the special session, and they want the Legislature to consider that topic quickly and adjourn the special session without taking up a lot of other subjects.

Rep. Kathleen Sebelius, R-Topeka, was chief sponsor of the resolution introduced in the House. Other sponsors included Minority Leader Marvin Barkis. There are 51 Democrats in the House, so all but 18 helped sponsor the resolution.

The resolution asks the Legislative Coordinating Council "to conduct a thorough review of the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact and its rules" with an eye toward recommending legislation to enact stronger environmental protection laws, investigate other waste disposal options with out states and urge Congress to rewrite the federal waste compact law.

That law requires states to have a plan — including a location — for disposal of their low-level wastes by the end of this year.

Residents of north-central Kansas have been most outspoken in criticizing Kansas' membership in the compact, which includes Nebraska, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana, because they fear the five-state regional waste repository is virtually certain to be placed in their area.

"The committee will not meet and the resolution will not be debated. I'm going to make sure it doesn't happen. I don't intend to have the committee meet."

—Rep. Ron Fox

The House met briefly today, then adjourned until 9 a.m. Wednesday when it could begin debate of a highway bill if the Senate completed action on a measure by tonight.

Both political parties held House caucuses ahead of today's session, but took no votes and no positions. Both scheduled caucuses again Wednesday morning.

Campus center gives study aid

By The Collegian Staff

For students who need help with study habits, there is an outlet on campus that provides such assistance.

The Academic Assistance Center, located on the second floor of Holton Hall, offers a variety of programs to help students having trouble with classes.

"The programs offered help students be the best they can possibly be," said Mike Lynch, director of the academic assistance center and vice president of institutional advancement.

The center's programs offer a variety of help methods, including study skills classes, which are basically for first-semester freshmen. Lynch said the skills students learn in these classes will help them with their other courses.

The center can also help students select classes.

"By looking at past test scores, we are able to place students in the classes they are able to handle," Lynch said.

This allows the center to monitor the progress of the student in those specific classes selected for them.

After students have been placed in their chosen courses, the center will offer a study skills lab that will teach students better test-taking methods and time-management skills. If a student is still in need of extra help, the center offers instructor-to-student supplemental help sessions to assist students with problems in a specific course.

These programs are convenient for students of all classifications, Lynch said. He said about 400 students a year are assisted through the programs.

The center is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Labor Department orders reduced benzene levels

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Labor Department on Tuesday ordered a 90 percent reduction in occupational exposure to benzene, culminating a bitter decade-long legal battle over how to reduce leukemia deaths among some 240,000 workers who breathe its fumes.

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration said industries will be given five months to reduce on-the-job exposure to benzene from the currently allowed 10 parts per million parts of air to a one part-per-million average over an eight-hour workday.

Assistant Labor Secretary and OSHA Administrator John Pendergrass said the lower limits are expected to prevent at least 326 deaths from leukemia among workers whose jobs expose them to benzene over a working lifetime of 45 years.

"It has been proven beyond doubt that benzene poses a significant risk of leukemia and other blood diseases to those exposed," Pendergrass said.

OSHA tried to impose the lower limits through emergency regulations in 1977. However, in a suit brought by the American Petroleum Institute, a federal appeals court vacated the standards a year later because the agency had not first done a cost-benefit analysis to demonstrate the need. The Supreme Court in 1980 upheld the appeals court's action.

Margaret Seminario, deputy director of occupational safety and health for the AFL-CIO, said the agency's action Tuesday was long overdue. "Obviously, we're pleased," Seminario said.

"It has been proven beyond doubt that benzene poses a significant risk of leukemia and other blood diseases to those exposed."

—John Pendergrass

Several unions had petitioned the U.S. Court of Appeals here in late 1984 for an order directing OSHA to adopt the new standards on an expedited basis. The court rejected the petition 14 months later. But OSHA in the interim had taken steps in a lengthy process to adopt the regulations.

A clear, colorless, highly flammable liquid, benzene is used widely as a solvent and in the chemical, printing, rubber and petroleum industries. It also is a major ingredient in many paints, varnishes, stain removers, rubber cements and other adhesives.

About 95 of every 1,000 workers who face daily exposure to benzene on the job are likely to develop leukemia under the current standards, according to OSHA estimates.

A study released in April by the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health showed that workers exposed to the currently allowed limits are 154 times more likely to get leukemia than someone who was never exposed.

Even at the reduced levels of permissible exposure ordered Tuesday by OSHA, the leukemia risks to affected workers remain 70 percent greater than to those unexposed, according to the NIOSH study.

Pendergrass said the tenfold reduction in the maximum exposure limits should reduce the risks of job-related leukemia deaths to 10 in every 1,000 workers.

In addition, the new regulations impose a short-term exposure limit of five parts per million over a 15-minute period.

The agency estimated that it will cost employers about $24 million a year to meet the new exposure limits covering 240,000 workers.

Student disorder welcomes opening of Seoul universities

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — Universities reopened for the fall term Tuesday and immediately became battlegrounds for police and anti-government students. One campus fight with rocks, firebombs and tear gas lasted three hours.

As students demanded the ouster of President Chun Doo-hwan, leaders of the government party and the opposition worked on a timetable for a presidential election and peaceful transition when Chun's term ends in February.

Labor unrest that began in July continued to cripple the export-based economy, and hundreds of strikes for higher pay were in progress Tuesday. Prime Minister Kim Chung-yul said workers had been short-changed in South Korea's economic boom and the government would seek greater benefits for them.

South Korea's trade surplus in August was only one-quarter of the total for August 1986, the government reported.

Fighting between protesters and riot squads began on the huge Seoul National University campus after a rally by 4,000 students. Police fired tear gas and charged behind shields during the three-hour battle.

Students hurled stones and threw firebombs that exploded in orange showers of blazing gasoline, shouting "Let's finish the military dictatorship!" and "Down with the murder regime!"

The South Korean news agency Yonhap said about 10,000 students in all demonstrated at 19 other schools across the country. It did not say whether those protests were violent.

Radical student leaders have vowed to topple Chun's government and the size of the Seoul National University rally indicated strong support.

Students traditionally are in the vanguard of protest in South Korea. They led weeks of demonstrations that caused Chun to agree June 30 to opposition demands for direct presidential elections and other democratic reforms.

Another change promised was less government control of unions.

Within days, workers in transport, mining and the major export industries began striking for higher pay, better working conditions and free unions.

Successive governments have cooperated with business since South Korea's "economic miracle" began nearly two decades ago, virtually banning strikes and keeping wages low.

The leadership meeting Wednesday was the first between Roh Tae-woo, chief of the government Democratic Justice Party, and Kim Young-sam, of the main opposition Reunification Democratic Party, since Chun made his concessions.

They had planned the meeting for Monday, but Kim postponed it, demanding progress on demands for release of all political prisoners still in detention. Opposition party officials said discussions were held on the issue.

More than 10,000 Seoul taxi drivers struck on Tuesday. City officials said the action involved 26 percent of the capital's drivers and disruption was minimal since most people use buses or the subway.

Labor leaders at Hyundai Heavy Industries Co. in the southern port of Ulsan, the country's largest shipbuilding yard, ordered a slowdown by the 24,000 workers after wage negotiations.

House committee halts highway plan

Senate debates bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — While other representatives took Tuesday afternoon off, the House Transportation Committee put the brakes on parts of the bill that would accelerate Gov. Mike Hayden's ambitious highway plan.

The committee has focused on sections of the bill that broaden the transportation secretary's powers and cut red tape to put construction projects on the fast track for the next eight years.

The House panel has worked for two days on a bill that would enact the governor's program, while it waited for the Senate to debate and act on its proposal.

At a Republican caucus Tuesday, House Speaker James Braden, R-Clay Center, called those sections "major policy questions."

"I want to support expediting the process," said Rep. Rex Crowell, R-Longton, who is chairman of the House Transportation Committee. But he added that some of those measures seem to do nothing to accelerate highway construction.

"I don't think we appreciably slowed anything down in terms of building," Crowell said of the committee's work on the bill.

Frustration with the uncertainty surrounding the special session, the first in 21 years, surfaced at the committee meeting.

Rep. Herman Dillon, D-Kansas City, said the committee was wasting its time discussing a bill that was still in the Senate.

Crowell insisted the committee examine the "governance" aspects of Hayden's bill because they will be included in whatever version the Senate passed. The Senate spent the entire day debating its own highway bill while the House adjourned in late morning.

"Do you have the feeling that we might not get a Senate bill?" Dillon asked.

"I think that is entirely possible," Crowell replied.

"Then we ought to be working on our own bill," Dillon said.

KDOT officials came back to the committee to correct misinformation presented in earlier testimony regarding the proposed elimination of competitive bidding for professional services.

Mike Lackey, state transportation engineer, told committee members KDOT does not use competitive bidding for hiring professional services, but uses what he called "a negotiating process."

For clarification, the bill containing the governor's plan included language about eliminating competitive bidding for those services, he said. "Our interest is to get the process under control of the (transportation) secretary," Lackey said.

Committee members also balked at a section of the bill that would allow the secretary to authorize purchasing supplies needed for the governor's expedited highway program, rather than make those purchases through normal channels at the Department of Administration. KDOT officials said routine channels are time-consuming and can delay a project.

"We're talking about an expedited program," said John Scheirman, KDOT staff attorney. "That normal pace may not be adequate to deal with the volume of transactions."

Rep. Vince Snowbarger, R-Olathe, wondered if KDOT and the Department of Administration simply could not learn to get along. He added that the governor's accelerated program, to which this bill pertained, included all of KDOT's operations for the next eight years.

"When you start circumventing what is already in place because of an expedited program, you're opening yourself up to controversy," said

Rep. Delbert Gross, D-Hays.

Committee members indicated they would listen to additional arguments from KDOT officials, however, if a ceiling on the amount of money the transportation secretary can spend outside normal purchasing channels is included in the bill.

The committee earlier in the day decided not to repeal the Highway Advisory Commission, which would have been abolished in the governor's bill. The 12-member commission has veto power over decisions made by the transportation secretary but a veto requires a three-fourths vote.

At 12:01 a.m. on a Sunday morning in October 1986, a camera shutter was clicked. What happened during the next 192 hours was called AWAKS (A Week at Kansas State).

Former Kansas State University photographers were given the opportunity to return to campus to make pictures of college life in the '80s as it existed for one week during October.

Kansas State has numerous alumni photographers in positions of prominence throughout the country. Some 30 alumni and nearly 15 current student photographers made up the AWAKS shooting team. The result of exposing 1,900 rolls of black-and-white and color film with more than 68,000 exposures is a 10-by-14-inch coffee-table book to be published in September 1987. You can relive the experience of attending college in the 1980s at the nation's first land-grant institution through the pages of this special edition.

U.S. troops arrive

Shots fired during trip through gulf

By The Associated Press

MANAMA, Bahrain—Rockets fired by an Iranian speedboat started a fire on a Spanish supertanker Tuesday, and Iraq said its planes hit four ships and Iranian industrial targets. Iran claimed it shot down three raiding aircraft.

A convoy of U.S. Navy warships and two reflagged Kuwaiti tankers arrived safely in the emirate's waters. Kuwait and Iraq, which has been at war with Iran since September 1980, are neighbors at the head of the Persian Gulf.

The ships started up the gulf Saturday, the day after raids were renewed in the waterway after a six-week lull. The only incident reported during the 550-mile trip was the rescue of a downed Iraqi pilot.

Iraq reported air raids Tuesday on four ships in the gulf and five industrial and oil targets in its air war on Iran's economy.

Iraq reported retaliatory raids on military and industrial targets in Iraq.

In Washington, the State Department said the U.N. Security Council should draft sanctions unless Iran agrees to a cease-fire by the end of the week.

Soviet officials urged that diplomacy be given more time. "Soviet-American cooperation is not only possible, it is necessary these days," said Vladimir Petrovsky, a deputy foreign minister.

Dispatches from Iran's news agency quoted Prime Minister Hussein Musavi as saying Iran would make its position clear soon on the Security Council truce resolution of July 20. Iraq has agreed to observe the resolution if Iran does.

Radio monitors said the 300,078-ton Spanish supertanker Munguia sent a distress signal when attacked by one or two Iranian speedboats 55 miles northeast of Bahrain, an island emirate in the central gulf.

Later reports said at least two shoulder-fired rockets hit the ship, causing no casualties among the 37 crew members but starting a fire in the engine room.

Crewmen put out the fire and the tanker continued down the gulf loaded with 2.1 million barrels of Saudi crude oil, according to the radio reports and Spanish officials.

It was the second report in two days of an attack on a ship by Iranian speedboats in apparent retaliation for Iraq's renewed air raids.

Gunfire from a speedboat raked a Kuwaiti container ship early Monday off the United Arab Emirates in the southern gulf. No casualties were reported.

The convoy's arrival at Kuwait was reported by sources close to the Kuwait Oil Tanker Co., owners of the 81,283-ton Surf City and 79,999-ton Chesapeake City. They are among 11 tankers given U.S. registration so the Navy can protect them.

It was the fourth northbound convoy and the sixth overall since the operation began July 21. The American warships were expected to start south almost immediately with three Kuwaiti tankers that have been loaded and waiting.

Officials imprison man for eating 'seedy' bagel

By The Associated Press

HARTFORD, Conn. — A federal inmate was removed from a halfway house and returned to prison to complete his sentence, all because he ate a poppy seed bagel.

It seems Anthony Clarizio's gastronomic gaffe violated a new U.S. Bureau of Prison policy written because the seeds alter drug test results.

Medical experts say the effect of poppy seeds on urinalysis tests is well known and legal experts say the government has a right to test inmates for drugs, but some civil libertarians argue the policy is arbitrary and unfair.

Public Defender Richard Reeve said Clarizio, who lives in Stratford, was released to a Hartford halfway house about four months ago to complete his sentence for loan-sharking and extortion. Clarizio, who pleaded guilty to the charges two years ago, is scheduled to be released Oct. 1.

Reeve said Clarizio and a friend ate bagels taken to the friend's house in Stratford by a neighbor Aug. 9. The bagel contained poppy seeds, according to the manufacturer.

When Clarizio returned to the halfway house and routinely gave a urine sample, he told house officials there could be a problem because he may have eaten some poppy seeds, Reeve said Tuesday.

Nevertheless, Clarizio, who is in his 50s, was sent back to federal prison in Danbury on Aug. 24, five days after failing a urine test, to complete his sentence.

"I think it's an absurd rule and it smacks of the grave dangers of falsely imprisoning somebody," William Olds, executive director of the Connecticut Civil Liberties Union, said Tuesday. "It's not always possible for somebody to know they were eating poppy seeds."

Pyung Yoon, of Yale University medical school's department of toxicology, said urine tests cannot distinguish between exposure to poppy seeds and exposure to heroin or other illegal drugs made from the poppy plant.

"Generally, drug test policies take that into account and ask a person whether they've eaten something of that nature," said Allan Adler, legislative counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union in Washington, D.C. "If so, then the drug test is put off until that's out of the person's system. It (Bureau of Prisons policy) seems to be manifestly unfair."

But Robert Hassen, spokesman for the Danbury prison, said all prisoners allowed to complete their terms in halfway houses sign a statement promising not to consume poppy seeds.

"He's got to go over it with his correctional counselor," Hassen said. "I would find it hard to believe that any one would not read his furlough release."

The policy was put into effect at all federal halfway houses in March because "inmates started using it as a way out of positive drug tests, saying 'Hey, we just ate poppy seeds,'" said Kathy Morse, spokeswoman for the bureau in Washington.

There were 8,773 inmates transferred to halfway houses in fiscal 1986, Morse said.

"There's nothing illegal about eating a poppy seed," Morse said. "But poppy seeds trigger the exact same test results as an illicit drug. We can't start accusing people of using drugs when in fact they've taken poppy seeds."

"The poppy seed violation, obviously that's less serious than someone using heroin," she said. "Either way it's a violation of their condition."

Reeve asked U.S. District Judge Ellen B. Burns in New Haven on Monday for a reduction in Clarizio's sentence. Burns said she planned to rule soon.

John Durham of the U.S. attorney's office said Clarizio should appeal the halfway house's decision instead of seeking a reduction in sentence.

Also, Durham said, Clarizio doesn't have a constitutional right to serve a portion of his sentence in a halfway house and he shouldn't be rewarded for violating rules.

Report shows lack of security at Johnson County Courthouse

By The Associated Press

OLATHE — Security problems at the Johnson County Courthouse threaten the safety of people and sensitive records, according to a state report.

The confidential report recommended more than 80 changes in procedures and buildings, according to The Kansas City Star, which obtained the report this week.

"We don't have any security," District Judge Janice Russell said. "We rely upon people behaving in a law-abiding manner. If anyone chose not to, we probably could do nothing."

But some county and court officials say the problems are not severe, and several have been or will be corrected soon.

Administrative Judge Herbert W. Walton said the report did not alarm him.

"There's no aspect of security that doesn't concern me, but I didn't think there was anything of a life-and-death matter in it," he said.

The report was prepared last winter by the Office of Judicial Administration in Topeka. It analyzed security at the Olathe courthouse, the archives building at the Industrial Airport, and the Family and Youth Services Building in Olathe. Problems cited ranged from cannister ashtrays that could be used to conceal weapons to unlimited public access to court offices.

Some other problems cited include not having a system to control keys issued to employees, poor exterior lighting and bulletproof glass in the courthouse that may have been installed incorrectly.

In the past five years, the report said, incidents at the courthouse included an attack on a lawyer, assaults on spectators and participants in court cases, a bomb in the courthouse and attempted escapes.

NBC leads in ratings

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A sitcom with an uncertain future helped NBC to another weekly win in the A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings last week.

"The Art of Being Nick," starring Scott Valentine in a show spun off from "Family Ties," was the week's

No. 2 show, behind "The Cosby Show," which preceded it on Thursday night.

NBC's average rating for the week was 12.0, followed by CBS and ABC in a tie at 11.1. For the 49 weeks of the season to date, NBC's average is 16.0, CBS is second at 14.0 and ABC averaged 12.6.

The evening news competition was a virtual dead heat, with NBC the winner at 10.0, followed by ABC at 9.9 and CBS at 9.8. A week earlier, NBC had beaten ABC by a full point and CBS by 1.1.

Each rating point represents one percent of the nation's 87.4 million homes with television sets.

"The Art of Being Nick" was not picked up for NBC's fall schedule, but it might find a place as a replacement series. Meanwhile, Valentine will do at least 15 shows on "Family Ties" this year, playing the doltish boyfriend of Mallory Keaton.

The rest of the week's top 10 included "Cheers" and "Night Court" from NBC.

Statement of Faith:

We believe the Bible to be the inspired, the only infallible, authoritative Word of God.

We believe there is one almighty, perfect and true God: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, eternally coexistent personalities of the same essence.

We believe in the deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, in His virgin birth, His sinless life, His substitutionary death, His bodily resurrection, His ascension to the right hand of the Father and His personal return in power and glory.

We believe in the personality of the Holy Spirit, and in His ministry of convicting and regenerating sinful men, and indwelling, sealing and empowering believers.

We believe in the fall of man from the state of innocence in which he was created to one of total depravity in which he is devoid of spiritual life, and incapable, apart from divine power, of pleasing God.

We believe in the justification of the sinner by grace through faith alone.

We believe that the church universal is composed of all true believers and that its members should assemble themselves together in local churches for worship, prayer, fellowship and teaching with a view to being equipped to fulfill the Great Commission.

We believe in the bodily resurrection of the saved to immortality, and in the conscious eternal suffering of the lost.

New Englanders see raises

Workers earn 5 percent more over '86

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Workers in New England, New York and New Jersey got the largest raises last year, averaging well above 5 percent, but Alaskans continue to enjoy the biggest paychecks despite a slight decline in their average earnings, the government said Tuesday.

The average annual pay of workers covered by state and federal unemployment insurance programs was $19,996 in 1986, a $777 or 4 percent increase over 1985 and well ahead of an inflation rate of just 1.1 percent last year, the Labor Department said.

Massachusetts and New Hampshire, with unemployment rates running well below 3 percent, led the nation in pay increases last year, with workers there reaping average raises of 6.6 percent and 6.4 percent respectively.

Workers in Connecticut followed with annual pay increases averaging 6.1 percent. Other states where pay raises averaged more than 5 percent were New York, Maine, New Jersey, Vermont and Rhode Island.

The smallest pay increases were concentrated in Appalachia, the Oil Belt and the West, excluding California and Arizona.

Yearly wage gains averaged less than 3 percent in Ohio, Indiana, West Virginia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, North Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho and Oregon.

The average annual pay for Kansas workers in 1986 was $17,934, up 3.5 percent from the previous year.

Alaskans actually took a pay cut of about 1 percent. But they still led the country with the highest annual wages, averaging $28,442 in 1986.

In fact, the best thing to be — if you survived massive layoffs in the oil and mining industries last year — was an employed oil worker in Alaska. Their wages last year averaged $63,735, a 7.9 percent increase over 1985.

Workers in Washington, D.C., followed with the second highest wages, averaging $27,137, a 3.7 percent increase over the previous year. The average wages for government workers in Washington was $31,011, a 1.4 percent increase over 1985.

Other states with annual wages averaging more than $20,000 in 1986 were New York, Michigan, Connecticut, New Jersey, California, Illinois, Maryland and, for the first time, Massachusetts and Colorado.

South Dakota and Mississippi continued to lead the nation's list of states with the lowest average wages, $14,477 and $15,420, respectively. Other states with annual wages averaging less than $17,000 in 1986 were North Dakota, Montana, Nebraska, Arkansas, Maine, Iowa, South Carolina, Idaho and Vermont.

The survey by the Bureau of Labor Statistics is based on payroll data submitted by employers in paying unemployment insurance taxes and covers 98.2 million workers — both full- and part-time — or 90 percent of the total U.S. civilian employment.

Excluded were agriculture workers on small farms, elected officials, domestic workers, most railroad employees, student workers at schools.

Missouri resident raises herd of bull elk for profit

By The Associated Press

BUCKLIN, Mo. — Rush Johnson tends to chores and fence-mending a little differently than his north-central Missouri farming neighbors.

But then, nobody else at Bucklin has about 200 elk grazing in his pastures.

No traditional cattle are lowing in the lane for the 61-year-old farmer and businessman. Instead, it's bull elk bugling in the sudex grass at his farm, about 130 miles north-east of Kansas City.

"I hunted them for nine years, and I learned to respect the animal," Johnson said. "It started off as a hobby just because I admired the animal. As I went along, I could see there was money in it, big money, better than cattle and horses. So I started building my herd."

Since he and his wife, Inez, started raising elk 14 years ago, motorists have been slowing down at the intersection of U.S. 36 and Missouri 129 to watch the animals graze.

There's King Edward, a regal elk bull that is tending a harem of 15 elk cows in a special pasture. He's royalty because of his big antlers with eight tines, or points, on each side. As Johnson eyes the brown calves loping across the pasture with delicate grace, he hopes King Edward has sired a son of equal stature.

"You might go your whole life and not see another elk like him," Johnson said.

During the fall mating season, Johnson said, a sometimes-comic bugling sound is heard, as westward-bound hunters stop to compare their version of the elk's territorial fighting call with the real thing.

Elk roamed the prairies and woodlands of Missouri when the state was wilderness. Johnson has returned them to 400 acres of their native range, all surrounded by fence 7½ feet tall.

"That's the main drawback to elk," he said. "It's double the cost of normal fence....about $4,000 a mile, plus labor."

But the herd of 35 bulls and 170 or so cows and calves turns a high profit and is a buffer against low grain and cattle prices, Johnson said.

Most of his sales are calves, which bring $1,000 apiece. Cows go for about $2,000, and mature bulls are $3,500 and up, depending on their antler size.

"They eat half as much as cows, and they're almost disease free," Johnson said. "I don't have to worry about predators," he said. "The elk cows kill everything that gets in there with their front feet."

Who buys elk?

About half his calf crop goes to people raising them for a hobby, Johnson said.

"You can't believe the people that buy them," he said, "just to go out in their back yard and look at them."

"I've sold elk to growers in all the states, including Alaska and a ranch in Hawaii," Johnson said. "Two years ago a church in Madrid, Spain, bought 10 elk for a parishioner who contributed heavily."

Parks, zoos and shooting preserves also buy elk, he said.

But the demand for elk antlers as an aphrodisiac is what keeps the price of domestic elk high, Johnson said. When a bull elk's antlers still are growing and full of blood, they're covered with a soft, hair-like outer membrane and are said to be "in velvet."

Oriental cultures consider antlers taken in velvet a potent aphrodisiac, Johnson said, and ranchers can sell the cut and frozen horns for $40 to $50 a pound. The elk produces antlers every year.

Elk scrape the velvet membrane from the mature antlers in the fall and shed the rack in the spring.

Those antlers are worth $12 a pound, Johnson said, and some of the buyers are craftsmen who use them for items like belt buckles and knife handles.

"I have worked with genetics in elk," Johnson said, "trying to breed up so they produce good antlers. I run a cow-calf operation, just like a regular purebred cattle farm."

Johnson doesn't sell velvet antlers from his elk because he can't bear to cut the racks off. And when the large antlers fall off in the spring, he picks them up and uses them as proof of his herd's healthy gene pool.

Aside from keeping tall fences, raising elk isn't much different from handling cattle, Johnson said. But he does have to sedate bulls when it's time for veterinary chores.

He feeds the elk corn every day to keep them looking good and to keep an eye on them.

They graze on most native grasses but won't tolerate fescue. Johnson pastures most of the herd in tall, cane-like sudex grass during the summer because it provides shade and a way to scrape off flies.

"I can walk among the elk and they won't run through the fences," he said. But during the fall mating season when the bulls are fighting over cows, "I use an automatic feeder and don't get out because they'll ram the truck."

Some elk are tamer than others, such as Lucky, a calf a few months old. Each morning and evening the Johnsons bottle-feed the calf. The mother rejected it after Johnson had to assist in the birth.

But the man with elkskin boots, elk antler belt buckle, elk mailbox and auto license plates that say "ELK" doesn't mind his daily rounds.

"I never get tired of looking at them," Johnson said. "They're more fascinating now than when I started."

Students experience college with Upward Bound program

By Jill Conger
Collegian Reporter

Each year 65 high school students from four local high schools have the chance to experience college life through K-State's Upward Bound program.

The Upward Bound program is a college preparatory program for ninth through 12th-graders from Junction City, Manhattan, St. George and Westmoreland high schools.

Upward Bound originated in 1965 and is funded through the U.S. Department of Education. K-State began its program in 1972.

High-school recruits for the program are chosen on an economic and educational need.

"This program wants to develop a first-generation college graduate from the family which the student belongs to," said Charlotte Olsen, director of K-State's program since 1982.

The program runs year-round. During the academic year, the recruits receive intensive tutoring, counseling, career exploration and social/cultural activities.

"We want to expose the students to activities they would not normally participate in, like the Renaissance Festival held each year in Kansas City," Olsen said.

Summer offers a different opportunity for students. The recruits live in the residence halls for six weeks while attending sessions and receiving one-half credit for their course work.

"The four credit classes, like math and language arts, take place in the morning," Olsen said, "while afternoon activities include non-credit developmental skills, like a creative dance class or a yearbook class."

The recruits also spend two days at the Capitol building in Topeka. The event takes place two weeks into the summer session. Two hundred students from Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri come together to form a simulated congress.

An overnight camping trip takes place during the final two weeks of the summer session. The recruits experience the outdoors at the Homestead Ranch located in the Flint Hills.

Barge's voyage ends after 6,000 miles

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The first bales of the nation's best-known garbage were unloaded and burned Tuesday after being barged 6,000 miles, rejected by six states and three nations, challenged in court and lampooned on TV.

"Good riddance," said city Sanitation Commissioner Brendan Sexton at his agency's Southwest Brooklyn Incinerator.

Bulldozers broke up the bales and a half-dozen environmental workers in white suits and masks probed the debris with pitchforks before it was burned.

It was the beginning of the end of the five-month garbage barge saga. Incineration of the 3,186 tons of trash

Garbage returns to original dump

is expected to take a couple of weeks, and the ashes are to be trucked off for burial at the Long Island town of Islip's landfill.

The load of commercial trash from Islip, New York City and Nassau County began traveling after it was turned away from that very same landfill for lack of space.

While it provided fodder for comedians and news reports, the garbage may have had a more lasting legacy: Some officials said the worldwide exposure helped convince the public that garbage disposal is a growing problem.

"We used it every chance we could to say there is a garbage crisis," Sexton said.

ton said. "You can't wish it away. You can't demonstrate it away. This helps people visualize that there's no where else to put the garbage."

The barge began its journey March 22 from a private dock in Queens.

Lowell Harrelson of Bay Minette, Ala., planned to unload it at a garbage-to-methane gas operation in North Carolina, hoping to show it was cheaper to move garbage over water than land.

"A few people got together and thought they found a magical way to make a fortune," Sexton said.

But it was turned away from the North Carolina landfill for lack of proper permits.

That began a 6,000-mile trip, gathering angry rejections from Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Florida, Mexico, Belize and the Bahamas as public officials feared it contained hazardous waste.

The 230-foot-long barge returned May 16 to New York, where it remained while environmental groups challenged disposal of its cargo in courts, alleging the trash contained hazardous or infectious waste.

But as the first 30 bales were taken from the barge Tuesday, inspectors could find only an empty tar can that was set aside so its contents could be checked.

Compared to bales of smelly anything."

Gubbi Murthy, senior engineer from the state Department of Environmental Conservation, said the barge waste did not have a foul odor because anything that would have degraded would have done so long ago.

Sexton said those responsible for the barging venture would be forced to pay the $180,000 final disposal cost.

Optimistic states' officials submit proposals for 'supercollider' site

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Flush with optimism, state officials on Tuesday rushed in their proposals to the federal government to land the "supercollider," a $4.4 billion atom smasher that will mean 3,000 jobs for the winner.

To hear them talk, all the two dozen competitors were bound to win.

Some states made a big production out of it, either in Washington or at home. Others said little and kept details secret until after the 2 p.m. Wednesday deadline for getting proposals to the Energy Department.

A dozen Texas officials held the first news conference of the day's several at the department and elsewhere after delivering 60 cardboard cartons of documents in a station wagon and a rented van.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, gave one reason for secrecy — keeping competitors from matching an attractive inducement.

His state plans a $200 million joint venture with utilities to supply electricity at an unmatched 1 cent per kilowatt-hour or less, he said. "It's too late" for other states to beat that, he said, although several are stressing their low power costs.

Congress banned consideration of direct financial incentives to prevent states from getting into a bidding war, but did permit states to contribute to site improvements with roads, sewers and other work. States that want to offer more were asked to submit details in a sealed envelope to be opened only if they won, and several were doing so.

For Texas, site improvements could add up to $700 million, Gramm said.

Texas officials' optimism was echoed by their competitors from one end of the country to the other.

—New York Lt. Gov. Stanley Lundine told reporters in New York his state's three sites were "technically sound, financially superior and politically attractive."

—Joe Allbaugh, an aide to Oklahoma Gov. Henry Bellmon, said in Oklahoma City he was convinced "that we have probably the best technical site that is being offered up anywhere in the United States."

—Arizona project coordinator Ian McPherson called his state's two proposals "superb" and said in Phoenix, "We hope that now the issue will be laid to rest that Arizona simply does not have the wherewithal or the expertise to proceed."

To hear them talk, all the two dozen competitors were bound to win.

At least nine states were expected to deliver their solicitations during the day and three more were expected on Wednesday. Others among the 24 states expected to compete turned in their documents earlier, shunning fanfare — Utah, for example, sent 36 boxes by Express Mail.

Almost all the states stressed that their sites offered easy construction, quick access to major universities and airports, and an attractive lifestyle.

Congress has not yet made a decision on whether to build the supercollider, but it is widely supported for the non-polluting jobs, prestige and spinoff businesses it will bring to the winning state.

The project has no military application whatsoever and no foreseeable practical application beyond training young scientists. Some scientists are worried that its vast cost will drain federal funds from other worthy research.

Several states enlisted neighbors to support their bids. All of New England and New Jersey supported New York's three sites. Five states backed South Dakota.

Proposals were expected from Arizona, California, Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Kansas, Louisiana, Michigan, Mississippi, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Washington state and Wyoming.

Delay spares military train from explosion

By The Associated Press

MUENDEN, West Germany — A 10-minute delay saved a U.S. military train from a bomb that exploded on a railroad track and damaged a West German freight train, railroad officials said Tuesday.

No injuries were reported in the central West Germany blast late Monday and damage to the freight was slight.

U.S. military officials said the train was on a regular daily trip to West Berlin carrying personnel and supplies.

One official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said he did not know how many people were on it, but that dozens of military personnel and their families normally ride the so-called "Berlin duty train."

A police statement said the bomb went off at 11 p.m. Monday on a section of track near this town north of Kassel. The blast damaged the freight and part of the track.

Legal services available for students

University attorney provides free advice

By Jim Vader
Collegian Reporter

Students having landlord troubles, needing to sign legal documents or requiring the services of a lawyer may not know where to look to find the answers to their problems.

K-State students don't have to look any further than the Union to find a person who can provide legal services.

Dianne Urban has been K-State's students' attorney since June 1983. She received her Juris Doctor degree in 1982 from Washburn University in Topeka. Prior to becoming the students' attorney, Urban served as an assistant Riley County attorney for nine months, during which time she also had her own legal practice.

K-State is the only Kansas school other than the University of Kansas that has a students' attorney.

Urban has been in the Manhattan area for more than 19 years, and said she feels "quite at home" in Manhattan and with her job.

Urban's favorite job aspect is "contact with students—I like working with students."

"Students have come in with very interesting problems," she said. She enjoys the variety of situations with which students confront her. Urban said this makes her job "extremely challenging."

The most common problems students have are tenant/landlord disputes and consumer issues, she said, adding she also deals with many University-related problems.

Urban's primary duty is advising students on legal matters. She also drafts simple documents, including contracts and wills. She may represent students in litigation only upon approval from a governing board consisting of the University attorney, a faculty member who is also an attorney and two students who are appointed by the student body president and herself.

The opportunities for Urban to represent students, however, do not arise very often. She misses not being in actual court litigations.

"I would enjoy the job more if I could represent the students in court," she said.

Because Urban's salary comes from the student activity fee, her services are free to students who have paid the fee.

Urban's office hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Her office is located in the Student Governing Association offices on the first floor of the Union. She said if students want to consult with her, they should make an appointment by telephone.

Georgia inmate dies Tuesday; Texan gains stay of execution

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Ga. — William "Billy" Mitchell, convicted of murdering a 14-year-old boy during a holdup at a grocery store that also left the teen's mother wounded, was executed Tuesday in Georgia's electric chair.

Mitchell, 35, was the fourth person executed in the state this year and the 11th since Georgia resumed executions in 1983. Nationwide, 90 people have been executed since the 1976 U.S. Supreme Court ruling that cleared the way for states to reinstate the death penalty.

Mitchell was pronounced dead at 7:21 p.m., said Department of Corrections spokesman John Siler.

His lawyers appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court after being turned down Monday by the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, but the high court voted 5-3 to deny a last-minute request for a stay of execution.

The Georgia Board of Pardons and Paroles also upheld the death sentence Tuesday, even though Mitchell's lawyers asked the board in a letter not to consider the case.

The letter expressed Mitchell's regret for the pain suffered by the family of the victim, but noted the board had denied clemency to other condemned men who had been model prisoners.

"Simply put, he believes very strongly that clemency as an alternative to execution does not exist in Georgia," the letter said.

Mitchell pleaded guilty to killing Christopher Carr during a holdup at the grocery store in Sylvester where Carr's mother worked.

"I won't be satisfied until I get revenge," the boy's mother, Peggy Carr, said in a 1985 interview. She was shot four times during the robbery, which netted Mitchell about $160.

The U.S. Supreme Court upheld Mitchell's sentence in June after ruling on April 22 in another case that Georgia's death penalty does not discriminate on the basis of race.

Mitchell also was sentenced to life in prison for killing a 50-year-old man the day before the Sylvester robbery.

In Texas Tuesday, a federal judge halted the scheduled execution of a convicted killer considered by prison officials to be among the most violent men behind bars in that state.

James Demouchette, 32, was to have been the sixth person executed in Texas this year, and the 26th since the Supreme Court ruling. He had faced lethal injection shortly after midnight Tuesday for the 1976 robbery-slayings of two Houston pizza parlor workers.

His lawyers appealed to U.S. District Judge Lynn Hughes to spare the inmate, saying his violent nature may be the result of childhood beatings from his father.

Hughes issued an indefinite stay at midafternoon. No hearing in the matter was set immediately, said the judge's secretary.

Demouchette was convicted in 1977 and sentenced to death for shooting Scott Sorrell, 19, and Robert White, 20. He was later granted a new trial, but again received a death sentence.

Soviets ask for missile removal

U.S. says systems not negotiable

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union on Tuesday called on the United States to clear away the "last obstacles" to an agreement banning medium-range nuclear missiles by withdrawing 72 Pershing 1-A warheads from West Germany.

But U.S. officials said the warheads were not subject to negotiations with the Soviets because the missiles that carry them belong to the West Germans.

"We have said consistently that third-country systems are not part of the negotiations," White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said in Santa Barbara, Calif., near President Reagan's ranch. "We stand by that position."

A State Department official, who demanded anonymity, said the warheads would be withdrawn from West Germany only after the missiles were dismantled.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl offered last Wednesday to scrap the Pershing 1-A missiles, which have a range of 465 miles, after a U.S.-Soviet treaty is ratified and put into effect.

Both the United States and the Soviet Union welcomed the offer as a step forward. But it is not clear whether Kohl's schedule was acceptable to Moscow or posed a problem in completing the treaty.

At a news conference here Tuesday, a Soviet deputy foreign minister, Vladimir F. Petrovsky, insisted on removal of the warheads, which are under U.S. control.

"If the United States would agree to remove the 72 nuclear warheads, the last obstacles to the double-zero option would be removed," Petrovsky said.

The Soviet official referred to the dismantling of two categories of intermediate-range missiles in what would be Reagan's first nuclear arms control agreement with Moscow.

In all, 332 U.S. missiles would be withdrawn from West Germany, Britain, Italy and Belgium while the Soviets scrapped 442 rockets aimed at Western Europe and an additional 121 missiles targeted on China and Japan.

"It is very necessary for the United States now to give a clear answer," Petrovsky said. "Seventy-two nuclear warheads are part of double-zero."

On another arms control issue, Soviet Col. Gen. Nikolai Chervov offered to permit the United States to conduct a nuclear weapons test on Soviet territory in order to check the accuracy of American verification methods.

Chervov, an adviser to the Soviet general staff, said "we are prepared now to enter large-scale negotiations on the matter."

He said the Soviets had submitted the proposal in talks with U.S. experts.

State Department spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley said later that the two sides had discussed a proposal for joint verification experiments, including the U.S. Cortex method of measuring the size of underground blasts, in July.

"The sides have not reached agreement for such experiments," she said. "Our efforts are continuing."

Under a 1963 U.S.-Soviet treaty, only underground nuclear testing is legal.

Contamination area may be expanding

Residents southeast of city complain of poor water

By Judy Lundstrom
Special Projects Editor
© Student Publications Inc. 1987

Another Riley County community may be experiencing water contamination.

Residents of the Fairmont Addition — a community of about 500 people located southeast of Manhattan across the Kansas River — have complained for several years about the water, saying it has a foul taste and odor and that particles can often be seen floating in it.

"All these wells out here are messed up," said Katie Smith, head of the Fairmont Community Task Force. "Most people out here haul their drinking water in."

Smith said residents are hoping to get a water district similar to the one installed in the Hunters Island area two years ago.

At their Aug. 27 meeting, Riley County Commissioners approved an application for a $30,000 state grant to be used for a study of the water problem in the Fairmont area.

Some of the angry residents are wondering if the source of the water problems is Shilling Construction Inc., an asphalt company located just south of K-177 along McDowell Road on the east bank of the Kansas River.

Louis Fina, professor of microbiology, lives on Crestline Drive, which runs up the hill above the asphalt plant. Representing the Crestline Drive residents, Fina wrote the Kansas Department of Health and Environment in March 1986 and requested that the organization look into the situation.

In response to the complaints, Kansas Department of Health and Environment agent Dean Strowig conducted a brief inspection of the Shilling facility March 31, 1986.

About three months after the initial investigation, Strowig took several water samples from wells in the area. In November 1986, KDHE told Fina that "there is no evidence to indicate the activities at the Shilling Asphalt plant are or have caused contamination of the private and public water supplies sampled during our investigation."

However, the tests did detect the presence of several trihalomethanes in the water. And, in two of the samples collected, the compound tetrachloroethylene was detected.

According to KDHE, trihalomethanes are formed when natural organics in the water react with chlorine used as a disinfectant. Yet the department said the water's bad taste and odor was a result of not maintaining an adequate chlorine residual in the water system.

Tetrachloroethylene is a suspected animal carcinogen, or cancer-causing agent. In one of the wells tested, the amount detected was one part per billion. In the other, it was two parts per billion.

The Kansas Notification Level — a concentration at which, if detected in a public water supply, the owner of the well is to be notified and the well monitored further — is 1 part per billion.

Strowig said the wells containing the carcinogens should be sampled at least once or twice a year to ensure the levels don't increase.

But he said Wednesday that no further testing has been done.

"Since we didn't find anything bad or out of line, we have no reason to go back and check," he said.

Strowig said the owners are now responsible for testing their wells. Tests similar to the ones conducted by KDHE cost about $500.

The Shilling issue is a local matter, and "we just can't get involved in local matters," he said. "That's why we've pulled in our horns. We feel like we've done what's been asked and really find no one at fault."

"All these wells out here are messed up. Most people out here haul their drinking water in."

—Katie Smith

One resident who lives near the asphalt company said he saw material running into the Kansas River from a drainage pipe on Shilling property. He said he reported the incident to the county.

"I haven't checked it out," said county planner Monty Wedel. "KDHE would be the one to do something."

KDHE was never notified, Strowig said. Mike Shilling, co-owner of the asphalt company, said there is a lagoon on the site, but the waste is hauled away.

"We're not putting anything in the river," he said.

Shilling said there was no way the facility could be responsible for groundwater contamination.

"We're not contaminating their water," he said. "We're half a mile away. They might look a little closer to their own wells — that's what I would suggest."

Fina said Shilling employees don't drink their own water.

"We never have," Shilling said. "The well's real shallow, and there just never has been good water."

Shilling said a few residents were blaming the water problems on his plant because they want the site moved.

The controversy began when Shilling asked the county to rezone its site from agricultural to heavy industrial in January 1985. Many residents complained to commissioners about the facility, saying the fumes from the operation were "devastating" and the noise was "jet-engine loud." Despite the complaints, commissioners unanimously voted to rezone the site.

In July 1985, the Environmental Protection Agency conducted emission standards tests on the facility and found the plant was not operating in compliance with state or federal standards.

Tests run three months later, however, revealed the company was once again in

Attacks escalating in Persian Gulf; U.S. to escort more ships

By The Associated Press

MANAMA, Bahrain — Iranian speedboats and Iraqi warplanes attacked at least seven ships in the Persian Gulf within 24 hours and U.S. warships prepared on Wednesday to escort more tankers through the war zone.

The Iraqis reported a fifth day of air raids on Iranian shipping, oil fields and other industrial targets. Iran said its artillery shelled military and industrial installations in southern Iraq and Iranian planes struck in the northern area of the 730-mile border warzone.

Eighteen attacks on ships have been reported and 13 confirmed since Iran and Iraq, which have been at war since September 1980, resumed their "tanker war" last weekend after a six-week lull.

Shipping executives, speaking privately, said the 13 confirmed attacks in less than a week compare with monthly averages of six in 1984-85 and eight to 10 last year.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency quoted Prime Minister Hussein Musavi as declaring Wednesday that a policy of "blow for blow" will be pursued in a calculated fashion.

Iraq began the war on commercial shipping early in 1984 in an attempt to destroy Iran's economy with raids both on its oil installations and tankers carrying its crude petroleum. Iran retaliated by attacking ships, usually in the southern gulf, and stopping others to search for Iraq-bound cargo.

Dispatches from the Iraqi News Agency reported attacks Wednesday on two "large maritime targets," which usually means ships, and an Iraqi attack on a Cypriot tanker Tuesday was confirmed. Iraq's reports do not identify ships attacked.

Of 11 raids Iraq has reported since renewing the shipping war Saturday, seven have been confirmed by Lloyd's Shipping Intelligence Unit in London and other independent sources.

The latest confirmed Iraqi raid was on the small offshore supply ship Big Orange 14. It was reported sunk by an air-fired missile late Tuesday near Kharg Island, Iran's main oil export terminal in the northern gulf.

One shipping source in the United Arab Emirates, where the vessel was based, said all seven of its Indians and Sri Lankan crew were missing. Another said five had been rescued, quoting sources close to the owners.

No one answered the telephone at the owner's office.

Two empty Kuwaiti tankers and their U.S. Navy escorts reached the sheikdom at the head of the gulf Tuesday. The warships are expected to make the return trip with three vessels that have been loaded and waiting for days.

Iran accuses Kuwait of receiving arms shipments for its neighbor Iraq.

Senate passes scaled-down version of highway bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — After 14 days of painstaking experimentation with a plethora of amendments, the Senate passed Wednesday and sent to the House a highway improvement bill greatly scaled down from what Gov. Mike Hayden wanted but close to what legislators think taxpayers can afford.

The plan, which will form the basis of the Senate's negotiating position in bargaining with the House if a program is to be enacted during this special session of the Legislature, would cost $934 million and would be financed entirely by increases in motor fuel taxes and vehicle registration fees.

It contains no sales tax increase and no bonds would be issued.

Senate passage came on a vote of 22-15, with at least 21 votes required in the 40-member Senate to approve a bill. It had just 18 votes on the first roll call, but four senators switched and voted for it after the Senate invoked a parliamentary maneuver to force all senators to vote. Three were absent, but their votes were not needed after the four switched.

The bill went to the House, where the Transportation Committee immediately began amending the measure to conform to decisions it had made on what it wants in a highway program.

The biggest difference is the Senate avoided a sales tax increase to fund its program, while the House committee has recommended a half-cent sales tax increase be made a part of the funding package — subject to a vote of the people at next August's primary election. The House panel wants a $1.33 billion program.

Speaker Jim Braden said the House probably has "three times as many amendments" to be offered during debate, which he said will begin Thursday morning. It could last into Friday, but Braden said he was hopeful it could be completed in one day.

The Senate is certain to reject House amendments, sending the bill to a six-member conference committee to try to work out a final version which can gain 21 votes in the Senate and 63 votes in the 125-member House.

The four senators who changed their votes to pass the Senate measure with one vote to spare are Republicans Gus Bogina of Lenexa and Jeanne Hofferer and Alicia Salisbury of Topeka and Democrat Joe Warren of Maple City.

During floor debate, an amendment incorporating the second plan Talkington has offered during the special session was adopted 19-18.

However, on final roll call, the vote was 18-19 until the four switches, which passed the bill, 22-15.

Three Democratic senators were absent — Jack Steineger and Bill Mulich of Kansas City and Nancy Parrish of Topeka. Steineger had gone to San Francisco on business, Mulich to Kansas City and Mrs. Parrish flew to New Jersey where her father was gravely ill.

Talkington's proposal, unveiled before the Senate Republican caucus Wednesday morning, would spend $934 million over the next 10 years, of which $528 million would be for new construction on major road corridors, including a new road from Wichita into the southeast corner of the state.

Talkington said he offered the $934 million program as a compromise. He conceded it wouldn't build all the roads people want, but said it was a start and the best he thought possible in this special session.

"Nobody's going to get everything they want, but let's find the few

Nation's fertility rate declines

WASHINGTON — The nation's fertility rate fell to a record low last year, while life expectancy reached a record high and marriage and divorce rates dipped to the lowest levels in a decade, the government reported Wednesday.

Average life expectancy "in 1986 reached a new record high of 74.9 years," said the Center for Health Statistics, an arm of the Department of Health and Human Services. That was up from 74.7 years reported in 1985.

The highest life expectancy was 78.9 years for white females, up from 78.7 a year earlier. White males saw an increase from 71.8 to 72.0 years.

Black life expectancy rose from 65.3 to 65.5 years for men, but declined from 73.7 to 73.6 years for women, the center's annual summary of vital statistics reported.

Births totaled 3,731,000, down 18,000 from 1985.

That represented 64.9 live births per 1,000 women aged 15 to 44, 2 percent below last year and the lowest rate ever recorded in the United States, the report said.

The drop reflects the trend of recent years, as many young people have postponed marriage and families to pursue education and careers.

Hart to appear on 'Nightline'

DENVER — Gary Hart will face questions about his political future and personal life on a special one-hour edition of ABC's "Nightline" next week, spokesmen said Wednesday.

The Sept. 8 show will be the first time Hart has agreed to answer questions since speculation erupted last month that he might re-enter the race for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination.

Laura Wessner of ABC said that Hart, who dropped out of the race earlier this year amid questions about his relationship to Miami model Donna Rice, will be questioned "one-on-one" by Nightline anchorman Ted Koppel.

Asked if there were any limits placed on the questions, Wessner said there were no conditions attached to the interview.

Hart spokesman Bill Shore said Hart would respond to recent questions concerning his political plans.

Chain saw murder act of 'rage'

LOS ANGELES — The murder-dismemberment of a runaway Missouri teen-ager whose body was mutilated with a chain saw was committed in "a homosexual rage and robbery," a prosecutor said Wednesday.

Deputy District Attorney Sterling Norris made the comments as Max Bernard Franc, the Fresno political science professor accused in the case, made a brief court appearance and calmly agreed to have his arraignment postponed.

Franc, a professor at California State University, Fresno, is accused of murder, robbery and three special circumstances in the Aug. 20 killing of Tracy Leroy Nute, who was shot and then dismembered with a chain saw.

If convicted, Franc could face the death penalty because of the special circumstances allegations.

Acquaintances have said Nute, 18, a native of Kansas City, Mo., who had been in Los Angeles only a short time, was a homeless runaway who worked as a male prostitute in Hollywood.

His gray hair askew, the 57-year-old Franc spoke only a few words during the brief hearing, announcing his name clearly and acknowledging that he agreed for proceedings to be postponed until Sept. 9.

Prostitute sells tainted blood

LOS ANGELES — Two days before his arrest for selling his AIDS-tainted blood, Joseph Markowski told police: "I'm a prostitute and I sell blood for a living," a detective testified Wednesday.

Los Angeles police detective Bill Pavelic said Markowski, who is charged with attempted murder, gave that response when asked his occupation.

"He was extremely agitated, belligerent," said Pavelic. "He used scurrilous language. ... He repeatedly talked about the fact he had AIDS."

Markowski, 29, whose case is believed to be the first of its kind in the nation, has been charged with four counts of attempted murder for selling his blood and for having sex while knowing he had AIDS.

He also is charged with two counts of assault with great bodily injury and two counts of attempted poisoning for alleged acts of prostitution.

Municipal Court Judge Alban Niles is conducting a preliminary hearing to determine whether Markowski should stand trial. Pavelic, who was assigned to the mental evaluation unit, said that even after Markowski told him he had been tested at the County-USC Medical Center, he did not believe that the man had AIDS.

"I was still dumbfounded," Pavelic said of the June 23 conversation. "I didn't take it very seriously."

Even after officers found a receipt for a blood donation in Markowski's personal effects, Pavelic said, "I still wasn't convinced I had, quote unquote, a crime."

Area farmer finds dynamite

JUNCTION CITY, Kan. — A farmer plowing north of Junction City found a metal box containing dynamite which authorities said may have been 30 years old.

Bruce Deatherage of rural Milford was plowing Tuesday afternoon on farm land 2½ miles east of U.S. 77 when he noticed a small, green Army ammunition box beneath some trees.

Deatherage said he walked over and kicked the box, then opened it and discovered the five 2-pound sticks of dynamite.

Sheriff's Deputy Rudy Goetsch and representatives from the Milford Township Fire Department, the Kansas Highway Patrol and the Fort Riley military police went to the scene.

Authorities disposed of the dynamite by burning it in diesel fuel, Goetsch said. Deatherage said the dynamite was partially crystallized, which makes it even more explosive.

Deatherage said the dynamite, which his father-in-law apparently used to remove tree stumps during the 1940s, may have been at least 30 years old.

Available: one Kansas bridge

COFFEYVILLE, Kan. — Available: one southeast Kansas bridge, a fixer-upper with lots of character.

Montgomery County engineer Kurt Booe is offering to give away the 226-foot bridge that crosses the Verdigris River southeast of Coffeyville. He'll even throw in about $13,000 in federal money to help defray the cost of hauling off the 116-year-old structure, which was closed about three years ago after a bonfire destroyed its wooden planks.

Federal law requires Booe to attempt to preserve the bridge before replacing it, so Booe is looking for someone with a good public use for the structure.

Older adult center to expand services

By Jackie Brazzle
Collegian Reporter

The U.S. population is growing older, and Gary Coates, professor in architecture and design, has picked up on the trend toward an older public.

His architecture and design studio class is currently working on an expansion proposal for the Riley County Seniors Service Center, 412 Leavenworth St.

The center offers helping services to senior citizens and their families, said Marguerite Carlson, director of the center. Since its opening Sept. 30, 1982, the volume of use has increased dramatically.

Carlson said 2,550 people used the center last year. This year attendance is averaging 165 people a day.

She said she thinks the high rate of use warrants the expansion.

"We need to expand and further develop our programs and services, in keeping with our mission as the focal point on aging for Riley County," Carlson said.

Plans were made when the center opened to expand the building on the east side, if needed. In January 1986 the decision to expand was made, and a year later the center's building expansion committee was created.

The committee presented its proposal to Coates in the spring of 1987. Carlson said the committee asked Coates to work on the expansion project because of his previous work for the center.

"The work that he and the students did before was so successful that we eagerly sought help from the University and Dr. Coates," she said.

Coates and his studio class previously worked on the center in 1978. They did a feasibility study to see if it would be advantageous for Manhattan to build a seniors' center on Leavenworth Street.

Coates said he decided to work on the center's proposal for a variety of reasons.

He said this proposal renders a service to the community and plays an important role in education.

"I think it is an important part of what we're teaching," Coates said. "It (working with the center) is an excellent educational vehicle."

Coates thinks the proposal gives students an excellent opportunity to learn because they are confronted with a real-life learning situation. He said students will work with the community, interview staff and users of the center and do field and library research.

Students will also come into contact with the workings of non-profit funding, the issue of aging and political systems, Coates said.

Coates' class is in the pre-planning stage of the proposal project. They are doing feasibility studies to determine if expansion is feasible at the Leavenworth site. He said the class is working closely with the building expansion committee and Carlson, as well as with the Manhattan city staff.

Once the class has determined a course of action, they will do in-depth designs — drawings and long-term building viability — for the expansion project. Carlson said an increase in space from 6,400 square feet to 15,000 square feet is desired.

The center is a non-profit organization.

Coates said that by working with non-profit organizations, no conflicts develop with private sector firms.

After the class' in-depth designs have been submitted to the building expansion committee, the center will begin to raise money to carry out the expansion. Other funding for the expansion will come from the city, county and the Area Agency on Aging.

Coates said work on the proposal will continue throughout the semester.

I.D. proves 'no problem' for University employees

By Jan Schwartz
Collegian Reporter

The new law requiring all employees to show proof of identification has not caused any major problems at K-State, said Larry Viterna, director of Student Financial Assistance.

The Immigration Reform and Control Act, signed into effect on Nov. 6, 1986 by President Reagan, requires employers to request documentation to establish both identity and employment authorization for employees hired after Nov. 7, 1986 and employees who remain employed after June 1, 1987.

The law makes it unlawful for any employer to knowingly hire any alien not authorized to work in the United States.

Viterna said the new requirements create additional paperwork and may delay some people from getting on the payroll.

"The law was enacted to stop the hiring of illegal aliens," Viterna said. "Kansas isn't going to be as affected by the law as a border state like New Mexico or California will be."

Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center, said there have not been any major problems with foreign students obtaining the documents.

"Since they (foreign students) are here as non-immigrants, they should have the information to prove documentation at all times...to enter the country, to attend school, they need the information more readily available," Davis said.

The few problems encountered concern students having difficulty obtaining the information they need, said Celeste Tillson, head of the payroll department in the Controller's Office.

The law states necessary documentation is the equivalent of presenting a state-issued driver's license — or a state-issued identification card with a photograph — and a Social Security card.

It also says a prospective employee must present these documents within three working days of being hired. Any person who cannot provide the necessary information cannot be placed on the payroll.

"Initial implementation was a headache," Tillson said, "but other than that we have had no major problems."

Debbie Bimey, assistant director of Personnel Services, said her office worked in conjunction with Pat Bosco, associate vice president and dean of student life, to send out news releases to inform returning and prospective students of the new law.

Russian's art work on exhibit

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Soviets viewed the vivid colors and dreamlike imagery of Marc Chagall on Wednesday when the first major showing of paintings and lithographs by the Russian-born artist opened in his native land.

Works that Chagall left behind when he emigrated five years after the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution and those he later donated to Soviet museums have been taken out of attics, warehouses and private homes for display in the Pushkin Art Museum in central Moscow.

Chagall, who was born in Vitebsk in 1889, fell out of official favor after he became disillusioned with the young Soviet state in 1922 and moved to France. But he never lost his popular following here.

The exhibit of 90 paintings and nearly 200 sketches, lithographs and letters was organized by Irina A. Antonova, director of the museum.

Humans terrorize world communities

Mankind is a strange creature. In recent years, we have developed a sense of social conscience. We have tried to repair the blemishes with which we have stained the world. We are a part of the environment, and every move we make affects the atmosphere in which we live. Unfortunately, the world would be better off without Homo sapiens.

It is difficult to assess man's contributions to humanity. Man, in his infinite wisdom, has tried to increase the quality of life in several respects. The first increase is in life expectancy. We have extended it in the United States to 70 years and beyond. However, this does not necessarily equate with increasing quality — just increasing quantity. The statistics don't present the amount of time a person has to spend in the hospital to squeeze in those few extra breaths.

Man is also forced into retirement at age 67. Longer life and chronic illnesses go hand in hand. Doctors take advantage of the elderly and the insurance companies by lengthening life. Retirement and nursing homes flourish due to extravagant rates without the proper care to match. Suicide pacts of elderly couples increase at an amazing rate. Longer does not mean better.

Another area in which we have tried to improve our existence is environmental control. In the United States, we have created the Environmental Protection Agency and other federal controls. The United Nations has environmental controls under the Economic and Social Council. State and national parks and forests have been formed. These activities are intended to protect what little land we haven't abused. Dams and irrigation projects help to make unusable land inhabitable.

All of these contributions to the environment seem to make man look like a hero. However, when we look at the rationale behind these actions, mankind does not have the same rosy hue. The motives can be found in our collective guilty conscience.

Humans call four-legged animals "beasts." I would suggest the four-legged versions are superior. The "beasts" don't wantonly destroy the world we live in. Man is generous. He pollutes rivers and streams with waste from nuclear and coal power plants, toxins from factories and any other garbage handy. We pollute the air and receive acid rain in return. We are destroying the atmosphere with pollutants. Cities are befouled with noise and smog. Th highways are contaminated because they are trash cans for motorists. Dumps for toxic and nuclear waste defile groundwater. We are making the world uninhabitable for the "lesser" creatures.

Of course, man has other clever ways to be destructive. We manage to ruin ecosystems by not thinking. Rain forests are being cut down in South America and Africa, which leads to desertification. We have used strip mining when searching for coal. We use other methods when mining for precious minerals and drilling for oil, thus lowering the number of habitats for our fellow creatures. Cities and highways take away their homes and food sources. Man puts up fences to keep in its herds and disrupts that food chain. All of these actions take away from the "beasts" and continue to lead to the extinction of more and more species.

I will concede there are some actions which aren't a guilty reaction. We do extinguish forest fires (man causes many of them, though). Man also tries to save whales that have beached themselves (after nearly causing their extinction with harpoons). People also are planting trees to stop erosion (caused by horrible land-use tactics). Well, maybe there is some small amount of guilt involved.

In the United States, we also see it as our humanitarian duty to send assistance to Third World nations. We send technology, food, clothes, medical supplies, bullets, guns, bombs, tanks and other implements of destruction. The guns and bombs won't feed the people, but they will stop the godless commie pinkos from infiltrating and helping to feed the starving. Of course, they will save the United States from the commies marching in through Mexico. I don't see the link either. Maybe the guns are intended to stop the major problem in these nations — population growth. I don't see that as a viable alternative, though. Until we stop thinking of war and seriously try to solve the population problem, our philanthropic efforts will continue to be wasted.

Homo sapiens is the only creature with a consciousness. We supposedly know the difference between right and wrong. That is why man is the only creature building better and better mechanisms with which to destroy others. Man is the only creature that organizes armies exclusively for mass homicides. Man murders, steals and commits arson. If we know better, then why do we do it? The "beasts" do not do any of these things — at least, not to excess. And they don't know any better.

Selfishness is the prime motivator behind our futile attempts to improve the world in which we live.

Parking alternatives require examination

It's time to rev up your engines and wait. Parking this semester — as in past semesters — will be difficult at best.

Regardless of the amount of studies examined, committees formed, or complaining done, students and faculty need more spaces for their vehicles. The increase in enrollment — and parking permits — intensifies the problem.

The increase of parking permits was compounded by a new policy. The KSU police department is now allowing students who live in residence halls to buy two parking permits. One allows them to park in their hall's parking lot. A second general student permit allows them to park where other students do on campus. Previously, students living in residence halls were not allowed to buy the second permit. How many of these students will pay the extra $22 is unknown, but the choice is now theirs.

In addition, Jardine Terrace residents are now required to buy an extra permit if they want to park on the campus. Before, their Jardine Terrace permit allowed them to park on campus also.

It is incomprehensible why the police would expand the number of people allowed to buy the permits when the parking lots are already overcrowded with waiting motorists. Perhaps it is to increase the police parking fund used by the department. If this is the reason, the police should rethink the plan. If motorists are forced to wait for parking spaces much longer, fewer will buy parking permits.

The parking puzzle has plagued the campus almost since the time students began driving. At $22 to $44 a permit, motorists deserve better. Creative alternatives need to be developed and implemented.

Technology requires development of NASA

For more than a year and a half, the fleet of NASA space shuttles has been grounded because a flaw in a booster rocket led to the destruction of the space shuttle Challenger. That devastating obstacle seems to have been overcome with the successful test of the new booster design Sunday.

The destruction of the Challenger, and especially the deaths of its seven crew members, raised questions beyond that of just safety. Many people doubted the benefits of manned space flight were worth the economic cost — not to mention the cost in human lives. The human costs were especially hard to deal with as we watched the fiery spectacle replayed on national television.

Only 10 people have died in America's space program. Compare that figure with the accomplishments of the program. It is no small feat to travel into outer space. NASA works on the leading edge of technology, developing entirely new systems to let humans live, work and travel in outer space.

That does not mean that human lives are expendable. Nor does it mean that crew safety should not be NASA's main concern. It is very possible that destruction of the Challenger could have been prevented if there had been a better system of safety checks.

NASA should make every effort to make space travel as safe as possible for the people involved. It is paramount that NASA learn from its mistakes — especially those that cost human lives — in order to insure safety for those currently involved.

But the very nature of NASA's work involves a great amount of risk and the possibility of lives being lost. However, the benefits of the space program are worth those risks, and it is a matter of survival. The resources of this planet are limited, and at some point in time the human race will have to travel to other planets.

Pilots desire air safety

This is a rebuttal to the Aug. 27 editorial titled "More federal control needed for air traffic," which accused the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association of attempting to thwart Elizabeth Dole's efforts to improve safety for petty, self-serving reasons. It appears the editorial was written in haste with little or no research.

AOPA is one of the foremost groups in the country for promoting safety in the skies for everyone. You assumed — probably by just reading the news reports like the rest of us — that since Dole is "for safety," and AOPA is asking Dole to resign, then AOPA is against safety. It is ludicrous to think that pilots are willing to sacrifice safety for "looking out for No. 1 and avoiding the 'hassles' of implementing increased security measures." I'm certainly not willing to risk my life just to avoid hassles.

Simply implementing a terminal control area as Dole has proposed does not automatically make the skies safer. In fact, most of the highly publicized mid-air collisions have occurred in TCAs.

Improperly implemented TCAs can actually reduce safety by compressing opposite-direction traffic closer together into "corridors" — as is the case on the West Coast. And as you pointed out, there are too few controllers. So who is going to handle the increased workload brought on by more TCAs and more compressed traffic?

Your assertion that the "pilots association does not realize...that the safety hassles are desperately needed and would save lives" is completely without basis. Everyone in aviation agrees that something must be done to improve safety in busy terminal areas. What AOPA is against is the knee-jerk reaction to do something immediately even though it won't help and may make things worse. The AOPA's Air Safety Foundation has done much research on how to improve safety around busy airports and has discovered some serious flaws in the implementation of some existing TCAs. The foundation has made sound proposals in restructuring some TCAs and the operating procedures within TCAs aimed at solving the underlying problems. The Federal Aviation Administration has even adopted some of AOPA's ideas. Other expert groups have also studied airspace control and generally agree with most of AOPA's suggestions.

A short list of some of the real problems with air safety in busy areas follows. 1. There is an inadequate number of experienced controllers. Remember the controller strike and subsequent mass firing of thousands of controllers? 2. Most of the conditions that caused the controllers to strike in the first place have not been rectified. 3. Outdated, unreliable and overloaded computer systems are being used to identify and separate traffic. New hardware and software are being developed, but are approximately five years behind schedule and millions of dollars over budget. 4. There is reluctance to spend the more than $5 billion in the Aviation Trust Fund financed by surcharges on airline tickets and taxes on aviation fuel that were supposed to be used to improve airport facilities. That money makes our national debt seem a little smaller and thus is not being spent as the FAA promised.

Dole can be commended for being "for safety," but that in itself does not qualify her to implement safety measures that work properly, and that is the crux of AOPA's stand against her. An example of one of the reasons AOPA has asked Dole to resign is that her original request for 1987 was to hire only 225 more controllers, even though traffic is up 120 percent from 1981 when 11,400 controllers were fired because of the strike. There are currently 1,400 fewer controllers than there were before the strike. After much prodding from Congress, Dole finally raised her request to 955 controllers. Also, to show that AOPA is not alone in its concerns of FAA management, please note that there is a bill in the Senate to separate the FAA from the Department of Transportation.

In rereading your editorial, I now see that you seem to be under the erroneous impression that AOPA represents airline pilots. Quite the contrary is true. AOPA represents another segment of aviation called "general aviation," which encompasses most aviation except scheduled airlines. However, there are airline pilots who belong to AOPA. Dole's intent is to regulate general aviation aircraft out of the skies. This is as fair and reasonable as regulating the family automobile, postal carriers and businessmen off the roads in order to improve the highway safety record of the trucking industry. By the way, most mail is flown by general aviation airplanes and many businesses fly privately-owned airplanes. Properly implemented procedures allow general aviation to safely coexist with the airlines without undue restriction to either.

Airspace safety is very complicated and what looks like a good idea can in fact have the opposite effect. I am certainly not qualified to solve all the safety problems in aviation, but I would certainly like to see responsible editorializing on a very complex subject.

Angry protesters return

Navy blamed for not halting 'death train'

By The Associated Press

CONCORD, Calif. — Angry demonstrators returned Wednesday to the Concord Naval Weapons Station where a veteran protesting U.S. arms shipments to Central America lost both legs when he knelt in front of an oncoming munitions train.

The protesters, in a news conference held at the site of the incident, denounced the Navy for failing to stop the train that hit S. Brian Willson on Tuesday.

"That train that ran into us ... was a death train. It was quite obvious that there was no intent to stop," said Duncan Murphy, who was standing beside Willson while the train approached. Murphy and another man jumped away a moment before the train hit Willson.

Capt. Lonnie Cagle, commander of the base 45 miles east of San Francisco, said the train engineer "was under no orders" to proceed through the demonstrators without stopping. Public affairs officer Dan Tikalsky said the train crew had been instructed to stop if anyone was on the tracks.

Willson's wife of 11 days, Holly Rauon, quoted her husband as saying, "Well, I'm a real peace agitator."

"I'm very deeply angered," she said. "I feel a deeper conviction than ever ... to do whatever it takes to stop our barbaric policy."

Rep. Ron Dellums, D-Calif., sent a telegram to the protesters, saying, "I am shocked to learn of the Navy's reckless action ... I am upset and angry because there is absolutely no excuse for what happened."

Other speakers Wednesday included anti-war activist Daniel Ellsberg and author Alice Walker. About 50 demonstrators listened along with 30 to 40 reporters.

After the news conference, five protesters attempted to block a passing truck by sitting in the roadway. But a Marine Guard ran to warn the truck, which swerved to avoid the demonstrators.

Willson, 47, an activist who last September participated in a 47-day fast on the Capitol steps, was listed in serious condition. One leg was severed below the knee and surgeons amputated the other leg below the knee, said Sandra Ryan, spokeswoman for John Muir Hospital.

Willson, who was at the base Tuesday to start a 40-day fast, also had a skull fracture and numerous other injuries, officials at the hospital reported.

The Contra Costa County Sheriff's Department is investigating, said sheriff's Capt. Russell Pitkin. He said his department had jurisdiction because the protesters were on a railroad right-of-way a few feet off the base property.

One demonstrator shot a videotape of the incident, and Pitkin said he hoped to turn that tape over to the county crime lab to establish how fast the train was moving.

Several demonstrators said the train seemed to accelerate as it approached the group of protesters at a speed of at least 10 to 15 mph. However, Navy officials disputed that, claiming a preliminary investigation showed the civilian engineer was moving at 5 mph and had applied the brakes.

Willson was leading a group of about 25 demonstrators outside the weapons station, the largest such facility in the western United States, when he attempted to block the train. He was dragged about 25 feet while his stepson and wife watched.

Golden Key receives award for third year

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State chapter of the Golden Key National Honor Society received a national award for its activities for the third consecutive year.

The group received the award this summer at the Golden Key headquarters in Atlanta, said Jerry Strunk, vice president of Golden Key.

The award is given on the basis of activities each chapter is involved in. Some of the activities the K-State chapter has been involved in include ushering at graduation and participation at Open House.

Each activity is given a point value. The award is presented, on the basis of point accumulation, to the winner at the annual awards banquet in Atlanta.

"Golden Key is divided into six regions throughout the country," he said. "Only one Key Chapter award is given per region per year."

This is the third year in a row that K-State has been given the award in its region, Strunk said.

Strunk said Golden Key is made up of approximately 160 schools. K-

State belongs to the Central region.

Golden Key is a student organization that recognizes those who display academic excellence and "the top 15 percent of juniors and seniors are usually selected," said Strunk.

Golden Key was founded in 1977 at Georgia State University by Jim Lewis because he believed there was a need for a new honor society. K-State received its chapter in 1981, said Strunk.

Strunk said the honor society is also working in the area of career placement and guidance. It publishes a book listing companies interested in hiring Golden Key members.

Senate meeting tonight to discuss Holton Hall, Lafene renovation plan

By Jill Conger
Collegian Reporter

Issues surrounding Lafene Student Health Center, Holton Hall renovation and a new grant program for summer jobs are a few of the topics to be presented at the Student Senate meeting tonight.

Dr. Robert C. Tout, director of Lafene, is the first of three scheduled speakers during the open period. Tout will be speaking about the proposal to close down the inpatient service at Lafene.

Senators will hear about a new student assistance grant program and what the economic development grant entails. Marvin Kaiser, director of the program, will give details on how K-Staters can get summer jobs in rural areas.

Vice President Robert Krause will be the final speaker. He will be informing Senate about the recent changes in administration as well as developments in the Holton Hall renovation program.

"I understand that Vice President Krause is wanting to create a student task force to look into the duplicating services at Lafene," said Michelle Benoit, senior in agricultural economics and Student Senate chairwoman.

Bills up for first reading include approval of Union Governing Board members and two special allocations.

"The first allocation is for the Associated Students of Kansas for $541.80," Benoit said. "The money is for their Higher Education Rescue Operation."

Also, Students Against Drunk Driving is requesting an allocation of $342, Benoit said. The group is asking for the money because they would like to bring a keynote speaker to K-State to speak on the subject of drinking and driving.

The Senate is expected to review a commendation for Alf Landon, for whom K-State's Landon Lecture Series was named, in honor of his 100th birthday.

Student Senate meetings begin at 7 p.m. in the Union Big Eight Room. All meetings are open to the public.

China landslide kills 34

By The Associated Press

BEIJING — A landslide in southwestern China crashed onto more than 100 people and killed at least 34, the official Xinhua News Agency said Wednesday.

The report said rescue workers freed 60 people from the earth that engulfed them before dawn Tuesday in Wuxi county, eastern Sichuan province.

Xinhua did not give the condition of those rescued and did not say how many were still missing in the disaster. It said 107 people were caught in the landslide.

Xinhua said Sichuan Vice-Governor Pu Haiqing rushed to the scene to direct rescue operations and medical teams had arrived from neighboring counties.

The landslide occurred at 3:40 a.m. local time, burying the residential compound of the county electric power industry bureau, a hotel and some private homes, it said.

Other mountain slopes in the region are prone to landslides and people living in hazardous areas have been evacuated, Xinhua said.

Study discloses latchkey difficulties

School learning ability hampered

By Staff and Wire Reports

WASHINGTON — Most public school teachers in a national survey rated the widespread practice of leaving children on their own after school as the biggest cause of youngsters' difficulties in the classroom.

Parents questioned separately for the Louis Harris and Associates survey also expressed concern about the latchkey child phenomenon, which has spread as more and more parents take jobs outside the home.

Forty-one percent of the 2,000 parents surveyed said they leave their child on his or her own between the end of school and 5:30 p.m. at least once a week. Almost a quarter left them alone every day.

The survey, sponsored by Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., was released Wednesday at the National Press Club.

Bonnie Kastanek, a second grade teacher at Manhattan's Woodrow Wilson Elementary, said she believes unattended children have an inability to organize themselves inside and outside of school.

"They sometimes forget materials needed for class," she said.

Out of the 25 children in Kastanek's second grade class, she thinks two of them are latchkey children. Part of the problem is forcing children to assume responsibilities normally performed by an adult, she said.

Micheal Holen, associate dean of the College of Education, believes leaving a child unattended is a problem, but many parents are forced to because of economic or social reasons. Holen said children do better in their studies when given assistance from their parents.

Jerry Horn, associate dean of the College of Education, said lack of parental guidance has an adverse affect on the child's ability to learn.

However, "We don't know the total impact on the children yet," he said.

The poll found morale on the upswing among the 1,000 teachers surveyed, with younger instructors saying they are less tempted to defect from careers in the classroom.

The percentage of teachers saying they were satisfied with their jobs rose in the past year from 81 to 85 percent, while the proportion indicating they were likely to leave the profession within five years fell from 27 to 22 percent.

Only 20 percent of those with less than five years' experience said they expected to switch careers, down from 39 percent in a 1986 Harris survey.

The survey report said higher salaries and "the sheer amount of attention given in the past couple years to the state of education" may explain why teachers are feeling better about their jobs.

Harris surveyed teachers and parents at random by telephone. The poll has a 2-to-3 point standard margin of error.

When asked to rank seven possible causes of students' difficulties in school, 51 percent of teachers picked "children who are left on their own after school." Poverty at home was cited by 47 percent; automatic promotion by 44 percent; teachers' failure to adapt to individual student needs by 43 percent; single parent families by 42 percent; "boring" curriculum by 34 percent; and families where both parents work full-time by 25 percent.

Both parents and teachers were asked their views on some common criticisms of parents.

Sixty-two percent of teachers and 59 percent of parents agreed parents leave their children alone too much after school; 51 percent of teachers and 58 percent of parents said the mothers and fathers fail to discipline their children. About half of each group faulted parents for neglecting to make sure homework was done and for not showing enough interest in their children's education.

KCC revokes license of Great Bend firm

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Corporation Commission Wednesday fined a Great Bend motor carrier $8,500 and suspended its license to operate for six months for alleged violations of state and federal regulations relating to transportation of hazardous materials.

The company, Kansas Seismic Supply Inc., had its authority to operate as a private carrier suspended until Dec. 23, which is six months from the date its license first was suspended for an investigation and hearing procedure.

The fine must be paid to the Barton County treasurer under state law.

In announcing the penalties against the company, the KCC said in a statement:

"A company driver was stopped May 18, 1987, by the Kansas Highway Patrol for speeding. A roadside inspection revealed the vehicle was carrying Class A explosives and blasting caps in the same load. His vehicle did not display the required markings for transporting hazardous materials.

"The van carrying the explosives was left unattended in a hospital parking lot while the driver was at a doctor's office. The driver indicated he had never been properly educated on the procedures for transporting explosives.

"The KCC staff and Seismic Supply's representatives entered into a stipulation of facts in which the company acknowledged the violations. Company owner Gordon D. Warren accepted personal responsibility for the driver's actions."

A private carrier is one which transports its own products. They must obtain KCC authority to operate in the state, and must provide proof of insurance and adhere to KCC motor carrier standards.

Natural gas prices up, KCC says

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The price of natural gas increased an average of 4.3 percent for Kansas consumers during the second quarter of 1987, but the customers of the state's largest distribution system are paying 6.8 percent more, the Kansas Corporation Commission reported Wednesday.

A quarterly survey by the commission's staff of prices of natural gas from the state's six largest distributors showed customers paid between 1.9 percent less and 7.4 percent more in April, May and June than they did in the first three months of the year.

The survey also showed Kansas consumers still paid a third less for their natural gas than the average customer nationwide. The commission attributed increases in natural gas prices to increases in the costs of wholesale natural gas for the companies.

Customers served by the state's biggest distribution system, one operated by KPL Gas Service, paid an average of $43.20 for the quarter, up 6.8 percent. The system comprises a system once owned by the Gas Service Co. and one operated by the Kansas Power and Light Co., before KPL bought Gas Service and merged the two companies.

The system serves 420,000 customers in the eastern two-thirds of the state, including consumers in Wichita, Topeka, Kansas City, Kan., and Overland Park. The company's headquarters are in Topeka.

Customers on the state's second largest system, also operated by KPL, paid an average of $32.17 for the quarter, down less than 1 percent over prices during the first quarter. The system serves about 110,000 customers in 106 cities, including Manhattan, Salina and Great Bend.

Agency announces annual promotion for food donations

By The Collegian Staff

The annual Labor Day food drive sponsored by the Flint Hills Bread Basket started Wednesday and runs through Sept. 9.

Atina Hanna, executive director of the Bread Basket, said they hope to collect more than 300 pounds of food during the drive.

Non-perishable, high protein foods such as powdered milk, tuna and crackers are in the greatest demand, Hanna said. Frozen foods and perishable foods are also collected.

Because of an added emphasis on community involvement, Hanna said that seven Manhattan supermarkets will be collecting donated food items in their stores.

The stores participating in the drive include Dillons, Dutch Maid, Food 4 Less and Safeway. Donations can be made directly to the Bread Basket at 901 Yuma St. between 8:30 a.m. and 12:30 p.m. on weekdays.

Hanna said that if people find food on their shelves or garden produce that they won't be needing, they should call the center. "Don't just let it rot. Give us a call, and we'll come get it," she said.

Volunteers can be contacted at 537-0730 to pick up any donations.

The donated food is distributed to five church pantries, emergency shelters and social agencies who help low-income families in the Manhattan and Riley County area. Recipients must be referred to the shelters by the Social and Rehabilitation Services.

Jim Peterson, manager of the Westloop Dillons, said that his store became involved when the program was first starting.

Shopping carts and posters, Peterson said, are set up in the front of the store for shoppers to leave donations. Food brought from home may also be dropped off at the store.

Pat Lynch, manager of Food 4 Less, said they got involved one or two years ago because he hated to see products go to waste. Shoppers respond well to the drive, especially around the holidays, he said.

The Bread Basket, which has a food drive each Fourth of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving and Christmas, also accepts donations throughout the year.

Dog laws: the controversy continues

The American Pit Bull Terrier comprises only 1 percent of the U.S. dog population, but the breed has become the No. 1 issue because of the occurrence of dog attacks and enactment of vicious dog laws.

The controversy surrounding pit bull terriers continues as local pit bull owners and lawmakers express growing concern.

"I do not want to delude the public with the phrase 'vicious dog,' but I am going (after) the breed and will propose banning the American Pit Bull Terrier from the city of Manhattan," said Mayor Gene Klingler.

City commissioners are scheduled to address the issue of pit bull terriers and vicious dogs in Manhattan at a work session Sept. 29, Klingler said. He would like to amend the vicious animal ordinance that is already in effect and include pit bulls if it is constitutionally possible.

"I also think that once the wheels are turning, the county commission will investigate the possibilities of banning the pit bull terrier from the county," Klingler said.

PIT BULL ATTACKS

In the last 18 months, 12 of the 18 dog-related fatalities reported in the United States — 67 percent — were attacks by pit bull terriers. The most recent report of a pit bull attack involved a 5-year-old girl in Kansas City, Kan. The girl, Kia White, was bitten on the face, right eye, right ear and neck when she went to pick an apple from the tree in her grandfather's back yard. The report by the Associated Press indicated the pit bull was contained in the yard by a long chain.

To some people, the American Pit Bull Terrier is an affectionate, gentle dog that is wonderful with children and people.

Due to its background and breed, however, the dog has tendencies to become vicious and attack without warning or provocation.

Christopher Nazario, junior in pre-veterinary medicine and pit bull owner, said the problem is not with the dog, but with the owners of the dogs.

"They are a very loving and gentle dog when they are raised the right way," Nazario said. "They become a time-bomb when they are used as fighting dogs and could hurt someone or something very badly."

There remains no definite source for statistics of attacks on humans by the pit bull terrier, but some pit bull owners insist the media is overreacting to reported pit bull attacks.

The difference between a pit bull attack and that of other vicious dogs is the way the dog attacks. Normally, larger dogs bite once and release their victims, but the pit bull clamps down and literally rips its victim apart, crushing bone and flesh in the process.

The big question is why these dogs attack people and — in some instances — kill them. Some people assume the pit bull attacks because it is trained to fight. This is partially true; the pit bull terrier can be trained to fight with other dogs. The pit bull may attack a human being if it thinks its owner or territory is in danger.

"Pit bulls are very territorial animals," Nazario said. "They could act threatening or possibly aggressive toward intruders in their area, just like a person might likely shoot an intruder in their home."

PIT BULL LEGISLATION

According to "The Complete Dog Book," the official American Kennel Club publication, the pit bull first came to America around 1870. Some pit bull breeders date its arrival much earlier.

In 1935, the American Kennel Club decided to recognize the pit bull as a breed. The dogs were given the formal name Staffordshire Terrier, so named after the place of origin in England. They are now bred as show dogs. Since that time, the AKC refuses to register any dog with the name prefix "pit" because of the pit bull terrier's negative reputation.

That reputation may lead to legislation in Kansas to ban the pit bull. According to Neal Worman, chief of staff for Attorney General Bob Stephen, K.S.A. 21-3418 is the existing statute legislating vicious animals.

Under the law, it is a misdemeanor to "knowingly allow or fail to take ordinary care" to keep an animal from threatening another animal or person.

"It wouldn't surprise me to see some proposals raised in the next legislative session," Worman said. "He (Stephen) would generally be supportive of actions taken to better protect the public."

State Rep. Ginger Barr, R-51st, said she will be working with Sen. Jeanne Hoferer, R-18th, and Rep. Dave Miller, R-43rd, on possible legislation.

"I'm opposed to outlawing pit bulls," Barr said. "I do support a vicious animal law, though, that would require higher liability insurance."

In Florida, pit bull owners are required to carry $50,000 worth of liability insurance and must register the dogs in the same way handguns are registered.

Barr said she is wary of outlawing a certain breed because of the macho status symbol with which the dog may become identified. She indicated the AKC has "model" legislation dealing with vicious animals but the lawmakers needed to work through the details.

VICIOUS DOG ORDINANCES

Neither Manhattan nor Riley County has an ordinance that singles out the pit bull terrier. In 1980, however, a law was passed in regard to any "vicious animal" running at large in the city.

In the event of a vicious dog bite or injury, the person convicted shall be fined a minimum of $50.

Jim Pearson, assistant city manager, explained the law is not legal protection for individuals. People who are attacked may individually file suit against the dog's owner.

"Many dogs are likely to bite. The issue is whether or not a pit bull terrier is going to bite and hang on or let go," Pearson said. "Our greatest concern is for all animals that may be classified as vicious or any that could harm an individual."

Many cities examine vicious dog attacks on a case-by-case basis, Pearson explained.

"But now with the controversy and the growing concern from citizens, something needs to be done to ensure the public's safety," he said.

Some local pit bull owners have been warned by a letter from the county attorney that states proper care is being taken to restrict their pit bull terriers from running at large and destroying private and personal property.

Carol Brandert, president of the Kansas Federation of Humane Societies, said an earlier proposal to regulate vicious dogs was dropped in the Kansas Legislature two years ago because of the claim that it would discriminate against owners of a certain breed.

Brandert said they would like to see law enforcement officials shut down illegal dog-fighting.

Pet pit bull not vicious, professor says

For 13 years, companion 'people lover' — not killer

By Tom Denzel
Staff Writer

It may be true that "a dog is a man's best friend," but in one woman's case, the "best friend" is a pit bull terrier.

In the 13 years that Roberta Applegate, professor in journalism and mass communications, has had her pit bull terrier, there has been only one instance when her dog has shown any aggressive behavior.

Despite the reputation of the breed, Applegate said her pet has been a good companion to her, and she insists that her pit bull terrier still makes a good pet.

She said she could agree with most people who believe that pit bulls are, by nature, a very aggressive animal.

"But, their upbringing has a great deal to do with their aggressive and abnormal behavior," Applegate said.

The pit bull terrier has been attracting considerable attention in recent months. The breed, however, comprises only 1 percent — or half a million — of the total dog population in the United States.

In the past year almost 67 percent of the confirmed dog-related fatalities in the U.S. have been caused by the American Pit Bull Terrier. Often, it is small children who are the victims of unprovoked attacks.

With these numbers, and no definite source of animal-attack statistics to back up the allegations being brought against the pit bulls, it is hard for breeders to determine if the dogs are getting the brunt of the situation or if there is a cause for the growing concern.

"Not all pit bulls are vicious animals."

—Roberta Applegate

Applegate said she realizes that the pit bull is a stronger animal and its jaws can be lethal, but she is upset with the bad stereotype that has surrounded the breed lately.

"Not all pit bulls are vicious animals," Applegate said.

She also pointed out that almost any type of dog will attack if they think their territory is being invaded.

For example, Applegate explained that "one time a pizza delivery man mistakenly jumped my fence looking to deliver to the neighbors."

"He knocked on my back door, but instead of my dog growling and trying to get to the person on the other side, he sat wagging his tail, waiting to see who was at the door."

She said her pit bull is a "people-lover" — not a killer.

Applegate said she no longer takes her pit bull on walks. The reason she said is for her own safety and that of her dog.

She went on to say she had the dog neutered because she doesn't want her pit bull's offspring to fall into the wrong hands and become a victim of abuse.

File/John Sleezer

Roberta Applegate, professor of journalism and mass communications, has owned her pit bull for 13 years. She says her companion is gentle and has shown aggressive behavior only once.

U-LearN volunteers answer questions

Service requesting prominent location

By Nancy Hill
Collegian Reporter

Tucked away in the basement of Holton Hall is K-State's University Enhancement and Resource Network, more commonly known as U-LearN.

U-LearN, established five years ago, was formed from the consolidation of two other campus services: ULN (U-LearN), then a trivia phone line, and SECS, the sex education counseling service.

Debbie Paap, senior in pre-art therapy and co-director of U-LearN, said that U-LearN is simply a friendly place where students help other students acquire the answers they need about any subject.

"We distribute 30,000 pamphlets and answer 30,000 calls a year," Paap said. "Our goal is that anyone can come in and feel comfortable...we'll answer any question."

U-LearN is funded through Student Senate allocations as a campus organization.

Paap said the organization is growing to the point where additional funding needs to be sought.

"We're in a really sticky stage...student government is helping us out as much as they can, but they only have so much money," Paap said. "We need to get out...if we could get more money or a more visible spot on campus we could be of better service to the students."

Paap said a small budget also makes the acquisition of current resources difficult. Of the thousands of pamphlets handed out each year, most are received by U-LearN from related businesses and companies who send free information.

"We run on such a limited budget it's frustrating," she said. "We can't have current information without the funds to get it."

Paap, who began working at U-LearN as a volunteer five years ago, said U-LearN is a rewarding experience for those who volunteer their time and effort.

"Anyone can volunteer — we have tons of freshmen, international students and transfer students who volunteer because they want to get involved. You don't have to know everything about K-State or anything else to work here. It's so funny, when people call for a number we're just looking it up in the phone book like anyone else."

—Debbie Paap

"Anyone can volunteer—we have tons of freshmen, international students and transfer students who volunteer because they want to get involved," Paap said. "You don't have to know everything about K-State or anything else to work here...it's so funny, when people call for a number we're just looking it up in the phone book like anyone else."

Two co-directors (one assistant director and a faculty adviser) oversee U-LearN. The staff also includes six work-study positions.

U-LearN's information and knowledge are concentrated into five major areas: career exploration, sexuality, wellness, study skills and general information. U-LearN has created its own series of pamphlets addressing topics such as anorexia nervosa, effective studying, herpes and AIDS with K-State statistics and places on or near campus to go for additional information.

"We've even set up a program with the speech department to create possible speech topics and have the information available on file for students to use," Paap said.

Over the years, Paap said the questions asked by students have ranged from "Do fish sleep with their eyes open?" to concerns about pregnancy testing and anorexia nervosa.

"Most calls are general campus calls about entertainment, department phone numbers and services on campus," Paap said. "By no means are we known as a phone crisis line, but we're very close to the counseling center and they oversee us."

"U-LearN is trying to be a friendly, accessible place for students, a place where students can help other students," Paap said. "We would like to be more accessible...more students need to know we're here and that we can be beneficial."

Fire destroys 189,000 acres

By The Associated Press

National Guardsmen were called out Wednesday and firefighters flew in from around the nation to help weary crews battling fires in four Western states that blackened 137,000 acres and forced some people to flee their homes.

Some fires went unattended because fire crews were needed elsewhere. Dense smoke from some fires kept aircraft from being used to drop water.

More than 300 California National Guardsmen were summoned to help in hard-hit Tuolumne County, along with aircraft and 90 trucks, said Guard spokeswoman Sgt. Carolyn Hamilton.

Lightning-spawned fires since Sunday had charred 89,115 acres of brush and timber in northern California, swelling by 20,000 acres in less than 24 hours.

"There are now 910 fires going," said John Carter at the joint state-federal fire information center in Sacramento, Calif. "We have 11,000 people fighting the fires."

It is the worst onslaught in California since the lightning-plagued summer of 1977, when the Marble-Cone fire in the Los Padres National Forest blackened nearly 200,000 acres, according to fire officials.

Oregon had more than 600 fires, charring at least 31,000 acres.

The biggest single fire, in the central Idaho mountains, was a 32-day-old, 15,000-acre blaze being allowed to burn in extremely rugged terrain inside a wilderness area. Firefighters at Pocatello, Idaho, were close to containing a fire that destroyed one house and threatened others on the outskirts of the city.

Southern California has had more than 30 fires, and arson was suspected in at least three cases. One fire in Washington forced evacuation of campers in a nearby state park.

Firefighters from several states were on their way to join the battle against the Oregon fires, including crews from Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Tennessee and the Northeast. At least eight houses had been destroyed.

"We would definitely have to characterize the fire situation in southwest Oregon as in a blowup state today," said Ron DeHart of the Salem-based Oregon Unified Coordination Group, which coordinates state and federal efforts. "It does not look good. We were really hoping for a mistake in the forecast that calls for some winds... Otherwise, we may be doing an eyeball-to-flames standoff."

DeHart said 3,200 firefighters were battling the blazes, with more arriving hourly from the East Coast. Crews remained short-handed because larger fires in California were given priority.

Officials said 25 houses were evacuated from Takilma on the edge of the Siskiyou National Forest, along with some residents in the Sykes Creek and Savage Creek areas near the town of Rogue River.

Alcohol treatment programs lack state funding, SRS says

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A state official told the House Interim Committee on Federal and State Affairs Wednesday that funding for state programs are inadequate to combat the problems that come pouring out of bottles.

Andrew O'Donovan, commissioner for alcohol and drug abuse for the state Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, said the "working poor," whose lives can be devastated by alcoholism, are especially underserved by state treatment programs.

The interim committee is examining the distribution of funds raised by the state's excise tax on alcohol. No proposal for a liquor tax increase has been made.

O'Donovan told the committee alcohol abuse costs Kansans an estimated $956 million a year in the form of lost productivity, treatment and law enforcement.

"I think society is going to pay for this problem, one way or another," said O'Donovan, former administrator of the Thomas County Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education and Prevention Program.

Kansas spends about $7 million for state alcohol-treatment programs and funnels another $2.2 million to local communities for similar programs.

"It is apparent these resources are not adequate to address the scope of problems statewide."

Rebels discuss murders

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — Conspirators in plots leading to last week's bloody coup attempt discussed killing Americans and burning CIA headquarters in Manila, the government said Wednesday.

A general who commanded the army under deposed President Ferdinand E. Marcos was involved in plotting a military takeover, said the report, prepared by President Corazon Aquino's security force and released by the Presidential Palace.

Aquino, in a national broadcast Wednesday, said 53 people were killed in Friday's coup attempt, including 12 loyal soldiers, 19 rebel troops and 22 civilians. Hundreds were wounded, including her son, Benigno Aquino III.

Col. Gregorio "Gringo" Honasan, who led the coup attempt, remained at large, and the military intensified air and ground searches for him in Manila and north and east of the capital.

The "after battle" report said Marcos loyalists met July 14 at a Manila restaurant to discuss "CIA support

Marcos followers attempt overthrow for destabilization," bombing campaigns, the assassination of three unidentified Americans and "burning of CIA headquarters." It did not elaborate.

It named Maj. Gen. Josephus Ramas, former army commander, as being involved in plotting a military takeover. Aquino fired Ramas after taking power in a February 1986 civilian-military uprising that ousted Marcos, who fled to Hawaii.

The report said intelligence agents learned that Ramas and Honasan planned a "blitzkrieg attack" last June, but it was postponed.

The charges about killing Americans and the CIA were in the background part of the report, and it was unclear whether all the alleged plots were part of the same conspiracy and why other plots were postponed.

Maj. Gen. Eduardo Ermita, deputy chief of staff, declined comment and said he was unaware of the report.

Aquino said 50 officers and 1,300 enlisted men took part in the revolt, but did not say if that included those who joined in Cebu City, San Fernando and southeastern Luzon. She said 1,033 mutineers were in custody.

"I grieve for the dead on both sides. When I ordered the attack I knew that there would be violence. But it was necessary because I had to prevent greater violence."

—Corazon Aquino

The mutineers "turned their backs on their duties and pursued their own goals," Aquino concluded, switching from English to Tagalog, a

Malayan dialect spoken in the Philippines. "They ignored the lives of our brothers because all they wanted was to kill me and run our government."

"I grieve for the dead on both sides," she said. "When I ordered the attack I knew that there would be violence. But it was necessary because I had to prevent greater violence."

Honasan led attacks Friday on the presidential palace, broadcast stations and key military installations, including armed forces headquarters at Camp Aguinaldo.

The rebels said they were acting because of the government's handling of the Communist insurgency.

But the residents have continued to complain, saying the noise and odors are decreasing their property value.

"In 1979, my property was worth $120,000," Fina said. "Now it's only worth $90,000, but they say the replacement rate is $105,000. We couldn't afford to sell if we wanted to."

But, he said, the noise and odor problems are minute compared to the potential water contamination.

"Our wells are 1,500 to 1,800 feet away," he said.

Another concern of Fina's is that the Shilling site is in the Kansas River floodway and could cause an obstruction in the event of a flood.

Wedel said the county has done all it intends to regarding the Shilling plant.

"We addressed all that in a report three years ago," he said. "They've done everything they said they'd do. I really don't think there's much of an issue here."

whose ports were closed soon after the war began, and since last September has been attacking ships owned by or serving the sheikdom.

Eleven of Kuwait's 21 tankers have been given the American flag so Navy ships can protect them. Convoys began July 21.

Speedboats operated by Iranian commandos fired on a Greek tanker and Cypriot freighter during the day Wednesday after overnight attacks on tankers of South Korean, Japanese and Spanish registry. A speedboat raked a Kuwait-flag container ship with machine gun fire Monday.

No injuries were reported and all the ships either reached nearby ports or continued on their way, according to shipping salvage executives and Lloyd's Shipping Intelligence.

In Dubai, shipping executives said 20 crewmen of the 24,349-ton Kuwaiti container ship Jebel Ali refused to sail with the ship after the attack. The sources said the sailors, all Indians, were asking to be repatriated.

Iran does not acknowledge responsibility for the speedboat attacks, but they are viewed in the Persian Gulf as reprisals for Iraqi air strikes on shipping or other targets.

Shipping sources said an Iraqi target not identified previously was the Sanandaj, a 253,837-ton Iranian supertanker hit Sunday near Kharg island.

Iraqi raiders strike tankers owned by Iran or chartered to shuttle crude from Kharg to a makeshift terminal at Larak Island in the Strait of Hormuz, the gulf's narrow southern entrance. Larak is beyond the range of Iraqi planes unless they refuel in flight.

War communiques from Iraq say its air raids on land and sea targets are intended to keep Iran from using increased oil export revenues gained during the lull to continue the war, and to force it to accept a July 20 cease-fire resolution.

things in it we do want and vote for it on that basis," Talkington said.

Here are key elements of the Senate plan:

Revenue to fund the program:

Motor fuel tax increases — Raise the gasoline and diesel fuel taxes by four cents a gallon on Oct. 1, 1987, with the state deriving $420 million from three cents of the increase over the 10-year life of the program, and giving local units of government $126 million from one cent of the increase. Also, raise the motor fuel taxes another penny on Jan. 1, 1989, with all of the additional $126 million revenue going to the state. That is a total of $546 million new revenue for the state program.

Vehicle registration fee increases — Raise passenger vehicle registration fees as much as 100 percent on the smallest cars — which now pay only $13 a year — and lesser percentages on other cars, and raise truck fees by 35 percent, generating $388 million over the life of the program.

How the $934 million would be spent:

New construction projects, $526 million; so-called "debottlenecking" projects, mainly in metropolitan areas, $50 million; maintenance shortfall, but no enhancement, $348 million; city connecting links, $5 million, and increased aid to local transportation programs for the handicapped and elderly, $3 million.

The Talkington plan would not designate in law which highway corridors are to receive the new construction money, but would include the "sense of the Senate" that it wants the Department of Transportation to determine priority.

Emporia site to be cleaned up

By The Associated Press

EMPORIA — State officials say they hope to have a spill at a toxic waste site north of Emporia cleaned up within the next few weeks.

The spill occurred in June when a bulldozer hit a buried barrel, which ruptured. Tests by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment determined that the barrel contained a highly toxic pesticide, methyl parathion.

The Emporia Fire Department performed a preliminary cleanup of the area north of the old Rinker School, using a solid material to soak up the pesticide. The material, the ruptured barrel and clothing worn by the emergency cleanup workers were sealed in two barrels.

The two barrels were taken to the city-county landfill southwest of town and will remain there until they can be disposed of properly by the state.

The contaminated land will be covered with plastic until the contaminated dirt can be removed by the state.

Because the pesticide is a hazardous material, it is the state's responsibility to remove it and clean the site. Money from the federal Environmental Protection Agency will be used to pay for the cleanup.

Paul Belt, environmental technician for the KDHE Bureau of Environmental Technology, said a private contractor will be hired to remove the contaminated dirt and take the barrels from the landfill to a licensed hazardous waste disposal site.

The disposal site will be chosen by the contractor.

Belt said a metal detector will be used to search for any other barrels buried at the site.

Soviet court begins trial for W. German teen-ager

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — West German teen-ager Mathias Rust apologized to a Soviet court Wednesday for flying a single-engine plane into Red Square. He said it started as a mission of peace but ended as the greatest mistake of his life.

"My flight was not the best action to bring this about. I'm very sorry," Rust, a 19-year-old resident of suburban Hamburg, said during nearly five hours of testimony on the first day of trial at the Soviet Supreme Court.

It was his first public appearance since he piloted a Cessna 172b across the Soviet border on May 28 and set it down amid hundreds of astonished pedestrians on Red Square near the Kremlin, the seat of Soviet power. The flight led to a shake-up of the Soviet military establishment.

Rust faces charges of hooliganism, illegally crossing the Soviet border and violating international flight rules, and he could get 10 years in prison. The trial is expected to last three days.

Dressed in a blue suit, a light blue shirt and tie, Rust called himself "a very sentimental man" who meant no harm to anyone.

He said he wanted to meet with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to discuss a new political system that would bring east and west together in "full democracy, democracy in the fullest sense of the word."

"I sought the source of peace, and the source of peace is not in Washington, but in Moscow," said Rust. Pale but poised, he spoke in a firm, clear voice and did not appear to be intimidated.

The youth's mother, Monika, also testified in his behalf, saying he wished only for world peace.

Her testimony and Rust's portrayed the tall, thin pilot as a loner who was worried about international relations but who never took part in the West German peace movement.

Supreme Court Judge Robert Tikhomirov and prosecutor Vladimir Andreyev repeatedly reminded Rust that he could have killed or injured many people by landing on crowded Red Square.

Rust first told Tikhomirov after the charges were read that "I am aware of my guilt," but later he said he did not acknowledge guilt on the charge of malicious hooliganism because he had no intent to harm anyone.

"My flight did not have any aggressive intentions," he said.

Under questioning from his Soviet lawyer, Vsevolod Yakovlev, and prosecutor Andreyev, Rust told the court that with the perspective of the last 14 weeks in Lefortovo Prison, he realizes that his approach was wrong.

"I threatened the lives of people. That's my opinion today. I will never repeat it," he said. "It's the greatest mistake I've made in my life."

Asked why he chose to fly illegally to Red Square rather than ask Soviet officials for permission for the flight, he said, "I had to have the echo of world public opinion. That was possible, according to my opinion then, by a flight that didn't correspond with any norms."

Rust sometimes smiled at the questions from the judge and Andreyev.

Rust began his journey with a flight in mid-May from Hamburg to Iceland.

After he brought the plane down between the Kremlin wall and St. Basil's Cathedral, "I waited for what would happen next. I only thought about landing in Moscow. What would happen after, I practically didn't think about."

Airlines to inform customers

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Transportation Department, trying to spur the airlines into improving service, directed major air carriers Wednesday to provide consumers with monthly information on flight delays and lost baggage.

The airlines will have to provide its on-time performance record to the department for public distribution and include each flight's on-time record in the computerized reservation systems used by most travel agents, officials said.

"We believe that disclosure of this information will help reduce consumer frustration with airline delays," Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole told a news conference.

She said the disclosure requirements "should make the carriers more responsive to consumers and give them additional incentives to compete on the basis of better performance."

The airlines agreed to cooperate. But William Bolger, president of the Air Transport Association, which represents the major carriers, accused the department of being "preoccupied with reporting on problems rather than solving problems."

The airlines have argued that many of the industry's problems stem from shortcomings in the government's air traffic control system and overburdened airports.

Airlines will begin providing the monthly performance information to the department next month, but officials said they do not expect the first summaries to be available to the public until early next year. The on-time information is expected to be available to travel agents through the computerized reservation systems in December.

The requirements apply to the nation's 14 largest air carriers and to flights to and from 27 major U.S. airports, covering 63 percent of domestic flights.

Delays caused by mechanical problems will be exempt from the reporting requirement because of concern that pressure to report such delays might pose safety problems, Dole said. She said all other delays — whenever a plane departs or arrives at least 15 minutes after the scheduled time — must be reported, including those caused by severe weather.

The government acted amid a soaring number of complaints from travelers about poor airline service in recent months and as Congress is considering legislation aimed at forcing the airlines to improve service.

Rep. James Howard, D-N.J., chairman of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee, said the new rule will not affect plans to push for passage of a broader airline consumer protection bill later this month. Similar legislation is under consideration in the Senate.

In addition to requiring airlines to disclose consumer information, the House legislation calls for penalties against airlines when flights are delayed for other than safety reasons and requires each airline and the Transportation Department to establish toll-free telephone hotlines for complaints.

Dole characterized some of the provisions under consideration by Congress as "heavy-handed regulation" that would be too costly and cause airlines to raise ticket prices.

The department's new reporting requirements cover delayed and canceled flights and complaints received about mishandled baggage. It does not require reporting in other consumer protection areas, such as how many people are bumped from a flight because of overbooking.

Officials said the flight delay and lost baggage statistics from the airlines will be distributed to the news media and to others who request it as part of the department's monthly consumer report.

A WEEK AT KANSAS STATE

See ordering information below

At 12:01 a.m. on a Sunday morning in October 1986, a camera shutter was clicked. What happened during the next 192 hours was called AWAKS (A Week at Kansas State).

Former Kansas State University photographers were given the opportunity to return to campus to make pictures of college life in the '80s as it existed for one week during October.

Kansas State has numerous alumni photographers in positions of prominence throughout the country. Some 30 alumni and nearly 15 current student photographers made up the AWAKS shooting team. The result of exposing 1,900 rolls of black-and-white and color film with more than 68,000 exposures is a 10-by-14-inch coffee-table book to be published in September 1987. You can relive the experience of attending college in the 1980s at the nation's first land-grant institution through the pages of this special edition.

Containers to be allowed in stadium

By The Collegian Staff

K-State athletic director Larry Travis and Kansas governor Mike Hayden both made announcements Wednesday relating to K-State season football opener against Austin Peay State University.

Travis announced the policy for bringing containers to this year's Wildcat home football games at KSU Stadium.

According to Travis, individuals attending each of this year's six home games will be permitted to bring small, non-breakable thermoses into the stadium.

"We are modifying our policy from last year when we did not allow any containers to be brought into the stadium."

—Larry Travis

However, no glass containers, cans or any type of cooler will be allowed inside the stadium.

"We are modifying our policy from last year when we did not allow any containers to be brought into the stadium," Travis said.

"With this new policy, we do hope individuals will continue to use good judgment so that everyone will be able to enjoy each of our home football games this season."

K-State will take to the gridiron Saturday in a 6 p.m. contest with Austin Peay State at KSU Stadium. Following the game, country and western singer Willie Nelson will perform in concert "under the lights" at KSU Stadium.

In honor of Nelson, Hayden has proclaimed that this Saturday will be "Willie Nelson Day" throughout the state.

The proclamation states that the day will be observed "in appreciation of Willie Nelson's outstanding contribution to the cause of the American farmer."

Parrish names Hanson as starter

Tim Hanson was selected by Coach Stan Parrish as the starting quarterback for the Wildcats season opener against Austin Peay State University Saturday in KSU Stadium.

Staff/Andy Nelson

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

It wasn't exactly a quarterback controversy where the team was split over who should start, such as the National Football League's Dallas Cowboys have experienced in recent years.

But head football coach Stan Parrish

Hanson and Gary Swim talk before beginning practice Wednesday.

ended the recently resumed battle for K-State's quarterback duties Wednesday when he named Tim Hanson the starter for Saturday's season and home opener against Austin Peay State.

Hanson replaced highly touted junior college transfer Gary Swim who won the starting nod after spring drills. But Parrish said it wasn't because the transfer from Snow Community College in Utah was incompetent.

"I think rather than looking at it from a guy isn't getting it done, I think we've got two that are getting it done," Parrish said.

Swim had topped the depth chart until Aug. 22 when Hanson completed 5 of 8 passes for 62 yards, including a 51-yard scoring strike to wide receiver John Williams, in an intrasquad scrimmage. At that point, Parrish elevated Hanson, 6'1" tall, 195 pounds, into a first-string tie.

Parrish attributed his decision to Hanson's improved level of play and previous experience. Hanson started last season's finale against Colorado and completed 5 of 9 attempts for 161 yards against Iowa State in a relief role.

Overall last season, Hanson completed 18 of 43 passes for 268 yards and one touchdown.

"We finally settled on Tim just because he has had such a great camp," Parrish said. "He is in the midst of a hot streak and is in command of everything we're doing right now."

"Gary's played well. Tim's just elevated his level of play to a point where he had to be considered. He's got experience on his side," he added.

Hanson said the tables turned after the August scrimmage.

"Just the simple fact that I looked good and Gary didn't," he said. "Just like in the spring...one scrimmage he looked good and I didn't."

The senior from Westminster, Calif., said gaining a proper mental attitude this summer and improving his consistency were his keys to winning the starting role.

"I think just from the spring to now I just had to be more consistent. It's not that I had to elevate my play. It's not that I gained some miraculous tools...over the summer. It's just making the right reads and throws and minimizing mistakes which I felt hurt me in the spring."

"Over the summer I had to gear my mind into coming back and doing the best I could," Hanson said. "I knew I was No. 2. I accepted that. I just went out and made the right plays and right throws and was consistent."

Swim earned the starting nod last spring with a 87-yard, 10-of-14 performance in the varsity-alumni game. Though the 6-foot-3-inch, 180-pound junior faltered in the August scrimmage, he said his level of play hadn't slipped.

"Coach was waiting to see if I went in the hole (after the scrimmage), but I didn't," Swim said. "I've had probably my better practices the last week and a half. I feel good about myself."

And both players said the competition will not hurt their attitudes toward each other. Instead, they will concentrate on winning "no matter who starts."

"To me it's just really the same as it was before. You can't really be best friends...but I'm going to back whatever he does. If he's playing, shoot, we've got to win with him. If I'm playing, we've got to win with me," Hanson said.

Volleyball squad crushes UMKC

By Jeff Rapp
Sports Editor

The women's volleyball team got off to what head coach Scott Nelson called a "surprising" start in its season opener last night.

The Wildcats, behind the strong serving of 5-11 senior Kristi Jacquart, defeated the University of Missouri-Kansas City Kangaroos 15-0, 15-1, 15-1, Wednesday night in Ahearn Field House.

Jacquart broke a three-game match school record, dealing eight service aces, as the 'Cats defeated UMKC in only 40 minutes.

Nelson said the victory was a good way to start off the season.

"Winning never hurts your season and we really won solidly tonight, which kind of surprised me," Nelson said. "I really expected us to have some more mental lapses."

As far as the team's progress thus far in the season is concerned, Nelson said the 'Cats intensity carried over from practices into the match.

"We've really been practicing at that (high) intensity level and it's nice to see a good continuity level of what we do in practice to what we did tonight on the court."

"In an actual match situation where you're playing an opponent, you can never tell (what's going to happen), but our intensity level (remained constant) the entire match — even when we had a big lead in all three games. That's probably the most pleasing thing," Nelson said.

Although K-State dominated the match and the other team, Nelson said the Wildcats still have some areas that need polishing.

Among those areas Nelson listed, serving errors after the opponent called time out were the most noticeable.

"Those are just minor strategy things we need to talk about and try to clear up," Nelson said.

The head coach also said he was concerned with sound fundamental technique from his players — not with records being set or outstanding individual play.

"I think everyone really played solidly tonight," he said. "I paid particular attention to our defensive adjustments, our reading situations and getting to the right position. I didn't look at who was getting lots of kills or who was hot and who wasn't."

Nelson cited concentration as another important attribute of his team's winning effort.

"Our level of concentration allowed us to play strategically flawless defense. We had great positioning and I think that's one of the things that really helped us control this match. We dug almost every ball that was attacked," Nelson said.

In the hasty victory, there were contributions from almost the entire team, as 11 of the 13 players on the roster saw action.

"I don't know if we really have our starting lineup yet, but our most experienced players pretty much started. Everyone came in and contributed," Nelson said.

As happy as Nelson was with the initial win, he conceded the Kangaroos are far from being the 'Cats' toughest opponent of the season.

"It's a young program and the players really haven't had time to play or really train together," Nelson said.

"They're going to develop as a team, but it's hard to start off against a more experienced program (like K-State's)."

"I was glad to see the strides we've made with our program were evident in our first match. Usually on your first match, you have a lot of pre-game jitters and you're nervous. That makes you make unforced errors, but we seemed pretty well relaxed once we got our first couple of points under our belt," Nelson said.

Standout junior Mary Kinsey had nine kills to lead the squad, while sophomores Kristin Martin and Leslie Kull had 15 assists each, to lead all setters.

The 'Cats also set a three-game match record for hitting percentage, scoring on over 63 percent of their hits. That bettered the old record by almost 15 percent.

Clock scrapped; created 'circus'

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — NFL owners bowed to pressure from coaches Wednesday and scrapped the experimental 40-second clock, reinstating the old 30-second clock for the regular season and playoffs.

In a vote taken by computerized teletype, 13 teams voted to retain the clock and 15 voted against it. Under NFL by-laws, any new rule must be approved by 21 of the 28 teams.

Under the experiment, approved by the owners last spring, the 40-second clock was started as soon as the whistle blew to end the previous play. After timeouts, teams had 25 seconds to put the ball into play.

Under the old rule, which will be back in use for the final week of the exhibition season, teams had 30 seconds to snap the ball after the referee signalled it ready for play.

Proponents of the 40-second clock, led by Tex Schramm of the Dallas Cowboys, argued that not only did it speed up the games but that they seemed better paced.

According to NFL figures, the 44 exhibition games played with the 40-second clock this season averaged 3 hours, 5 minutes, 42 seconds compared to 3:09:05 for the first 44 exhibitions last year. Regular-season games last year averaged 3:11:40.

But proponents concurred that there was little chance for permanent approval because of the opposition of the coaches.

"I like it, but the coaches are running the league when it comes to things like that," said Art Modell, owner of the Cleveland Browns.

Although there was no debate Wednesday because of the computerized nature of the vote, some variation on the new system could be brought up again at the winter meetings next March.

NFL players may strike; negotiations continue

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — As contract negotiations between players and owners resumed for the first time since Aug. 14, NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle said Wednesday he would be willing to get involved "at the right time" to help avoid a strike.

Spokesmen for both the NFL Players Association and Management Council confirmed that talks had resumed at an undisclosed site in the Washington area. In an effort to avoid prolonged wrangling over minor issues, they were limited to small delegations for each side.

Negotiations on the new contract began April 20, but little progress has been made since on either minor issues or the players' principal demand — for free agency without compensation.

The union's executive board voted Monday to set a strike date to be recommended to the board of player representatives Sept. 8. The date was undisclosed, but the Baltimore Sun and Washington Times reported Wednesday that it is after the second or week of the season, which begins Sept. 13 with the fourth week as the alternative date.

Answers sought in sheriff's discharge

By The Associated Press

COUNCIL GROVE — The state attorney general's office is investigating a dispute that has left Sheriff M.G. "Corky" Woodward as the only officer in the Morris County sheriff's department.

County Attorney Michael Powers said the undersheriff apparently was fired and the deputy sheriff and reserve deputy resigned in sympathy last weekend.

Woodward said Deputy Gary Carrier and Reserve Deputy Tom Furman responded Saturday to a pedestrian-car collision in Dwight, in northern Morris County.

The two were uncertain whether the pedestrian had been struck deliberately or by accident, and telephoned Undersheriff Duane Davis in Council Grove.

Woodward, who had also gone to Dwight, spoke with Davis and a dispute arose as to whether Davis should file an accident report, Woodward said.

Woodward said Tuesday that he had not fired anyone, and he expected Davis to return to duty by Friday.

He said he welcomed the investigation and would cooperate.

However, Davis said he was definitely fired.

"It was a firing in no uncertain terms," Davis said Wednesday. "He told me to leave my...badge on the desk if I wasn't going to fill out the report."

Davis said Carrier and Furman had already decided to quit the force before they found out he had been fired.

Morris County, in east-central Kansas, has a population of about 6,000.

Nation faces strike as elections near

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — Government and opposition leaders agreed Wednesday to hold the first direct presidential election in a generation by Dec. 20.

They also agreed that the government should not intervene in labor disputes and promised legislation to increase the rights of workers. But labor turmoil continued as striking shipyard workers went on a rampage and autoworkers fought riot police.

"It was quite significant that we held the first official talks," Roh Tae-woo, president of the governing Democratic Justice Party, said after his first meeting with Kim Young-sam of the main opposition Democratic Reunification Party. Roh is his party's candidate to succeed President Chun Doo-hwan, whose term ends in December.

Chun declared June 30, after weeks of anti-government protest, that he would accept opposition demands for such democratic changes as replacing the electoral college with direct presidential elections.

He also agreed to ease government control over unions, which has made strikes virtually illegal and helped boost South Korea's export-based economy by keeping wages low.

Workers in mining, transportation and major export industries began strikes and other job actions within days of his speech, demanding higher pay, better working conditions and independent unions.

About 15,000 strikers from the nation's largest shipyard marched through the southern port of Ulsan behind 80 bulldozers, trucks and forklifts and sat down outside the city hall.

Part of the crowd stormed the building, set fire to its garage and overturned about 20 cars, burning some of them. Firetrucks were called in to put out the fires, but outnumbered police did not intervene, city officials said.

"It's a terrible situation," one official said by telephone.

Strikers occupied the city hall area for several hours after wage talks broke down at the Hyundai Heavy Industries Co. shipyard.

Police used tear gas to disperse

500 auto workers who built barricades at the Daewoo Motor Co. plant outside Seoul. The country's second largest car manufacturer, a joint venture of the Daewoo conglomerate and General Motors, remained crippled for the eighth day by a sit-in for higher pay.

The Hyundai shipyard strike was a major setback for the government, which intervened to end a strike and lockout Aug. 20. Officials persuaded workers and management to resume operations and talks under a plan calling for a settlement by Tuesday. But no agreement was reached and the strike resumed Tuesday.

Hyundai workers want a 25 percent raise and management offers 11 percent. The Hyundai group of companies also includes South Korea's largest auto manufacturer, which is a major factor in the American subcompact market.

Labor Ministry officials said 750 strikes were in progress Wednesday. Strikers generally seek pay increases of 35-50 percent.

South Koreans worked the world's longest week last year, 54.4 hours.

Class assists career direction

By The Collegian Staff

Students at K-State who are searching for the type of career they would enjoy have a place to turn to for help.

The Career Life Planning Center, located on the second floor of Holton Hall, has a class and instructors to make new students comfortable with finding careers to fit their lifestyles.

"The program provides students with career opportunities they would be interested in later on," said Laurie McCauley, counselor for the educational supportive program and instructor of the career life planning course.

"They are in the program having fun. They grow from the inside and develop the skills they need for careers," she said. McCauley said students enrolled in the career life planning course are given a number of tests in order to help find careers fitting each individual's personality.

"There are two tests we like to use in determining the likes and dislikes of the students," she said. "The Myers-Briggs personality test and the Strong-Campbell interest test give me a good indication of the student's strengths and weaknesses for a particular career."

McCauley said the course is also helpful with interviewing and resume writing skills.

Local legend alligator loves whistle

By The Associated Press

ESTO, Fla. — This Florida Panhandle hamlet is reviving the legend of Two-Toed Tom, a notorious bull alligator who some folks say fell in love with a sawmill whistle after being chased out of Alabama.

"He's a colorful character," said E.W. "Judge" Carswell, a retired newspaper reporter and former chairman of the Florida Folklife Council. "I think he's a lot more colorful than the Loch Ness monster."

Esto's 350 residents are preparing for a Two-Toed Festival this Saturday, a celebration of food, entertainment and story swapping about the giant, voracious reptile, said Marrielle Blount, a town council member who is chairman of the festival.

Interest in "Old Two-Toe," "Old Tom" or "Triple T," named for the toes remaining on one paw after an encounter with a steel trap, was stirred up by Carswell's publication last year of a book on Holmes County history, titled "Holmesteading."

Carswell, who grew up in Esto, devoted a chapter to the Two-Toed Tom legend.

But he wrote that it has been 60 years since anything has been heard from the gator that used to bellow in response to the steam-powered whistle at the Alabama-Florida Lumber Co.'s mill at Noma, Esto's sister town.

"People called me and said, 'You done away with old Two-Toe. He's not gone. He's still around,'" Carswell laughed.

Gators have been reported to live as long as 50 to 60 years.

"I've been hearing about this story ever since I was 10 years old," said Ralph Dupree, a town councilman born in 1912.

"He was a bad fella," Dupree said. "He killed sheep and goats in Alabama ... He would like to have done away with a woman's baby in a cotton patch."

The gator had been a legend in Alabama long before he crossed the state line. The story, at least up to that point, received a measure of immortality in Carl Carmer's book "Stars Fell on Alabama."

According to Carmer's account, the huge red-eyed gator — the worst kind — terrorized southern Alabama before being chased into Florida by a posse.

The gator first attracted attention south of the border with his bellowing response to the whistle at the lumber mill, long since closed, especially during the spring mating season.

"I figure he was mad at that whistle or in love it with, I don't know which," Carswell said.

Carswell said the legend probably is a composite, with Two-Toe blamed for the misdeeds of any and all gators in the area.

Civil rights violations suspected

By Jodi Swengal
Staff Writer

The U.S. Department of Education's Civil Rights Division has begun an investigation into possible Title VI civil rights violations at K-State.

The Rev. Joseph Spence, Manhattan chapter president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the investigation was started in response to a complaint filed Aug. 8 concerning several displays of Confederate battle flags on University property.

In addition, members of the Manhattan branch of the NAACP have asked K-State administrators to increase efforts to recruit and retain black faculty and students.

"There is an extremely low percentage of black faculty members as well as black students at K-State which shows a broad pattern of neglect on the University's part," said Timothy W. Sullivan, communications chairman of the Manhattan NAACP branch.

According to Title VI regulations, the penalty for violation of Title VI is the loss of federal funds applied to a specific program or the loss of funds to the university as a whole.

In the past, Confederate flags have been used in association with racial violence targeted against blacks and have been symbols of discrimination.

"These displays offend the dignity of blacks and hinder their self-actualization and expression as well as the orderly process of education," Spence said.

The flags are another example of neglect on the University's part, Sullivan said.

"Segregation robs every student of a prop-

Tanker attacks persist in Gulf

By The Associated Press

MANAMA, Bahrain — Another convoy of U.S. warships and Kuwaiti tankers steamed south Thursday through the Persian Gulf, where two supply ship crewmen became the first fatalities of renewed tanker attacks by Iran and Iraq.

Iraq said its warplanes raided a tanker, and shipping sources said Iranian speedboat-borne fighters attacked a Japanese tanker and an Italian motorship.

Fire from Iraqi warplanes or Iranian speedboats have hit at least 20 ships registered in nine different nations since Saturday, said gulf-based shipping sources. They say the number at least doubles the average for a month in 1986.

Britain reflagged its first Kuwaiti tanker Thursday off Khor

Fakkan port on the Gulf of Oman, said shipping sources in the United Arab Emirates.

The United States has given its flag to 11 Kuwaiti vessels so the U.S. Navy can protect them from attacks by Iran, which regards Kuwait as an ally of Iraq.

Iran and Iraq, which have been at war since September 1980, reported air strikes on each other's territory Thursday and Iraq claimed its gunners downed an Iranian plane.

The convoy of three U.S.-registered Kuwaiti tankers and Navy escorts leaving Kuwait on Thursday were the seventh one-way convoy since the reflagging operation began July 20.

Shipping sources said they passed Iranian-held Farsi Island, about 140 miles from the sheikdom, in late afternoon. The sour-

Residents enjoy rewards Food service receives top rating

By Debbie Lyons

Exciting, inventive, No. 1.

No, those words are not describing the K-State football record, but instead, they apply to the Residence Hall Food Service. And yes, it is No. 1 in the nation in 1987 for Dining Area Exchange.

John Pence, head of Residence Hall Food Service, said this includes everyday menu planning, weekly special menus such as French Fry Friday, as well as nutrition education.

For 1985-86, K-State won first runner-up in Dining Area Exchange for large schools.

After the second-place finish, Pence said, more time needed to be devoted to the everyday menu design, which is more important for the students than special events menus.

In order to upgrade menu and placemat designs, student artists were hired to do graphics. Nutritional information, compiled by a team of dietitians, was added weekly to table centerpieces, he said.

"I said, 'Let's go for it' and it paid off. We were head and shoulders above everyone else," Pence said.

For 1986-87, K-State was one of 182 schools participating and entered three out of the four contests, going home with prizes in each division they entered, he said.

After working hard to upgrade everyday meals, K-State won grand prize in the ordinary meals division, Pence said.

Regularly, the dining halls have salad bars, french fries available on Fridays at lunch, submarine sandwiches available at supper and Taco Tuesday once a month. Derby Food Center also has a potato bar. A new addition this year is hot bread served at breakfast.

Food Service also won first place large school for catering, based on their beginning-of-the-year dinner for the Home Ecology faculty, Pence said. The dinner was titled "Summer in the City".

TGIFriday

K-State also earned first place large school for their special dinners, featuring the '50s dinner, he said.

"We were two votes out of 100 short of grand prize," Pence said. This dinner included special promotion which ranged from jukeboxes playing '50s music in the dining rooms to a '50s costume contest before the meal.

Pence said food committees offer student input into the program. The committees not only express residents' views about food quality, menus and room decor, but also serve as a taste panel for new products.

The contest was held in Boston this year but is rotated around the nation, he said. The panel of judges included a food service director, a newspaper food editor, a professor of hotel and restaurant management and an editor of a food service magazine. Prizes were awarded in July at the annual meeting of the National Association of College Food Service.

Pence said new additions are always being made.

The addition of a bakery in the basement of Derby Food Center is being planned, he said. The bakery will provide residents with home-style bakery goods.

Also new kitchen equipment to make french bread, submarine sandwiches rolls and pizza dough is being planned, Pence said.

"Our aim is to please students, not to make money," Pence said.

Krause's Lafene plan sparks controversy

By Jill Conger
Collegian Reporter

Vice President Robert Krause advocated Thursday setting up a task force to look into moving the Counseling Center and the Alcohol and Other Drug Education Services from Holton Hall to Lafene Student Health Center. The idea was presented at Student Senate's meeting as a means of keeping the Holton Hall renovation project under budget.

Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene, objected to Krause's proposal.

"We're having this (idea) rammed down our throats," he said. "I don't want to pay for anything students don't want us to pay for."

Krause was the first speaker at the meeting. He spoke on issues surrounding the renovation of Holton Hall, the closing of Lafene's inpatient service and relocating the counseling services in the vacated space.

Krause explained the problems concerning the $780,000 renovation of Holton Hall.

"I want to develop a task force to look into moving the mental health, physical health and counseling services to Lafene," Krause said. "And, other aspects like the financing of the move and implementing a program for the administration of the counseling program."

Krause outlined three alternative plans for the task force to examine and senate to consider. The first alternative considers the original $780,000 renovation plan. It would renovate the first two floors and move the counseling center and the drug and alcohol abuse program.

A second alternative would be to proceed with additional renovations that would increase the overall plan to $1,069,000. The increased figure is due to an addition of an elevator for handicapped accessibility and fire safety improvements to the building. This would call for renovation of the basement, with savings occurring by having fewer office spaces in the building and relocating the Counseling Center.

The final alternative proposed by the administration would be to build upon the original figure and adjust it to consider inflation. That amended figure would be $914,313.

Tout followed by addressing senate about issues concerning the suggested counseling services move to Lafene.

"I think Lafene's funds should be spent within the health center and not outside services," he said.

Tout said he would agree to closing down the inpatient service because it may save money for the health center. Last year, 94 people used the inpatient service. The aver-

Celebration at K-State to honor Alf's 100th

By Candice Leonard
Government Editor

Alfred Mossman Landon will have experienced a century's worth of life in America next Wednesday. In honor of the occasion, the Kansas elder statesman will receive a special birthday greeting from President Ronald Reagan Sunday.

As Reagan promised, he will return for Landon's 100th birthday, and is scheduled to visit the Landon home in west Topeka with his wife Nancy Sunday afternoon.

According to Topeka Mayor Doug Wright's office, the Reagan's motorcade will slow down as it passes near Gage Park so the president can deliver a message over the public address system.

The "birthday party" with Reagan is open only to the press. But, K-State has plans of its own for celebrating Landon's birthday.

The 76th Landon lecture, in a series which began in honor of Gov. Landon, will be presented by his daughter, U.S. Sen. Nancy

Bangladesh's floods kill over 600

DHAKA, Bangladesh — Bangladesh's worst floods in 40 years have killed more than 600 people, damaged nearly 2 million houses and destroyed vast amounts of crops, the government said Thursday.

The unofficial death toll from more than a month of floods, based on newspaper reports, is above 800.

The Flood Relief Coordination Center of the President's Secretariat said 603 people drowned, were killed by collapsing houses or died of diseases such as diarrhea.

Of 172,549 people stricken by diarrheal diseases in the flood regions in August, at least 150 have died, center officials said.

The damaged houses were mostly made of mud and straw. Floods washed away 1,227 road culverts and bridges, and damaged more than 11,000 miles of roads, badly disrupting communications in this country of 103 million people, the officials said.

Crops on more than 4.4 million acres of land were destroyed or damaged in the floods, which began July 23, the officials reported.

The government has distributed about $1 million in cash and 41,982 tons of food grain to flood victims and given out 272,994 garments, they said.

Grandson 'drops in' for party

SALEM, Ore. — Mark Widmer surprised his grandparents at their 60th wedding anniversary party by parachuting 5,000 feet and landing at their feet with a card and red rose.

H.E. Widmer, 88, and Nancy Widmer, 86, of Salem "were kind of at a loss for words," Widmer said.

Widmer, 24, jumped Wednesday evening from a plane, landing in front of 40 to 50 relatives at the party.

Widmer, a Marine stationed in North Carolina, said he hadn't seen his grandparents in four years.

Temperatures, wind fan fires

Scorching temperatures and steady winds fanned a plague of fire across parts of six Western states Thursday, consuming hundreds of thousands of acres of brush and timber and threatening California's towering sequoias.

Jack Wilson, director of the Boise Interagency Fire Control Center, called the situation "extremely critical, primarily in California and southwest Oregon."

"In the national park situation, we're very fearful that they might get into the giant sequoias, which are an irreplaceable resource," he said.

California, Oregon and Idaho bore the brunt of the fires. By mid-day Thursday:

— 12,975 firefighters were battling 1,116 fires which had burned more than 204,000 acres in California.

— 3,500 people fought fires totaling 52,000 acres in Oregon.

— 600 firefighters contended with 23,000 acres of range and forest fires in Idaho.

— A 660-acre fire in western Arizona was expected to be controlled by Friday.

— Two fires totaling 530 acres were contained in Washington.

— A 540-acre brushfire was contained in central Montana but 175-acre forest fire was still out of control near Townsend.

— An 80-acre fire continued to burn near Polecat Creek in Yellowstone National Park in Wyoming.

Women continue to earn less

WASHINGTON — The big gap between the earnings of women and men can largely be blamed on clustering of females in certain occupations and in their lack of work experience, a Census Bureau study suggested Thursday.

Overall, it said, women continue to earn only 70 cents for every dollar taken home by a man.

While the disparity remains great, it represents progress from the 62 cents on the dollar women were earning in 1979, said Gordon W. Green Jr., of the Census Bureau's socioeconomic statistics division.

In addition to job-clustering and less experience, other factors setting women workers apart from men include time taken off from work and differences in their fields of study in college.

"There is an important message here for the woman who is career-minded and wants to get ahead at work," Green said in an interview.

It tells them that if they go to college, they should study fields men have traditionally studied — such as law, engineering, science and mathematics — and if they do not choose college, to try and develop technical training or enter the skilled trades, he said.

And, Green added, if family duties call them away from work, women should try to limit those interruptions so they will not let their skills become obsolete or lose seniority.

Dead man hosts party for friends

MILWAUKEE — Seven months after his death, Ervin C. Pokora is getting his longtime wish by throwing a party for friends and relatives.

As specified in his will, $2,000 will be used to entertain about 70 people Friday night at one of his favorite restaurants.

"He wanted the party months after his death because he didn't want people to get together and mourn him," said Constance Pavletich, Pokora's niece. "He wanted people to have a good time."

Pokora died Feb. 10 at age 71. He had worked as a laborer before afflicted by multiple sclerosis about 20 years ago.

"He spent the last three, four years of his life in a wheelchair, but he was always in a good mood," Pavletich said Wednesday. "He was constantly in pain, but he never let you know that. Always joked, always kidded, always tried to shock you a little bit. He said what was on his mind."

He worked for years at preparing a guest list, but organizers trying to invite the guests found some of them had died, she said.

Similar names confuse court

MOULTRIE, Ga. — A woman was stunned when a judge sentenced her to jail after she showed up for what she thought was her divorce case.

Mary Molden of Moultrie appeared Tuesday in Colquitt County Superior Court for a divorce case, but approached the bench with attorney Tom Kirbo when the criminal case of Aretha Molden was called. Kirbo represents both women, court officials said.

Judge George A. Horkan sentenced Mary Molden to 30 days in jail, fined her $1,050, ordered her to pay $1,053 in restitution and gave her four years of probation.

Molden conferred with Kirbo, who pointed out the error, which then was corrected.

Teaching testing gets tough nationally

By Staff and Wire Reports

A national government study says competency tests are knocking out some of the applicants for teacher education programs and graduates who are applying for licenses to teach.

However, Chester Finn Jr., research chief of the U.S. Department of Education, said passing scores are still set so low that they may be letting incompetent teachers into classroom jobs.

In Kansas, two tests — the Professional Skills Test and the National Teachers Exam — are required before teachers can be certified.

The PPST is administered as a screening device to students entering the education curriculum in all Regents schools. This test must also be taken by other students before being certified.

Unlike many other states that require taking the complete NTE,

More applicants become ineligible

Kansas only requires that the professional skills part be passed. It is usually given after completion of the undergraduate curriculum. Though other states require other parts of the NTE to be passed, Kansas does not because the PPST is to take its place.

The study "What's Happening in Teacher Testing" was released last week by the Department of Education's Office of Educational Research and Improvement. It found that in at least 10 states, teachers can still be certified even if they miss more than half the questions on the NTE.

Though some states may allow passing scores for less than half of the questions answered correctly, Kansas is not among them, said Jerry Horn, associate dean of K-State's College of Education.

Lawrence M. Rudner, the analyst who directed the study, said many certification testing programs "do not provide adequate standards and, hence, cannot live up to expectations."

"K-State has a very high pass rate on the (NTE) professional knowledge test — probably 95 percent plus on their first time. On the PPST, there is a large percentage that fail it the first time."

—Jerry Horn

"Teacher testing cannot yet be relied upon as a form of quality control, except of the crudest sort," Finn said in an interview.

Most of the tests are aimed at ensuring that teachers are literate and possess at least rudimentary writing and math skills.

"Given that the tests are not difficult and that the passing scores in some states appear to be relatively low, one would expect virtually everyone to pass teacher certification examinations. Yet this is not the case," the report stated.

In the 27 states with admissions testing programs for prospective education majors, an average of 72 percent passed the tests.

The score necessary to pass the PPST for Kansas certification is lower than the score necessary to enter the College of Education at K-State, Horn said. Because of this requirement, many students must take the test more than once before entering the college.

"K-State has a very high pass rate on the (NTE) professional knowledge test — probably 95 percent plus on their first time," Horn said. "On the PPST, there is a large percentage that fail it the first time."

A report on the performance of pre-certification examination released by the Kansas State Department of Education last December showed Kansans having more than 85 percent pass the PPST the first time.

Twenty-six states now test prospective teachers as a certification requirement, and 18 others are planning to do so soon. In the 22 states that made their pass-fail rates public, 83 percent of the applicants passed.

The Kansas State Department of Education's December report showed only those taking the NTE before their junior year in college doing worse than 95.5 percent passing.

Minority applicants generally have fared much worse than whites on these tests. But the report noted that in states such as California and Florida, the percentage of minorities passing the tests has been increasing.

Kansas has a rather low percentage of minorities, and very few choose to go into education, Horn said.

In the report released in December 1986 by the Kansas State Department of Education, blacks and Hispanics scored much higher than the national average released last week, but still not near as well as whites.

During the next two years, 20 states will be expected to report teacher test results for the first time. Only three states — Arkansas, Georgia and Texas — have forced veteran teachers to take competency tests.

The study noted that the tests "do not test actual teaching ability. Rather, they test knowledge and skills believed to be prerequisites."

Bork's judicial record attacked by study released from Senate

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee released an analysis Thursday that attacked virtually every aspect of Robert H. Bork's record, and contended the Supreme Court nominee "is not the apostle of judicial restraint" portrayed in a recent White House report.

The study released by Chairman Joseph R. Biden Jr. said Bork engaged in "judicial activism" when he suited him. And it attacked his positions on subjects including civil rights, privacy, antitrust, censorship, free speech, religion in the schools and the Supreme Court decision permitting abortion.

The report was written by two committee consultants, a Washington attorney and a Duke University law professor, and reviewed by four prominent lawyers.

Biden did not comment on the report, but he has become an outspoken opponent of Bork. He will conduct confirmation hearings that begin Sept. 15.

The new research was billed as a response to a White House report last July that said in areas such as the First Amendment, privacy and civil rights, "Judge Bork has demonstrated an open mind as his views have evolved and matured over the years, sometimes changing significantly over time as new evidence has been presented to him."

The analysis accused the White House report of inaccurately trying to link Bork's brand of conservatism with that of the justice he would replace on the court, now-retired Lewis F. Powell, Jr. Powell was a swing vote on the court.

The new study said this was a "transparent effort" to make the two men appear as ideological equivalents when "such depiction has no basis in fact."

In accusing Bork of "judicial activism," a term usually reserved for liberal judges, the study quoted comments of judges on the ideologically split U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington. Bork has served on the court since 1982.

Some of the judges said in one written opinion that Bork was attempting to "wipe away selected Supreme Court decisions in the name of judicial restraint" and was conducting "a general spring cleaning of constitutional law."

In another instance, five members of the court described Bork's criteria for reviews by the full appellate court as "self-serving and result-oriented" and as doing "substantial violence to the collegiality that is indispensable to judicial decision-making."

The report said there were "clear examples of Judge Bork's advocacy and implementation of conservative activism, which demonstrate that he is not the apostle of judicial restraint and moderation described in the White House position paper."

The analysis also:

—Said Bork opposed "virtually every major civil rights advance on which he has taken a position," including laws on public accommodations, open housing,

Owners update PC units

By The Collegian Staff

Americans have a history of inventing things that tend to make life a little easier. There are remote-control televisions, garage door openers and cars that remind drivers to put on their seat belts.

The technology of computers and microchips has advanced rapidly in the past 35 years because of competition in the marketplace and consumer requests. As a result, many personal computer owners are finding they want to get rid of their obsolete PC and replace it with a more updated one.

Jim Claus, graduate student in food science, is selling his personal computer in hopes of replacing it with a more portable system.

"I want a computer that doesn't take up as much space," Claus said. "The newer systems also have more memory capability."

A change in the size of the computer disk is the reason for the increased memory. Most computers utilize a 5 1/4 inch disk, but newer models introduced this summer use a 3 1/2 inch disk. Despite the size reduction, the memory capacity was doubled.

Jim Braun, a microcomputer consultant for Census XIV Inc., is impressed — but not overwhelmed — by the new disk.

"Technology is moving so fast that in another year something else will have replaced the 3 1/2 inch disk," Braun said. Consumers should be

State's responsibility to test affected wells

Finding good drinking water in Riley County is getting to be a problem these days.

First there was the landfill, which was ordered to close by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment after two nearby wells were found to be contaminated in 1985 and 1986.

Now a similar problem seems to have developed in the Fairmont Addition — a community of about 500 people southeast of downtown Manhattan and across the Kansas River. Tests conducted more than a year ago by KDHE indicated the presence of trihalomethanes — known carcinogens — in several of the wells, and tetrachloroethylene — a suspected carcinogen — in two wells.

While KDHE officials said the levels were not high enough to cause great concern among the residents, they did say that the wells should be monitored once or twice a year to check for increasing contamination levels.

Yet no further tests have been conducted.

In the case of the landfill, KDHE ran the initial tests, and then Riley County — the responsible party — continued the testing. Now, after testing the Fairmont wells, KDHE officials say their job is finished. Further testing, they say, is not the responsibility of the county, but of the owners.

A test cost about $500 to run — a price that few, if any, of the residents can afford. Many of them are hauling drinking water to their homes. In the meantime, the contamination could be spreading or the levels increasing.

Continued testing is a must in the Fairmont area. Fifteen months have already gone by.

Football games bring students fun, duties

Saturday night will start another football season for the University. As in seasons past, the outcome of the event is not as predictable as the actions of some of the fans.

During the week after the game, opinion pages of local newspapers are filled with comments about how "drunk," "vulgar" or "crude" the student section had acted. The stadium was wrecked, ears were offended and lives were endangered, the letters usually say. Then laments come asking, "Why hasn't anything been done?"

The students usually shrug off the accusations by saying, "Yeh, it was a pretty wild time." While administrators wonder how they can end the publicity that has lost its purple gloss. They are faced with the challenge of making the game enjoyable to young and old alike.

Everybody likes to have a good time. The football team sometimes is nothing to cheer about — but a football game is not a forum for a private party.

Also, school publicity may not mean a lot to students at a Saturday afternoon football game. Many may think it is something only the administration should be concerned about. But they will someday try to sell a K-State diploma to a potential employer, and they will tell everyone from high school buddies to relatives they went to school here.

Actions at football games — like any public event — should be tempered to ensure those affected by the actions are not injured, offended or jeopardized.

The games are meant to be fun. Nobody is such an ideologist to thing students will go to the game and wait patiently for a win. But everyone deserves to have fun at the games.

Letters bring answers Sticky situations require tact

Dear Jeff,

I am a student at K-State with a problem. I'm slightly weird. OK, I'm a vampire, but does that mean K-State should ignore my needs? So what if I kill people and drink their blood, isn't my tuition money as good as everyone else's? I only attack people who go to the University of Kansas — they can afford to lose a few students a week. OK, sometimes I can't help myself and I stop off in Topeka, but they don't sell blood in grocery stores, you know.

Other than the fact that I am a vampire, I'm a perfectly normal student. I study all night and sleep right through my morning classes. I would rather go to school an extra semester than take a 7:30 a.m. class. So if I am this normal, why does this school ignore me and my kind? There are support groups for every minority I can think of, except vampires. Where can I go to meet with people who have the same types of problems and concerns that I have?

Signed,

Looking for Love in the Wrong Places

Dear Looker,

As long as you stay away from me, you have my sympathy. I am sure that KU's chancellor, Gene Budig, would applaud your efforts to alleviate his overcrowding problems. Something also tells me that you may, indirectly, be helping K-State's admissions. However, the fact that you are an all-around helpful guy doesn't solve your problems.

It seems to me that as a vampire, you would be in a very high risk category for AIDS.

Commentary

JEFF SCHRAG
Collegian Columnist

Especially if you eat your meals at a school like KU. So maybe you would fit in if you attended some type of support group with your fellow "high riskers." You also have the option of starting your own honorary for vampires — something like "Red Key" or "Fangs." It sure sounds like a good time to me — cross my heart and hope to die.

By the way, what would a vampire study at college? We don't offer aeronautics or any type of suction engineering. I've never run across Blood Sucking 101 or Garlic and Holy Water Removal 325 in the line schedule. Whatever you study, I just hope its not premed. Maybe you should look into pre-dentistry. With the set of fangs you have, I bet you could save yourself a whole lot of money.

Dear Jeff,

As a 20-year-old male who registered for the draft on my 18th birthday, I am very concerned about our escalating conflict with Iran. I don't want to go to war. I've seen too many episodes of M*A*S*H to believe the Army's "See the world for free" slogans. Do you think my fears are unfounded, or do you think we will be at war soon?

Signed

Ready to Run to Canada

Dear Jogger,

Few sane people actually want to go to war, and those who do are probably not "M*A*S*H fans. So you are not alone in your fears. You are, however, a little premature in your worries. Consider this. Do you think Ronald Reagan would cut his vacation short by starting a war? The man does have his priorities. We'll be safe, at least for another week or so.

If you want my long-term prediction, don't buy a ticket to Canada until the middle of next semester. To analyze President Reagan you have to learn to think like him. He is an actor. So the way they do things in Hollywood obviously influences his way of doing things in Washington. When movie makers want to make a big premiere, they do it just before academy awards time so it is fresh in everyone's mind. So I predict that Reagan still thinks that same way, and would open a war just like he would open a movie.

Therefore, I don't think you need to become scared until you start seeing pictures of the Ayatollah Khomeini — an arrow in his head and a mustache drawn on his face — during the previews at a movie theater. Then you can get scared and break out your "Hawkeye Pierce for President" button.

City showplaces civilization

Tourist studies history, style of Berlin

As a tourist I find myself drawn to the city. Sure, given a good stock of wine, a blanket and the right companion, a few days in the country can be nice. But regardless of the natives' tongue, if you've seen one farm or castle or quaint country village, you've seen them all. For diversity in diversions, I'll choose the metropolis almost every time.

And what do I like to find in a city?

A center thriving on commerce and culture where history is made. A place where the classical arts flourish alongside avant-garde theater and street musicians. An ever-changing collage of nationalities and alternative lifestyles which fill the urban picture with personalized shops, ethnic restaurants, quaint cafes and notorious nightspots. Plus — add some lakes, parks, fountains, statues and surprises along every avenue. Add people from around the world, filling the streets day and night with the sense that here is life if one has the energy to live it. Then add some unique architecture. Tie all these elements together with a great public transportation system and you've got my recipe for urban adventure.

All these things I have found in Paris, Amsterdam, Boston and San Francisco, but no urban scene matches the excitement and energy thriving in West Berlin.

This column isn't meant to be a tourist guide to the city, but all the operas, theaters, museums and historical monuments one finds in any large metropolis are here for the 'Europe in two weeks' tourist. Their names — the Kurfurstendamm, Checkpoint Charlie, and Potsdamer Platz — are in "Let's Go Europe," and would make for a great home video show when you get home. Berlin seems set apart from the other great cities of the world because it is a unique combination of past and present culture, history and politics.

One of the most surprising features of West Berlin is its size. It is larger in both area and population than any other German city, including Hamburg and Munich. I was expecting West Berlin to be a city, nothing but city from wall to wall, but more than 35 percent of the area in West Berlin is made up of lakes, parks, woods and farmland. There are huge tracts of forests bordering large lakes in the western part of the city, to which people flock when they need to get away from the fast pace of the city center.

The center of West Berlin may be the Kaiser Wilhelm Memorial Church. This preserved World War II ruin is surrounded by a pedestrian zone populated every evening by a kind of human circus. Here I've spoken with a Lebanese Communist discharged from the Soviet Army and now living in West Berlin. I have seen a guy paint a white stand as a statue for six hours and collect money from passers-by, and I have heard a street drunk recite from memory several German poems I knew.

If Germany were united, its legislature would sit in a West Berlin building called the Reichstag. Inside this building today is the best historical museum I have ever visited. It sits up against the Berlin Wall and East Berlin. Next to it is a memorial for the people killed trying to escape from East Berlin. On the large field before this building, historical speeches, demonstrations and rock concerts of considerable note have taken place. The most recent being the David Bowie/Eurythmics/Genesis concert, which caused such an uproar in East Berlin this past summer. While I was there, I used this green acreage to play Frisbee.

In the woods behind the famous Olympic Stadium, where Jesse Owens won four gold medals in 1936, a large outdoor amphitheater called the Waldbuhne is nestled. Last summer I saw 20,000 people fill it to hear the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra give an open-air concert. Two days later, I returned to hear Memphis Slim, Chuck Berry, George Benson and Miles Davis play at a 4th of July party. Peter Gabriel is appearing there next week.

It has been said the hardest thing to find in Berlin is a native Berliner, which is reflected in the types of the restaurants — Yugoslavian, Italian, Greek, Turkish or McDonald's to name a few.

The West Berlin district of Kreuzberg is often referred to as Little Istanbul. Conservative people will warn you it is full of Turks, punks and squatters. I'll tell you it has the best, liveliest and cheapest cafes and flea-markets in town. Many of the buildings constructed for the current International Architecture Exhibition are located here.

Among all these things, 1,860,000 people go about their daily lives. There resides Werner Wolf, a table maker from Cologne; Beate Fuchs, a young pharmacologist from Bavaria who works in both West Berlin and West Germany; and Miguel Leon, a Columbian studying economics at the Free University of West Berlin.

Of course, across the way from all this is East Berlin, another fascinating side to a fascinating metropolis. This I hope to discuss in next Friday's column.

Animals to move Shelter to hold cats, dogs

By Lori Lindstrom
Staff Writer

A new animal shelter is being constructed in the industrial park of Manhattan.

"I'm so excited I can't sit still," said Anne Collins, animal shelter coordinator. "We've needed a new shelter ever since this one was built."

Problems with the old shelter, located in the Sunset Zoo, include the lack of space for incoming dogs. The shelter contains 14 permanent kennels and 10 mobile cages for puppies and small dogs, Collins said. When necessary, the dogs have to be doubled up in the kennels.

"We wind up with a lot of dogs in here," Collins said. "You worry about it with all the growling and barking."

Another problem includes no available space to hold cats.

"This shelter was not built with cats in mind," Collins said. "We get up to 1,000 calls about cats."

Bruce McMillan, assistant professor of environmental design, is the architect who designed the new animal shelter. He said he got some of his ideas for the design from looking at two facilities in Kansas City and one in Junction City.

New improvements include "getting the facility out of the zoo," McMillan said.

"The zoo will then be eligible for grant money and be able to start new projects," he said.

The new facility will include 20 permanent cages for large dogs and 25 mobile cages. Also included will be space for up to 35 cats, McMillan said.

A separate admitting area will also be built to handle incoming dogs for shots and worms, Collins said.

"It'll be a quiet place to meet the dog one-on-one," she said.

Collins said the staff from the shelter and members of the Riley County Humane Society were allowed to sit in on meetings with McMillan during the planning.

"I was very impressed with Bruce," Collins said. "He wanted to listen and find out. He was always concerned, understanding and helpful."

Ron Fehr, assistant director of parks and recreation, said, "Bruce investigated and toured facilities and came up with some good ideas."

Construction of the new facility will cost about $167,300, Fehr said. The Quality of Life bond issue allocated $125,000 for the project with Riley County Commissioners adding $30,000, Pottawatomie County Commissioners allocating $10,000 and the Humane Society giving $27,000.

The remaining funds will be used for other costs such as the architect fee, building the access road to the shelter and installing water and sewer lines, said Fehr. New equipment will be purchased, but some of the old equipment, desks and cages will be reused, he said.

The shelter is being constructed by Riley Construction of Manhattan and will be completed in February.

Anniversary marks time for new goals, strategies

By Michelle Engemann
Collegian Reporter

A 10-year anniversary is often a time of celebration. For K-State's Department of Women's Studies, however, it is a time for re-evaluation of the program and making plans for accomplishing future goals.

Sandra Coyner, director of women's studies, said a change in strategy is needed in incorporating women's studies into general areas of curriculum.

"Ten years ago, we believed women's studies to be about women," Coyner said. "Now we know it's about women and gender. It includes information about men and focuses on the process by which culture creates gender."

Coyner recognizes two goals for women's studies. The first involves continuing to offer a concentration in courses on women's studies. She views this as an ongoing goal that must be continually updated.

The second goal involves incorporating information about women in all areas of curriculum.

"Only something so technical, with nothing to do with people, would be exempt from our goal," Coyner said. "History courses need to cover not only men's history, but women's also."

Coyner said a problem may arise if a single course concerning women's studies is taught in each department. Only the instructor teaching the course is exposed to women's studies and only those students who already have an interest in the program will take the course.

She said she would like to see women's studies being taught in courses such as economics, psychology and political science.

Coyner and 15 faculty members, chosen by Jim Coffman, University provost, will be working to reevaluate the administrative structure of the program and solve instability in course offerings.

"We see ourselves as not creating a new bias but correcting an old one that undervalued women," Coyner said.

Ruth Ann Wefald will be hosting a reception Sept. 14 for the women's studies faculty and others involved in the program.

The Department of Women's Studies was established by the Board of Regents in 1977 to coordinate courses on women's studies already present on campus. The program includes 32 courses that count toward a secondary major in women's studies.

Randy Bahr, sophomore in psychology and an employee of Farrell Library, places a sign identifying the sorting area on the second floor of the stacks. After a reorganizing process, each floor of the stacks has a sorting area where library users can find unshelved books missing from their places in the stacks.

Summer reorganization allows better use of library's stacks

By Nancy Hill
Collegian Reporter

Starting from the bottom and working their way to the top, six temporary employees were busy this summer organizing the stacks in Farrell Library in order to reduce difficulties locating library materials.

Cherie Geiser, chairperson of General User Services, said the stacks had become so badly out of order and overcrowded in places that workers had to be hired to put all books in correct call number order, shift them if necessary, identify materials needing repair or new call number labels. The project began June 22 and ended Aug. 17.

A major change accompanying the project was the addition of new sorting areas located on each floor.

Materials which haven't been shelved yet are stored in the areas in call number order.

"The concept for stack maintenance is totally different for us this year," Geiser said. "The idea came from the University of Oklahoma library's stack maintenance plan."

She said students should be aware that many of the materials have been moved to different locations and they may need to check the new stack location guides. Also, the new sorting and reshelfing areas will be designated by yellow and black signs at the east end of each stack level for easy access for students.

This semester students working in the stacks have been assigned specific areas in which they are to keep materials correctly shelved and straightened, she said.

"Maintenance will be a high priority for those working in the stacks," Geiser said. "By giving them specific areas you can really keep the quality control."

Randy Bahr, sophomore in psychology, is working in Farrell's stacks for his second semester.

"At first I can't see it (the new stack organization) doing much," Bahr said. "But, as soon as students understand the new system it should work much better than it did before."

Geiser said while re-shelving and straightening stacks this summer, many materials considered lost or missing by the library were found and have since been shelved in their correct places.

"Overall, the library has tried to make itself a better service to the students," Geiser said. "The emphasis on maintaining the stacks will help insure ease."

Lottery scheduled to begin in October

Businesses prepare to sell game chances

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

JUNCTION CITY — Anyone interested in selling Kansas Lottery tickets had their chance to get in on the action Thursday at a training session here.

The lottery is scheduled to begin sometime in October, but the starting date will not be determined until lottery officials have issued contracts to the businesses, said Frank Kinney, Kansas Lottery official.

Approximately 20 business managers attended the all-day, walk-in session. They all seemed to be in support of the lottery and wanted to learn more about it, Kinney said.

"I told the (cash register) repairman that I was going to get a lottery license. He's already put an extra button on the register specifically for the ticket," said Jim Sader, owner of Sader Liquor Store, Junction City. Sader has already applied for the contract needed to sell the tickets. An application fee of $100 must accompany the contract.

The Kansas Lottery has scheduled two different lottery games to be operated simultaneously: the on-line game and the instant winner game. Retailers may be contracted for the instant winner game without contracting the on-line game. However, the on-line must be operated in conjunction with the instant winner game.

The on-line lottery game is played through computer terminals located in retail outlets. The terminals are linked via telephone to a central computer at the lottery headquarters in Topeka.

A combination of six numbers are chosen by the consumer, entered into the computer and a ticket is printed out. The numbers are then transmitted to Topeka. At the end of the specified game period, a drawing is held to determine which six numbers are to be on the winning ticket.

"The jackpot is determined by the number of consumers who purchase tickets," Kinney said.

A projected 500-600 retailers will operate the on-line game which is planned to begin in early 1988, he said, with tickets costing $1 each.

The lower tier winners in the game will receive up to $25 per ticket, redeemed at the location of purchase.

For redemption of the higher level winning tickets, winners may either present the tickets at the Kansas Lottery office in Topeka or call the toll-free number printed on each ticket.

Tickets for both games are purchased by the retailers in packages of 200, and a uniform number of winning tickets is distributed throughout each package, Kinney said.

cent — 25 cents. Of that 25 percent, retailers retain 5 cents and the Kansas Lottery gets 20 cents.

With its revenue, the Kansas Lottery will be purchasing equipment and tickets, and promoting ticket purchases.

No direct advertisement for the lottery is permissible by retailers. Promotion of the lottery is allowed, but not directly sponsoring requests to buy tickets, Kinney said.

The remaining 30 percent — 30 cents — of the ticket price will be given to the State of Kansas. This amount is to be subdivided for distribution to three areas.

Economic development will receive 18 cents. To reduce the taxes on reappraisals, 30 percent will be applied to that area. The remaining 3 cents is to be spent on reducing the overcrowded conditions in the state prisons.

Officials need time to study impact of 65 mph speed limit

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Traffic fatalities doubled in New Mexico after it became the first state to increase its speed limit on rural highways to 65 mph, but whether the 10 mph increase is responsible for more deaths is not yet known, highway traffic experts say.

In Illinois, fatalities decreased on rural highways since the higher speed limit went into effect.

"We're not about to say that it is meaningful in any way, any more than we're willing to say that New Mexico has twice as many fatalities as last year because they were the first to go to 65," said Al Lauersdorf, a highway safety specialist with the Chicago-based National Safety Council.

"We don't have anything to back up those statements," he said. "We don't know if 65 is working from a safety standpoint or if fatalities have in fact gone up."

Over strong insurance industry opposition, Congress earlier this year allowed an increase of the nationwide speed limit from 55 mph to 65 mph on rural stretches of interstate highway. At least 25 states have enacted the higher speed limit.

A survey of New Mexico motorists shortly after the increase showed nearly half the drivers exceeded the higher limit, according to the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety.

The New Mexico Public Safety Department reported Monday that 56 people were killed on interstates in rural areas between April and mid-August, compared with 25 deaths during the same period in 1986.

But in Illinois, where the speed limit went up in May, there were 16 traffic deaths on rural interstates between May and July, compared with 26 during the same period a year ago.

Wyoming also saw a decrease in deaths since the new speed limit was imposed, and state Highway Patrol Capt. Bob Oakes said the higher speeds may actually be contributing to the decrease.

Oakes said too many people violated the 55 mph limit and were forced to pass slower cars more frequently than under the new limit. Less passing means fewer accidents.

K-State awaits concert

By Becky Howard
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Although Willie Nelson won't be performing until Saturday, preparations for the concert following the first football game against Austin Peay State University have already started, and Gov. Mike Hayden has declared Sept. 5 "Willie Nelson Day."

John Carbray, president of Projects West, the firm organizing the concert, said the performance in K-State's football stadium will be the 100th of its kind the firm has put together.

"The whole concept of this type of entertainment is exposing two different kinds of audiences to a type of entertainment they aren't used to attending," he said. "Some people see it as paying for a football ticket and seeing a free concert. Others see it as paying to see Willie Nelson and seeing a football game for free, depending on their interest."

Nelson will perform on the world's largest portable stage, which is 50 feet long, 24 feet wide and 12 feet high. Carbray said the stage, which is being assembled today, will take about 20-25 minutes to move on to the center of the football field after the game.

"The stage has two levels. Willie will perform on the higher level and the lower level will provide a place for technicians and assistants to work," he said.

The concert will last about an hour and 45 minutes, Carbray said. Western dancers will surround the stage as part of the act but also to provide an audience atmosphere for Nelson since the crowd will be further back in the stadium.

"The great thing about this type of concert is no matter where you are, you will have a good seat," he said.

Carbray said sound for the concert will be provided by portable speakers that can be moved to adjust the sound depending on the crowd size.

"There will be an even spray of sound, and it won't be so loud like many concerts where people leave with their ears ringing," he said.

Carbray said Projects West has done concerts at university games all over the country, with groups like The Beach Boys, Miami Sound Machine and the Monkees performing.

"Over the past three years since we started, we have had 30 different musical groups play at baseball and football games," he said.

"It's great for the alumni who come back to the games. We try to provide the kind of entertainment that everyone will enjoy."

Carbray said he expects the concert to be a success, as ticket sales have gone well. He hopes to make the concert an annual event at K-State. Two dollars from each ticket will be donated to Farm Aid, the farm relief program which Nelson promotes.

Death of an era Drive-ins fade to history

By Becky Howard
Arts and Entertainment Editor

The scene used to be typical on a summer evening in the Midwest. Cars lumbered in caravans to the outskirts of a small town, heading for a huge white screen.

As dusk settled in, the car dwellers parked, attached portable speakers to their car doors, munched popcorn and hotdogs from the nearby snack bar as the movie began to prance across the screen.

It was another night at the drive-in. A form of entertainment which marked an era, the drive-in has slowly become extinct. The huge white screens which once jutted proudly on the outskirts of big and small towns are now a rare find.

They have vanished, and so have the nights where groups of high school students collected at the drive-in as a hangout, where young couples went on their first dates and where families took their children for a night of inexpensive entertainment.

The drive-in's death has been a slow one. Many travelers only glance and wonder at the abandoned drive-ins, which stand like forgotten ghosts rising out of pastures. Slowly, subtly, many of the outdoor screens have been torn down, many of them replaced with indoor multi-theater complexes.

According to Joel Resnick, former president of the National Association of Theatre Owners in the book, "Reel Power," the drive-in is a thing of the past.

"Drive-ins are a passing breed. The value of the drive-in land in many instances has surpassed the value that they can take out of the movie business. It is better to convert that land to other purposes."

Resnick also says that many drive-ins were independently owned and competition with consolidated theaters drove the drive-in to its end.

"Only in the sunbelt states have drive-ins continued to prosper. Here they operate year-round and can do well by appealing to young families," Resnick said.

It was only a few decades ago that the surging popularity of the drive-in began its upward climb. It was a time when movie popularity was reaching new heights with the new film techniques such as technicolor and cinemascope which required the larger screens.

The drive-in provided comfort away from the heat-swelled movie houses that lacked air-conditioning. The cooler, summer evening air was a relief for those desiring entertainment.

"Drive-ins are a passing breed. The value of the drive-in land in many instances has surpassed the value that they can take out of the movie business."

—Joel Resnick

The drive-in evolved from what was originally known in the 1800s as "open-air amusements," said Jean Dallas, director of the Riley County Historical Society.

"It began along the same lines as a carnival," Dallas said. "People would drive their horses and buggies to an area for a bonfire with singing and games."

In Riley County, she said regulations and ordinances forced carnivals and other traveling entertainment to Potawatomi County, where Riley County residents drove their horses for a good time.

Dallas said the 1920s saw the arrival of "entertainment on the patio," which brought Vaudeville acts to outdoor theaters. In the 1930s, outdoor movie theaters were started, but it wasn't until the late 1940s that the popularity of the drive-in movie started its climb.

"There were periods when drive-ins would start and fail," she said. "But it really caught on in the 1940s and 50s. I think that was when they were most popular."

"It was a great night of entertainment," said Dallas, who's husband Dave managed one of Manhattan's drive-ins, the Skyview, until 1955. "The whole family could enjoy a movie for a very reasonable rate in the comfort of their own car."

Dallas said the Skyview opened in 1949 and closed in 1982. Nothing remains of the structure, which once sat across from Kennedy's Claim on Rosencutter Road.

Another Manhattan drive-in, the Edgewood, was located east of Manhattan on Highway 24. It closed in 1965.

"I think what killed the drive-in was television," Dallas said. "I just don't think it could compete with it."

Other factors involved in the death of the drive-in could be attributed to air-conditioned theaters and video cassette rental, she said.

Dave Andera, city manager for Commonwealth Theatres in Junction City, manages one of the few remaining drive-ins in operation in Kansas, the Mid-way on Grant Avenue. Andera guessed that there were less than 15 drive-ins still running in Kansas and only about 200 in the United States.

Speculation that the Mid-way will soon close is unconfirmed, Andera said.

"For awhile, we thought we would keep it open, but now it looks like we might not. There are some people interested in the land," Andera said. "I'd like to keep it going. It does make a profit, and people come out here and enjoy themselves. I hate to see it go. We'll know by Sept. 15 what's going to happen."

Andera has spent a large part of his life working at drive-ins. He and his three brothers worked at a drive-in during high school, and Andera has managed several drive-ins, including one in South Dakota and a twin drive-in in Kansas City, Kan.

"I have seen drive-ins turned into all kinds of things once they close,"

Staff/Steve Wolgast

TOP: The Midway Drive-In in Junction City, managed by Dan Andera, may not remain open after this season. A declining audience has forced the theater to show movies on weekends only. ABOVE: The Midway is owned by Commonwealth Theatres, but may not be soon. The property may be sold to developers who want to construct a mini-mall on the site.

he said. "A lot of them become flea markets, and there is even one in Yankton, S.D., that was bought by a church and now holds drive-in church services."

Dickey Wheeler, who used to manage the Mid-way Drive-in and still runs the film projector, said the theater now only shows movies on weekends.

"This drive-in has some distinct advantages. We have a prime audience of young, military couples who can bring children under age 12 in for free," Wheeler said. "It is an inexpensive evening for a family."

Wheeler said the drive-in, which opened in 1949, averages 300 adults each night a movie is shown.

He said competition with indoor movie theaters and land taxes killed many drive-ins.

"Many times a town would grow out to where the drive-in was located and it was more profitable to sell out than to keep it running," he said.

Wheeler said high property taxes have killed many drive-ins, but because the Mid-way sits on a flood plain, the taxes have been low.

"Right now we're still doing a real good business, and as far as we know, we will still keep running," he said.

Highway bill receives defeat in House

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas House, after debating amendments for nearly 10 hours, defeated Thursday night a $547 million highway bill which just provided for maintenance of the state's present road system and includes no new projects.

The vote was 60-64, with 63 votes needed to pass the bill.

House leaders moved immediately to reconsider the action, and that motion passed on a voice vote — keeping the bill alive.

Speaker Jim Braden then recessed the House for an hour, until 8 p.m., when another attempt was to be made to pass the bill. Braden called a House Republican caucus to talk it over during the recess.

The measure, a heavily amended version of a bill passed Wednesday by the Senate, would go back to the Senate if it passed the House.

The Senate would reject the House version, putting the highway bill into a conference committee of three senators and three House members to resolve differences — which legislative leaders said was a critical step toward achieving some highway improvement program in the special session which opened last Monday.

Speaker Jim Braden implored the House members to vote for the maintenance enhancement bill constructed by the House Transportation Committee, just to get something into conference.

"I don't know how many plans will have to come out of the conference committee before we get one a majority of us can support," Braden said. "But I know we can't get anything unless we get this bill into conference."

The House was working on a barebones maintenance plan its transportation committee put together two weeks ago. It called for spending far less than Gov. Mike Hayden's $1.71 billion plan, which the House overwhelmingly rejected in midday Thursday.

The chamber worked from a barebones maintenance plan the House Transportation Committee put together, one that called for far less spending than Hayden's proposal. In fact, the House overwhelmingly rejected Hayden's plan, which calls for $1.71 billion in new construction over the next nine years.

However, contractors will pay the prevailing wage on whatever projects are included in the program. The House, on a 66-59 vote, approved an amendment to include a provision requiring payment of prevailing wages on any highway project that becomes part of any program the Legislature approves.

The state's prevailing wage law was repealed during the last legislative session after being in effect in Kansas for 96 years.

The prevailing wage amendment, introduced by Rep. Anthony Hensley, D-Topka, would require all contractors and subcontractors to pay workers the average wage for similar types of work on similar projects in the area of the project.

Opponents to the amendment said the measure would substantially increase the cost of any highway project, a contention Hensley denied.

"We fought this thing out before," said Rep. Phil Kline, R-Overland Park. "To impose this on these particular projects is going to add additional costs."

The measure would escalate the cost of a highway program, he said, even before the Legislature can decide what size program the state can afford.

Rep. Arthur Douville, R-Overland Park, said the measure would take business away from Kansas contractors and ultimately hurt workers.

Senate President Robert V. Talkington, R-Iola, said the Senate would not accept a prevailing wage amendment. "I don't know whether it's an effort to kill the bill or not," he said. "It could have that effect."

Supporters said attaching a prevailing wage requirement to the projects would not increase the price, but ensure that workers receive average compensation.

"Anybody who opposes the prevailing wage or average wage supports bringing in cheaper labor," Hensley said.

Meanwhile, the House struggled to reach an agreement on what highway projects would be included in a program.

Like the Senate, which spent 12 hours over two days debating a highway plan, the House was confronted with building a program when the chamber's leaders acknowledged they found little consensus among members for any one plan.

As the House committee's bill stands, the state would increase its gasoline and diesel fuel taxes by 3 cents a gallon and its vehicle registration fees by 25 percent, for trucks, and to $32, for passenger cars.

The increases would raise $545 million.

YES FOR PEACE

On September 4th, 1987, the war between Iraq and Iran enters its 8th year and still no sign of an early end of this bloodshed because the Iranian leaders are intransigent. Over the past seven years Iraq has called for peaceful settlement and recently, Iraq has accepted the U.N. Resolution No. 598 on July 20th to put an end to the war but, Iranian regime keep rejecting any peace proposal. We call upon all the sincere peace-loving people all over the world to participate actively in a world wide campaign to stop this pointless war.

Whether you're into business, science or engineering, TI has all the right calculators with all the right functions for you.

Every year, thousands of hapless students watch their course load become an overload. And every year, the smart ones among them pick up a TI calculator and take a load off.

TI offers everything from advanced scientifics that clock your performances, to programmables that speak your language, to a solar-powered financial calculator that highlights your answers even in lowlight conditions.

And the large, color-coded keys and simple keyboard layouts mean you'll spend less time figuring out the calculator and more time figuring out your problems.

er education, not just blacks, because a major university education is supposed to be eclectic and broadening," he said. "It can't be that if all of the university's faculty, students and staff are the same race."

One of the "broad patterns of neglect" Sullivan cited was that black students don't have any role models to follow on campus due to the small percentage of black faculty members and staff.

The NAACP wants the University to get more involved and make black faculty and students "feel that the University can give them what they need to have a successful stay while at the University," Sullivan said.

Louisa Fletcher, Kansas NAACP

chapter president, said K-State President Jon Wefald responded positively to a letter informing him that the NAACP would actively encourage the establishment of a "fair share" program for recruitment and retention of black faculty. She said a specific plan of action is needed.

Wefald said the Office of Affirmative Action and Minority Affairs has been working on the situation.

"We know we that we have to do better and we will," he said.

Sullivan said it is going to take a well-thought-out plan by the NAACP to bring forth a plan for improvement of recruitment and retention of black faculty and students for the University.

He said "it is going to take hard work and communication from the NAACP and the University" to make a plan work.

Pilot survives freak accident

By The Associated Press

PORTLAND, Maine — A pilot who clung to the rear stairs of a small plane after a door opened in flight says he was "thrilled to see the sunrise" after landing safely, but declined to say any more Thursday about the freakish accident.

"There was no mechanical fault with the door," and the plane was returned to service, Steven Mason, sales manager of Eastern Express, told a news conference Thursday. He said the company was investigating the possibility that it had not been properly closed.

Henry Dempsey, 46, of Cape Elizabeth, the pilot who lay on the stairway door, suffered only scratches on his hand in the bizarre accident, after which his hands had to be "pried off" the plane's stair railings.

Dempsey declined all interviews but said through the company he was "thrilled to see the sunrise" and was still stunned by the "harrowing experience."

Dempsey was piloting a 15-seat Beechcraft 99 turboprop, with no passengers aboard, from Lewiston, Maine, to Boston early Wednesday evening when he heard a rattle in the back of the plane. The twin-engine commuter plane was being flown to Boston to be used for a flight from there, Mason said.

As he walked back to check on the noise, the aircraft hit some turbulence and he leaned against the stairway door. The door, which is hinged at the bottom, fell open and Dempsey was partially sucked out of the plane. He grabbed the railings and lay upside down on the stairs as the plane traveled at 190 mph at 4,000 feet.

"He was partly in the aircraft and partly out," said Mason.

The co-pilot, Paul Boucher of Lynn, Mass., spotted the "door ajar" indicator light on and "assumed the worst. He did not know what the situation was other than the captain did not return and the door was ajar," said Mason.

Mason said Boucher believed Dempsey had fallen completely out of the aircraft into the Atlantic and frantically radioed for Portland International Jetport control tower for help. He then changed course, flying to the jetport, which was about 10 minutes away.

Coast Guard Duty Officer William

Falk in South Portland said he received a telephone call from the jetport control tower, requesting the aid of a helicopter.

"A man called, and said a pilot has been sucked out of a cockpit through an open door, and fell into the sea," said Falk.

As the plane landed, Dempsey's face was about 12 inches above the runway. His hands were clenched so tightly to the outside of the aircraft he had to be "pried off," Mason said.

Dempsey was "pretty shook up, which is quite understandable," said Bob Devlin, director of the Medcu rescue unit, which was called to the airport.

Boucher did not realize Dempsey was hanging on until the plane was on the ground, Mason said.

The plane was flown back to the company's headquarters in Bangor.

Lafene

age occupancy was 6.8 patients per day, which is less than 1 percent.

Eric Muehleisen, administrator of Lafene, did not think the University should consider using Lafene's unencumbered funds to finance the relocation and operation of the counseling services. He pointed out that the $900,000 balance is depleting at a rate of $100,000 each year due to low enrollment at K-State in recent years.

"Closing the hospital is not enough to keep us afloat until enrollment is up enough again to support us," Muehleisen said. "If we're left alone, I anticipate we could operate in the black in two years."

He said the other alternatives would be to increase the fees for people using Lafene or eliminating programs.

Dan Owens, senior in economics, asked about the comparable cost of other hospital's inpatient service. Tout said an overnight stay at Lafene costs $150, as opposed to a $228 elsewhere in Manhattan. Tout said he couldn't set up a special service for students at the other two hospitals because of liabilities.

"Besides, hospitals just can't set one price for students and another for the general public because it wouldn't be fair," Tout said.

In other business, Senate heard first readings of two special allocations. The Students Against Driving Drunk chapter is requesting more than $300 to help bring the founder of SADD to K-State for a lecture. The group has already raised $1,700.

The other request was from the Associated Students of Kansas for its new program — Higher Education Rescue Operation. The goal of the project is to assist with the quality of educational programs and to generate state funds.

Senate approved six new members of the Union Governing Board and a commendation to Alf M. Landon.

Downtown Manhattan site of kick off

By Lori Lindsfrom
Staff Writer

Another year of K-State athletics was "kicked off" Thursday night in downtown Manhattan.

A Kick Off Party attracting more than 200 people was sponsored by the Manhattan Mainstreet, the K-State athletic department and KQLA-FM. The event featured a barbecue, watermelon feed and street dance.

The K-State Pep Band played for the crowd during the barbecue and watermelon feed. K-State cheerleaders, football players and basketball players were on hand to raise fans' spirits and create pride for the K-State teams.

"I'm looking forward to the football game on Saturday and the first football win of the year!" said University President Jon Wefald.

He said the dedication and work of K-State's athletes is "extraordinary." He said he appreciates the men and women athletes of K-State and the effort they put into the athletic program.

Wefald said the 1987 school year is off to a great start with increased enrollment and "the finest freshman class in the K-State history."

Athletic director Larry Travis said, "Stan (Parrish, K-State football coach) is a class person and a winner. He's taken the program and made it believable. I'm looking forward to an exciting football season."

Travis said it was "great to see people in purple" and he appreciated the support of the downtown merchants. He said he hopes everyone will support the football team this year.

Travis reminded the crowd that K-State is also strong in academics, citing the 55 student-athletes who are also Big Eight Conference scholar-athletes.

Parrish encouraged fans to come out to the game Saturday night against Austin Peay and "be loud and have fun."

Parrish recognized the football players present at the Kick Off Party and said the players were "committed to making the program a winner."

An autograph session with the football and basketball players was held, giving fans the opportunity to talk with team members.

"I hope they (the football team) do well," said Mike Shepherd, senior in secondary education. He said the Kick Off Party was a "good deal" but wished more students were present.

"I have never felt a more positive attitude (toward the football program)," said Suzie Wisdom, freshman in accounting. "Parrish has done a good job to promote this positive attitude to the public."

Steve Henson, K-State basketball player, said, "The football team is working harder than normal. It's going really well."

Henson said he's excited about the basketball program this year and believes the new players will help the team out.

"They (the football team) should do all right," said Charles Bledsoe, K-State basketball player. "They have more players and are excited. They rate."

"I certainly hope they improve from last year," said Susan Rush, Manhattan resident.

She also said the basketball team should "do pretty good."

Head basketball coach Lon Kruger said he appreciated the downtown support.

"The season is always exciting at first with everyone back on campus," Kruger said.

Collegian/Brad Camp

The K-State cheerleaders raise enthusiasm Thursday evening on Poyntz Ave. during a Kick Off Party for Saturday night's opening football game against Austin Peay. About 200 Manhattan residents and students attended the festivities, which featured a watermelon feed, a barbecue, and a street dance. University President Jon Wefald, head football coach Stan Parrish and athletic director Larry Travis spoke at the event during which the football and basketball teams held an autograph session.

Gulf

ces, who monitor shipping radios and gulf activity, spoke on condition of anonymity.

During the first convoy the supertanker Bridgeton hit a mine off the island, which Iran uses as a speedboat base, and the Italian ship was attacked near Farsi early Thursday, the sources said.

Later U.S.-Kuwaiti convoys have negotiated the gulf without trouble and fears of more mines have proved groundless.

U.S. warships and their mine-hunting helicopters have found none and there have been "fewer than five" suspected sightings, a U.S. officer said privately.

In Washington, Defense Department spokesman Robert Sims said the latest convoy was "proceeding uneventfully in the central Persian Gulf.... We're into the kind of routine escort that we said we were going to have when we began this."

The two crewmen of the supply ship Big Orange 14 were killed Tuesday night when Iraqi missiles hit the vessel, under charter to Iran. Shipping sources said Thursday the ship flew the Panamanian flag and all crew members were Filipino or Sri Lankan.

The 197-ton vessel sank about 120 miles southeast of the Kharg Island oil terminal, a frequent Iraqi target in the northern gulf. Five crewmen were rescued with minor injuries.

An Iraqi communique said one of its planes sank an "Iranian ship" with a crew of seven "after an attack on Kharg."

The 136-foot motor vessel was part of an offshore supply fleet operated by Intermarine Inc. of Houston, according to Lloyd's.

A communique from Baghdad on Thursday said Iraqi warplanes dealt a "decisive and effective blow" to a tanker off Iran just after dawn. Iraq's initial reports seldom identify the targets.

Iran, which usually does not acknowledge such attacks, denied its navy raided the Italian tanker, and Tehran's official news agency claimed the United States "is probably deploying its own speedboats to carry out such attacks."

In Tokyo, the Japan Shipowners Association and the 124,000-member seamen's union agreed to keep Japanese tankers out of the gulf until the government finds a way to protect them. Japan depends on the region for 55.6 percent of its oil, nearly all of which is imported.

Lloyd's Underwriters Association in London has announced a 50 percent increase in war risk insurance premiums for ships visiting the gulf.

Iraq made attacks on tankers a regular part of the war in early 1984, combining them with raids on oil facilities in an attempt to stop the exports with which Iran financed the war. Iran replied with attacks on merchant ships, most often in the southern gulf, and searches of others for Iraqi-bound cargo.

Both sides had suspended attacks on shipping after the U.N. Security Council passed a resolution unanimously July 20 demanding a ceasefire. Iraq accepted the resolution but Iran has yet to give a definitive response.

Rust's Kremlin plane trip ends in jail

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The prosecutor accused Mathias Rust of taking an ego trip when he hedge-hopped his small plane to Red Square, and demanded Thursday that the West German teen-ager be sentenced to eight years in a labor camp.

Vladimir Andreyev said the 19-year-old pilot's goal in his daring flight to the Kremlin on May 28 was "cheap popularity" rather than a discussion with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev about peace and disarmament.

He asked Judge Robert Tikhomirnov to give Rust eight years for violating international flight rules, two for violating the Soviet border and four years for hooliganism. The terms would be served concurrently.

Flight called act of 'hooliganism'

Rust acknowledged his guilt on the first two charges but has contested the charge of hooliganism.

The trial began Wednesday and a verdict is expected Friday after Rust and his Soviet lawyer, Vsevolod D. Yakovlev, have an opportunity to address the judge and his two lay assistants.

Rust, who was poised and spoke calmly during more than five hours of testimony Wednesday, blushed on Thursday under questioning from the judge and prosecutor.

Andreyev used the testimony of eight witnesses and an aviation expert to cast doubt on Rust's claim that he was on a peace mission.

"I think this trial showed his real face," he said, looking at the defendant from across the courtroom. "He didn't want to consider the public order that exists. He deliberately committed this crime, and he's a hooligan."

"He perhaps thought, 'I am Rust and I want to land where I want to land,' which was evidence of Rust's 'hooliganism and devilry,'" Andreyev said.

The prosecutor asked the court "to determine the punishment of Rust as deprivation of freedom in a corrective colony of reinforced regime for eight years." He said the request included consideration of the defendant's age.

Rust's flight in a single-engine Cessna created headlines around the world and made him a folk hero in West Germany. It embarrassed the Kremlin and caused a military shakeup, including dismissal of the air defense commander and the forced resignation of Defense Minister Sergei L. Sokolov.

Andreyev accused Rust of endangering hundreds of passengers on airliners approaching Moscow's Sheremetyevo International Airport, and said there could have been a dangerous international incident if Soviet forces had shot him down.

In testimony Wednesday, Rust said the flight was the "greatest mistake I've made in my life" and apologized to the court for it. He said he had no ill intent.

He said he wanted to draw attention to his desire for peace, disarmament and a new world order based on "full democracy." The flight was the only way he could capture the imagination of people throughout the world, Rust said.

On Thursday, he said he could not remember exactly what he said about his mission when he landed.

Prosecution witnesses told the court Rust frightened many people on Red Square when he set the plane down, and few people knew he considered his flight a peace mission.

Judge Tikhomirnov said a peace symbol on the plane "looked more like a bomb than a symbol of peace" and scolded Rust for not making the intent of his flight clear immediately upon landing.

Strikes continue as laborers torch cars, attack tourist hotel

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — About 13,000 striking workers occupied the nation's largest shipyard Thursday, and some torched cars, destroyed office equipment and attacked a tourist hotel.

Hundreds of other strikes continued around the country after one striking shipyard worker became the second fatality of two months of labor turmoil.

Striking taxi drivers who reached a pay raise agreement in Seoul returned to work late Thursday, but a strike leader was reported in serious condition after setting himself on fire in a dispute with management. Daewoo, the nation's No. 2 automaker, remained shut down for the ninth day.

President Chun Doo-hwan said he was confident the country could overcome the labor unrest, which he called "a one-time fever for a leap forward." Prime Minister Kim Chung-ryul talked with top law enforcement officials, but no drastic government action appeared imminent.

The strikes began in early July after Chun bowed to weeks of violent protests and agreed to democratic reforms, including greater labor freedom. Under past authoritarian governments, wages were strictly controlled and labor activity was virtually outlawed.

Official figures by the Labor Ministry showed strikes were under way Thursday at 797 worksites, 65 percent of them identified as bus and taxi companies. New protests erupted at 112 workplaces but disputes ended at 56 companies on Thursday, the ministry said.

About 13,000 workers at Hyundai Heavy Industries Co. occupied the shipyard in the southern city of Ulsan after an overnight vigil at a nearby stadium to press their demands for pay raises and other benefits.

Strikers destroyed windows, typewriters, photo copy machines and other furniture in the shipyard's main office. They set two cars and a bus on fire and blocked a six-lane highway outside.

"Raise our pay!" the workers chanted.

All but 200 left the shipyard by nightfall and no injuries or arrests were reported, officials said.

Accident draws criticism

By The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Three congressmen harshly criticized the Navy on Thursday and demanded to know why a munitions train ran over an activist protesting U.S. arms shipments to Central America.

S. Brian Willson, who lost both legs when he knelt in front of the train on Tuesday, received a telephone call Wednesday from Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega, according to protest organizers.

Ortega assured Willson his "act of solidarity" would not be in vain, and the Nicaraguan leader's wife planned to visit him in the hospital, Willson's friends and wife said.

Meanwhile, some 400 people angered at the incident stormed a ROTC building Wednesday night at the University of California, Berkeley. The protesters broke windows and spray-painted anti-military slogans inside.

Stephanie Troyan, spokeswoman for the Mount Diablo Peace Center in Concord, said Thursday the Berkeley demonstration was not planned by the coalition of groups protesting at the Concord Naval Weapons Station, where Willson was hurt.

However, she said, "Their outrage certainly is a classic expression about being upset about U.S. policy."

Rep. Ron Dellums asked the Secretary of the Navy to conduct a full investigation of what he called "the Navy's reckless action." The Oakland Democrat said he was "upset and angry because there is absolutely no excuse for what happened."

After meeting with the commander of the Concord Naval Weapons Station, Rep. George Miller, whose district includes the base, accused him of "major errors in judgment and major errors in concern for the protesters."

Rep. Barbara Boxer said she has scheduled a meeting with base commander Capt. Lonnie Cagle "to get some answers face to face."

"My gut tells me this could have been avoided," said the San Francisco Democrat. "Mr. Willson was willing to give his life for his country, but I don't think he expected this kind of violence."

"There were two observers riding on that train and I want to know why that train didn't stop," she said.

Ortega called the hospital Wednesday and spoke to a friend of the 47-year-old activist, according to Willson's wife of 12 days, Holly Rauon.

Ortega said "the people of Nicaragua are thinking and praying for Brian and that his act of solidarity won't be in vain," said Mike Crowl, a spokesman for Willson.

Willson's condition at John Muir Hospital in Walnut Creek was upgraded to satisfactory Thursday, but he remained in intensive care, said spokeswoman Eileen White.

Willson was leading 25 demonstrators outside the weapons station.

A WEEK AT KANSAS STATE

See ordering information below

At 12:01 a.m. on a Sunday morning in October 1986, a camera shutter was clicked. What happened during the next 192 hours was called AWAKS (A Week at Kansas State).

Former Kansas State University photographers were given the opportunity to return to campus to make pictures of college life in the '80s as it existed for one week during October.

Kansas State has numerous alumni photographers in positions of prominence throughout the country. Some 30 alumni and nearly 15 current student photographers made up the AWAKS shooting team. The result of exposing 1,900 rolls of black-and-white and color film with more than 68,000 exposures is a 10-by-14-inch coffee-table book to be published in September 1987. You can relive the experience of attending college in the 1980s at the nation's first land-grant institution through the pages of this special edition.

C.C. Clark, Manhattan, shops for produce at the People's Grocery Cooperative Exchange, 811 Colorado St. The store is owned and operated by the cooperative's customers and is one of Manhattan's fastest-growing grocery stores.

Store 'cooperative' with consumers

By Linda Huddleston
Collegian Reporter

In one Manhattan grocery, the customers truly are the bosses. Carrying more than 1,000 products, the People's Grocery Cooperative Exchange is quickly becoming one of Manhattan's fastest growing stores. The cooperative, 811 Colorado St., is different from other Manhattan groceries in that it is owned by its customers. The store is run by one paid staff and several co-op volunteers. Jayne Link, manager of People's, said their business is run in a democratic matter. "Members of the cooperative have voting privileges and receive a 5 percent discount on store goods," Link said. "They also receive a monthly newsletter, among other benefits." A new capitalization proposal for the store, to be voted on in October, states that each member or household in the cooperative invest $75 to pay for operating and managing expenses. A $10 non-refundable membership fee is also collected each year. A special investment plan will be offered for low income families who may pay $5 a month for 16 months, including a $5 non-refundable deposit. Members may receive greater discounts on produce by volunteering 12 hours a month to cashier duties, cleaning, unloading trucks, stocking shelves and other business activities. In addition to receiving benefits of the co-op, members must also accept the risks. Even though the $75 investment is refundable, it might take the co-op a short time to return it. "Money can't go out any faster than it comes in," Link said. "So we have to manage our finances well."

The cooperative buys its products from Blooming Prairie Warehouses, Iowa City, Iowa. This wholesaler is one of the strongest supporters of retail co-op groceries in the United States. They conduct conferences to help the co-ops with their management skills. "With our small operating budget, the store needs to be managed very efficiently," Link said. "If the capitalization program goes through, I perceive our store as having a solid place in the food market in Manhattan." The cooperative supports Kansas organic farmers and carries such products as teas, spices, pasta, cheese and many others. All products are either organically grown or have been minimally processed. "Our store is definitely a viable alternative to other health food stores in Manhattan," Link said. "We try to create a friendly atmosphere for our customers."

The cooperative provides customers with a bulletin board filled with articles concerning major health issues. Recipes and other pamphlets are available at the counter. Volunteers are the key factor to keeping the business alive, Link said. Myron and Vera Hanson, whose family owned and operated Hanson's Grocery from 1911-1975, started renting their old store to the cooperative in 1975. "The Hansons have helped us so much," Link said. "They are really caring and loving people, and they keep us going." Volunteers do yard work, cleaning and help organize cooperative activities. "One way to get new members is to inform people about the cooperative," Link said. "October is national co-op month, and hopefully we'll be in contact with new people."

Laborers can relax, picnic, enjoy long three day vacation

By Susan Lecuyer
Collegian Reporter

Labor Day. For many, it is a time for picnics, trips and sporting events — the three-day weekend honoring all who labor by giving them time off. Few people may realize, however, that Labor Day was brought about directly by the organized labor movements of the Industrial Revolution following the Civil War. "It's somewhat a matter of historical controversy," said Harold Orbach, professor of sociology. Internationally, Labor Day is celebrated on May 1 as a memorial to the campaign by socialist labor unions to establish an eight-hour work day in America.

According to the "The Complete Book of American Holidays," a new concentration of laborers — the "working class" — had appeared during the Industrial Revolution that toiled long hours under hard conditions in the factories. As more and more people worked together, they organized into unions to improve their conditions in the work place and their status in society. Peter J. McGuire, then president of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America and a leader of the Knights of Labor, is credited with the founding of Labor Day. He argued for a day of celebration to acknowledge labor's contributions to U.S. society. "There were other holidays representative of the religious, civil and military spirit, but none representative of the industrial spirit — the great vital force of every nation," he said and chose the first Monday in September for the holiday. The first Labor Day was celebrated on Sept. 5, 1882, in New York. According to the Encyclopedia Americana, members of the Knights of Labor paraded around Union Square in New York City on that day. Congress had passed a law supporting the union's appeal for an eight-hour work day in 1868, but since there was little enforcement, conditions did not improve. In 1884, the American Federation of Labor set a goal for enforcement of the eight-hour day to begin on May 1, 1886. What actually resulted on that day was a riot in Haymarket Square in Chicago. A great number of people were killed, police were present and a bomb was set off. In the end, eight people were charged with criminal incitement and sentenced to death. Four of the men were hanged, and May 1, 1888, was recognized as a memorial day to their efforts. Today, all 50 states and the District of Columbia provide for Labor Day in their laws. Kansas passed legislation in 1969 giving state workers the day off. "As for coming into the offices, they need not to," said Attorney General Robert Stephan. "However, some still do." Labor Day is not just a day anymore, it has become an entire weekend, the last vacation of summer and the start of fall. It is a holiday not just for factory laborers but for all who work. Traditionally, church services were held on Labor Day, or on the Sunday nearest to it, with community celebrations afterward. More recently, it has become a time for family celebrations. Stephan said he thinks the reasoning behind Labor Day has not been lost. "I think it's a holiday many cities still have commemorative ceremonies for," he said, but added that he thought children are not being taught the true meaning of Labor Day. "As with most holidays, there's a tendency not to reflect on the true meanings," Stephan said. "But, those that care know, and those that don't care, don't know."

First contest should draw bigger crowd

By The Collegian Staff

Single-game ticket sales for K-State's season-opener have increased by almost 4,500 as compared to last year's first home game, and athletic department officials are still predicting at least 25,000 people will attend the Austin Peay game Saturday.

In addition, 4,659 student season tickets had been sold by the close of business Thursday, only 311 down from last year's total. This is in sharp contrast to Friday's total when student season ticket sales were down by almost 1,000.

K-State drew 18,394 for the opener against Western Illinois last season. That will be easily topped Saturday, said Mike Jones, the athletic department's business manager.

"The big key is what the weather does," Jones said. "We're up considerably from last year, but then again we had almost 7,000 walk-ins last year. The (Willie Nelson) concert has brought in a lot of business, but I don't know if we'll have that many (walk-ins) this year because of the increase in price."

After Friday, Jones expects to equal or top last season's student season ticket total of 4,970.

"Hey, we sold 700 to 1,000 (student tickets) after the Western Illinois game last year. It's looking really good right now."

"Though student ticket sales won't top the 8,700 mark set in 1982, a large part of this season's success can be attributed to the residents of Goodnow Hall. They purchased a block of 240 tickets last Friday."

Staff/Andy Nelson

For defensive back Brad Lambert, left, and the other 17 seniors on the K-State football team, Saturday's season opener against Austin Peay State University marks the beginning of their final campaign with the Wildcats. Lambert believes the team will meet its goals in having a winning season this year.

Players halt labor talks; may strike

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The NFL labor talks stalled Thursday because of an impasse over protection for player representatives, although both sides agreed they would continue to work on avoiding the second player strike in the last five years.

After meeting for 4½ hours on Wednesday in Washington, the two chief negotiators — Gene Upshaw for the NFL Players Association, Jack Donlan for the league's Management Council — spoke by telephone for an hour and a half on Thursday.

John Jones, a spokesman for the Management Council, said Donlan flew back to New York after Upshaw told him he didn't want to continue negotiations "absent pay protection for player reps."

"From this time on," Jones said, "the Management Council will put its time and effort to prepare a proposal for settlement."

Upshaw, meanwhile, characterized the talks as "on hold."

The contract between the union and the league expired on Monday, although the union cannot strike until Sept. 15 because it didn't give its 60-day strike notice to the league and the National Labor Relations Board until July 15.

On the day the contract expired, the union's executive committee set a strike date, reported to be either the second or fourth week of the regular season. It will be voted on next Tuesday by the player representatives for the 28 teams.

Coach, players ready to attack

Seniors on 'Cat squad have been through a lot

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

They've been through the good, the bad and the ugly.

For the most part, though, it's been the ugly and the bad for this year's seniors on the Wildcat football team.

But this year, above any other year, they feel the team is about to turn the corner. "There's been a 360 degree turn in the way things are done around here," tailback Tony Jordan said. "We have better facilities, better work ethics."

"When I was a sophomore (the 1985 season) I didn't play much and we had a real bad year (1-10)," he added. "Everybody was really down on the whole season and everything that went on that season."

He also added the success of this year's team may lie heavily on the offensive line. A line, Jordan said, that is one of the better ones that he's run behind.

"These guys are tough," he said. "They are going to take some shots but they aren't going to take them lying down. They're aggressive and explosive and I can't wait until the season opener."

For defensive back Brad Lambert, the arrival of the new attitude came with the new players.

"I came back this fall and saw a whole lot of new faces," he said. "They had no idea what it was like here two years ago. It was a weird feeling at first, but everybody knows one another and we all believe that this is going to be a good season."

Linebacker Matt Wallerstedt agreed that the upcoming season could be a good one, provided there is a 'quick start.'

"We need a quick start," he said. "We need to beat Austin Peay and Army. I feel if we could do those two games then we have a real good chance of a 500-plus season."

He added that this year's belief of being a good team is for real.

"There have been times in the past that we said we look good and that we're ready to take the field," he said. "But this year we know."

"I can't explain it, but it's a feeling you have when you play sports. We're ready."

But since the arrival of Stan Parrish, Jordan, along with Lambert and Wallerstedt, said things have changed.

"This is the best attitude I have seen on our team in the four years that I've been here," Wallerstedt said. "Sure that 1-10 season was a trying one, but we hung in there and just toughed it out."

For Lambert, though, Parrish is the kind of coach that was needed all along.

"When he arrived here, he placed a whole lot of emphasis on being a complete person, citizen, student and an athlete," Lambert said. "When you practiced, he wanted the most out of you. But he was also giving you the same in return. If you worked hard for him, he would work hard for you. That's a good feeling to have and to know."

With their last season creeping up on them, they all expressed a feeling of disbelief that this was their curtain call.

"I've been here four years...I wasn't red-shirted like some of the other players," Wallerstedt said. "I'll never forget that first spring practice I had, I realized just what I had."

Parrish 'revved and ready' for Wildcat season opener

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Meet K-State football coach Stan Parrish, the master of opening-day victories.

Parrish is 11-0 in openers as a head coach, but he said Saturday's season and home opener against Division I-AA opponent Austin Peay State won't be any easier than the rest.

"I get more nervous every year," Parrish said. "In your mind you rehearse (the opener) and you visualize it 100 nights a year. I'm revved up and ready to go right now. The hard part's waiting. Opening night is always special."

"You always work a year for your opening game and I think it's crucial to every program to get off to a good start," he added. "It gives you a chance to catapult into bigger and better things."

It's also an opportunity for Parrish and the Wildcats to get the Northern Iowa monkey off their backs. Last year, K-State lost 17-10 to the University of Northern Iowa, another I-AA school.

"I sure hope so, 'cause that's been a thing we haven't enjoyed," Parrish said, "but at the same time you don't want to put those kinds of pressure on yourself. You want to go out, play hard, play well, play within your boundaries. I think things will work well if we do."

Coached by Emory Hale, Austin Peay is a member of the Ohio Valley Conference and has what many consider the toughest schedule of any Division I-AA school in the country. Besides K-State, the Governors play Division I-A member Cincinnati and former I-AA champ Southern Illinois.

Austin Peay went 5-6 last year and hasn't had a winning season since 1984 when it went 7-4. This season, though, they do have depth on offense.

Dale Edwards returns to quarterback after setting three Austin Peay records last year for pass attempts (259), completions (130) and yards (1,623) despite not putting any big numbers on the board in any single game.

Who the Governors build their offense around, though, is tailback Mike Lewis. The 5-foot-10, 185-pound junior from Palmetto, Fla., became only the third running back in school history to crack the 1,000-yard barrier with 1,032 yards.

He also led the squad in both rushing and receiving the past two seasons.

"I really like our tailback situation," Hale said. "Mike just makes things happen. When he's on the football field you know things are going to happen. He's just a winner."

In addition to keying on Lewis, Parrish said there are other factors to consider.

"(With a) veteran quarterback, big offensive line, veteran team, quick on defense, they're going to be a good test, no question," he said.

Both teams run multiple offenses and both employ the 50 defense.

"(It's) like looking in the mirror," Parrish said.

"We both do a lot of things similar which helped us in practice because we've been able to practice...our No. 1s against No. 1s (offense against defense)."

K-State doesn't have a clear size advantage over its Saturday opponent, but the 'Cats might be able to take advantage of the Governor's defense.

Rugby squad to take on alumni

By Jim Vader
Collegian Reporter

It's got the flow of soccer, the action of hockey and the contact of football. It's the game of rugby.

Rugby — a combination of the three sports, and then some — has been on the K-State campus since 1974. Although the faces have changed, the action has only gotten better.

In 1974 the Kansas State University Rugby Football Club was a combination of students and army personnel from Fort Riley. It is now comprised solely of students.

"Rugby is organized mayhem from the sidelines," says Boomer Markel a 1981-84 player who has since graduated. "It is the combination of hockey, soccer and football, acquiring rules from all three sports."

This Saturday is the seventh annual alumni rugby game, which will be played at noon at the rugby field northwest of the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Peters Recreation Complex.

According to Dave Todd, acting president of the rugby club, this year's returning alumni are the "cream of the crop."

"Best alumni ever, because of the fact most are still very active in the sport," he said. "Half still play for their union select team."

Alumni who come back bring with them the experience that is so vital in playing the game, Todd said.

Players such as Bill Sexton, acting president of the Heart of America Rugby Club, will return. Two players from the Western Select team, the Mustangs, are also coming.

The Mustang team is made up of the 25 best rugby players from the Colorado Rockies to the Mississippi River, which makes Kelly Croyan and Scott Bertrand two of the top 100 players in the country.

This year's team has a very positive attitude about the upcoming year.

"I've been here for five years and we have never looked so good this early before," explained Todd. "If we beat the alumni this weekend we will not lose more than two games (all season)," Todd said.

Ramone Fewell, sophomore wing for the team, is also very excited about the season. "This team has more potential than last year's team, because we have excellent backs," Ramone said.

The personnel is also better than in the past. "We are a lot deeper this year in every position," Fewell said.

Each week during the season, rugby players put in at least four hours in the weight room, five hours in practice, and then two games on Saturday.

"In many different sports you have to be in shape, but you must be in the best of shape to play rugby. There is a continuous flow to the game, playing 40 minute halves with no substitutions and no timeouts," Todd said. Everyone is constantly running, he said.

The club gets most of its money from the alumni weekend.

Labor force increase shows women among those in job market

By Jim Dietz
Collegian Reporter

By the year 2000, the labor force may have seen some great changes, but the job market will still closely resemble that of today, said Ken Hoyt, professor of education.

The largest change will probably be in the makeup of the labor force. It is currently made up 47 percent by white males, with only a 15 percent increase expected in the next 12 years. The remaining increase will be comprised 56 percent by women and 29 percent by minorities and immigrants, according to Workforce 2000, published by the Hudson Institute in June.

Compiled from Occupational Projections and Training Data, published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, April 1986

"Unless we do something to give them (minorities) a better education, America simply will not be able to compete," Hoyt said.

"We are currently providing the worst education to the ones who will be available to work in the year 2000," he said.

Although an industry might be growing rapidly, that does not mean its job market will be expanding as quickly, Hoyt said.

"The jobs that are growing the fastest are the real high tech jobs," he said. "But, those jobs only comprise about 6 percent of the total jobs."

That figure is not expected to change too much before the year 2000 and won't have much of an impact on the available job force, he added.

The most notable increase in the job market for the year 2000 is expected to be in the service-producing industries. It is estimated that it will increase by nearly 21 million jobs.

This increase is expected to account for almost all of the growth in the period between 1987 and 2000. These service-producing industries are not the fastest growing industries but will yield the most jobs, Hoyt said.

In a report released by the Bureau of Labor Statistics in April 1986 on the occupations with the largest job growth through 1995, it showed cashiers, registered nurses and janitors heading the list.

"On the average, job requirements are increasing except for some of the service-producing industries," Hoyt said. There will still be jobs for the unskilled high school dropout, but these will suffer a slight decline.

"The industry growing the fastest is small business," Hoyt said. These small businesses are usually in the service-producing industry because there is little room in the manufacturing industry, he said.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics report, most of the service industry businesses are likely to be small, thus they will have a higher job turnover rate.

"Workers will need to be prepared through education and training for more frequent changes of occupations and employers," the report stated.

One thing that is often ignored by most people is that though the job title does not change, the work does, Hoyt said. Jobs are increasingly being changed by high tech tools.

"The fact that the jobs remain the same does not mean you will need to know the same things to do the job," Hoyt said.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics also predicted a sharp reeducation in agricultural jobs. However, there are misconceptions about what is happening in agriculture, said Bruce Laughlin, director of career planning and placement. Production agriculture has lost people, but there are still opportunities for ag expertise in other areas.

Laughlin also said the decline in agricultural jobs is already noticeable.

"There has been a decline in other areas as well. Namely, the petroleum industry, but those have not necessarily involved a complete close-down as a shift in emphasis," Laughlin said.

Hoyt has compiled papers for more than 20 years on the topic of vocational guidance. During those years, Hoyt has been published in more than 100 different journals on the topic.

nors' inexperience on defense. Only four starters return from their defense and it had trouble stopping the run last year.

It may be good news for K-State's newly installed ground game and record-setting tailback Tony Jordan, who needs just 29 yards to move into 10th on the Wildcats' all-time rushing list.

"Any time you have inexperience you don't know whether it's going to be a weak point, but certainly guys that haven't played are more susceptible to making mistakes. Hopefully, we can exploit that," Parrish said.

"We may have a great offense, but they are not going to get much of a chance to do anything if they are standing on the sidelines and other teams are driving on us," Hale said.

Tim Hanson earned the starting quarterback job Wednesday, but the 'Cat coach said transfer Gary Swim will also play. Parrish said there wasn't a set schedule as to how much time the quarterbacks will see.

"You have to play the game to win. Although they're both going to play, (the change) won't happen until it happens naturally on the field Saturday night," Parrish said. "I'll know when the time is right."

NOTES: Game time is 6 p.m. from KSU Stadium, followed by a Willie Nelson concert...this is the first meeting between the two schools...the game will be broadcast by WIBW-AM (580) with the pregame show starting at 4:30 p.m....K-State is starting its 92nd season of football; Austin Peay is beginning its 51st...the Wildcats are 53-29-4 in season openers; the Governors are 18-30-2.

Landon Kassebaum, Wednesday, Sept. 9, at 10:30 a.m. in McCain Auditorium.

Preceding her address, Kassebaum will tour the special exhibit in McCain with Tony Crawford, university archivist. Crawford has assembled a photographic display of all 75 Landon lectures in the series, beginning with Landon himself and concluding with Franco Modigliani. The lobby of McCain also displays the posters created for the last 37 lectures in the series.

The Landon lectures are considered one of the most prestigious in the nation. Since its beginning in 1966, it has attracted three U.S. presidents, two vice presidents, numerous heads of state and major figures in the news.

Following Kassebaum's address, she will attend the luncheon for patrons — now numbering more than 450 — but return to Topeka to lunch with her father before returning to Washington, D.C.

"I've been here four years...I wasn't redshirted like some of the other players," Wallerstedt said. "I'll never forget that first spring practice I had. I realized just what I had to do to really make it here. It's tough and I'll miss it."

"It's gone by real quick," Jordan added. "I wish I could do it all over again."

"It doesn't seem possible, but this is my last year," Lambert said. "That last home game is when it will probably hit me that this is the last season."

Lambert added the seniors aren't making any goals without the rest of the team.

"We wanted to set some goals," he said of the senior class. "But the team, as a whole, has to make the goals. We're going to go out and play the best that we can and the hardest that we can. If we're behind, we'll have to dig deep down inside ourselves and see what we are really made of."

Jordan, though, chose not to comment too much on leaving but on the future of the 'Cat program after the seniors leave.

"It will get better as the years go on," he said. "Two years ago nobody knew who the new guy (Stan Parrish) was or how he was going to approach the whole situation."

Reagan helps Landon celebrate 100th

By Candy Leonard
Government Editor

TOPEKA — In a centennial birthday celebration Sunday honoring Alf Landon, President Ronald Reagan referred to the one-time Republican nominee for president as the "living soul of Kansas," saying that the former Kansas governor embodied the "quiet strength and simple decency" of all America. The president and Nancy Reagan were in Topeka Sunday afternoon to honor Landon.

"I had a little better luck," Reagan said, comparing his and Landon's presidential aspirations. "But, I also I better years and an easier field." Landon made his party proud, Reagan said, and although it wasn't a regular thing to do, Landon spoke against government spending.

I just wish I could get you to come back to Washington and help drum that message into the Congress," Reagan said. Landon's daughter, Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, attended the celebration. Besides the family, about 60 guests were at the birthday party, including Chief of Staff Howard Baker, Sen. Robert Dole, Gov. Mike Hayden, former Gov. Bill Avery, and other legislators and state party leaders.

You don't know what a joy it is to have a birthday party where someone honestly call me 'kid,'" Reagan said.

The rain held off long enough for Landon to blow out the single candle on his elephant-shaped cake, which was held by Nancy Reagan. In the background, the University of Kansas marching band played the state song, "Home On the Range," while Landon's grandchildren served birthday cake to the guests.

Reagan ended by saying, "All the best to Alf." See LONDON, Page 14

K-State could handle these increases for several years, he said. Enrollment now stands at more than 20,000, but in the past K-State has more than 20,000 students. Thomas Frith, director of housing, said this year's enrollment jump left immediate openings in men's housing and only a few in women's housing. All of the residence halls are in use.

He said 139 more spaces could be created by converting single rooms to double rooms. More than 100 students are living on campus this year (compared with) last year, he said. Although the increase was not a surprise, it was greater than anticipated, he said. "If somebody had asked me last year's Eve what our occupancy would be like this fall, I'd have said we'd have spaces this year," he said. "Last year when our numbers went down, we had corridors we didn't use."

The filling up of the halls has had a big impact. See NUMBERS, Page 12

Women harriers look to build on last year's success story

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

For John Capriotti, K-State cross country coach, the question this fall will be "what will the women's team do for an encore?"

Last fall the team finished second to Oklahoma State in the Big Eight meet and qualified for nationals by placing second in the regional meet.

"Right now it's still a little too early to tell what we're going to be like this season," Capriotti said. "We've got good leadership in Alysun Deckert, Anne Stadler and Angie Barry. We also have a lot of good young talent."

That young talent he's referring to is Laura Haggerty (a transfer from Iowa State), Becky Ives, Marge Eddy and Jenny

Faunce (sister of K-State's former punter, Troy Faunce.)

"Right now, practices are really looking good," Capriotti said. "What we're really needing is for someone to come forward from the younger runners and push the leaders."

The 'Cats will start their season Sept. 26 at Iowa State. As for this year's finish in the Big Eight, Capriotti said, "We're looking for a top five finish." See WOMEN'S, Page 7

Men's CC team faces challenge

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

"Baptism by fire."

The person who uttered this quote must have been thinking of this year's K-State men's cross country team.

This year's squad will be primarily made up of freshmen and sophomores.

Gone are Ron Stahl, Pat Hessini, Jim Knudsen and Jan Jonsson. Stahl and Knudsen have departed due to used up eligibility and Hessini and Jonsson due to redshirt status.

"I didn't want to redshirt (senior) Pat (Hessini), but he's been battling some tendinitis in his knee all summer long and we thought it best he be redshirted," Capriotti said. "That move gives us a very young team."

Jonsson returned to Sweden to finish up his commitment of military duty.

Those moves give the nod to junior Robby Hays, the most experienced returnee. After that, there will be a pack of freshmen and sophomores in contention to make the top five spots.

"We had an excellent recruiting season, landing a lot of excellent runners," Capriotti said. "We're also contemplating redshirting either David Warders or Matt Vavala (both sophomores)." See MEN'S, Page 7

Golfers strive toward improved record

By Chris Wilhelm
Sports Writer

Improving on last year's eighth-place finish in the Big Eight Conference is men's golf coach Rob Sedorcek's No. 1 priority.

Sedorcek said the team will have seven members returning from last year's squad, with five individuals who made all tournament trips last year.

Although the Wildcat golfers took eighth in the Big Eight Conference last year, they will have a much better team than in previous years and should have a good chance at bettering last season's eighth place Big Eight finish, Sedorcek said.

"We did all right last year. A lot of the guys got a lot of playing time in over the summer. They're back. I'm going to work with them and we're going to get our confidence built back up."

—Rob Sedorcek

Sedorcek noted the competition in Big Eight golf as some of the best. Oklahoma and Oklahoma State both finished among the top ten teams in the nation last year.

"The Big Eight tournament was our worst tournament of the year last season. We wound up losing to KU (Kansas) by one or two strokes per man," Sedorcek said.

Some of the key returning members of the Wildcat squad include Jeff Sedorcek, John Shields, Darran Neuschafer and redshirt Tim Jennings.

Coach Sedorcek said many of the members of his squad played in tournaments over the summer, when some succeeded and others struggled.

"We did all right last year. A lot of the guys got a lot of playing time in over the summer. They're back. I'm going to work with them and we're going to get our confidence built back up," he said.

The men's team has a lot of experience, and with the addition of some new faces, Sedorcek is hoping his squad will be more competitive.

"We'll be a lot stronger this year. For one thing, the guys know what Big Eight golf is all about now. They know what they have to work on to improve," Sedorcek said.

The men will open the season by playing KU on Sept. 14-15. After losing a close match to the Jayhawks last year, the men are hoping to get off to a good start by defeating their conference rivals.

"The enthusiasm is really there. We had enthusiasm last year but it was nothing like the enthusiasm we have now," Sedorcek said. "These guys are tired of losing. They are going to come out ready to fire."

Student rise

As K-State Crew starts its fall practice schedule at Tuttle Creek this season, it marks the team's 25th year. Coach Don Rose started the organization in 1964, and this fall he expects the largest turnout in the history of the team. A trip to Henley, England, in July to compete in the Henley Championship is included in this year's schedule.

Crew beginning 'silver' season

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

One good sign in any sport is to see a large increase in the number of people trying out each year.

It doesn't guarantee there are any great athletes among the bunch, but the odds are sure better there will be, which is what Don Rose is hoping for this year.

"We're up over a hundred right now and we are expecting the largest turnout in the history of crew," K-State crew coach Rose said. "We expect between 40 and 50 people will try out this fall."

Rose is excited about more than just the increase in crew members this year. He's also celebrating the 25th ("silver") anniversary of the crew—a program he started from scratch in 1964 and has built into a midwest power.

"This is our 25th year and we've made a big effort to bolster the numbers (of crew members) and to enhance the racing schedule, including taking our men's varsity-eight to Henley, England, for the Henley Championship next July," Rose said.

"(The trip to England) is a pretty ambitious program for K-State," he added. "We don't want to go just to tour England—that would certainly be a waste of time and money. We want to go and compete over there, but we're going to have to have faster crews than we did a year ago in order to do it."

The crew can't spend too much time celebrating right now because of its fall preparation for the spring season.

"We really don't put great emphasis on competition, as far as the fall goes, however, we will take our experienced crews to the Head of the Des Moines River Race at the end of September," Rose said.

"We're working out on a five-day-a-week basis going out on the water as much as we can," he added. "The best way to get better in rowing is to do it, so we'll be out in our shells, weather permitting, until the first part of November."

Workouts are very different in the fall than during the competitive spring season.

"In the fall we usually like to take distance workouts as much as we can at a (slower pace), so they can refresh themselves on their technique and get it all down," Rose said. "In the spring we're busier picking crews and teaching them how to race and rowing a higher number of strokes per minute."

"The name of the game is to make more improvement over what we did last year and to be faster than we were a year ago," he said. "We haven't reached the point where we feel that we're going to be maintaining. That might be the situation for the University of Washington or Harvard University (who are traditionally good crews)...but we're not maintaining, we're still gaining. We've had a continual build-up of rowing for the last three or four years and I look for it again this year."

Improvement of all three crew programs—the men's, women's and high school's crew—is something he feels has already begun to happen during the first week of practice.

"Our high school women's crew was a marvelous addition," Rose said. "They're out in full force this year and a little stronger than they were a year ago."

The main attraction of K-State crew is the men's varsity-eight team. Last year the team was beaten only once, at the Midwest Regionals.

'Cats not joking about football

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Welcome to another season of K-State football. What's that? You agree with Sports Illustrated magazine and say that football in Kansas is a joke?

Let's consider this—is football in the Sunflower State a joke if:

—K-State's athletic department raised $140,000 to improve lockerroom and weight room facilities and made them one of the class acts in the Big Eight Conference?

"I think the complex is only a reflection of the attitude of this university," Coach Stan Parrish said. "And as you look at the new (Fred Bramlage) coliseum nearing completion, you can also see the attitude of this university towards athletics. Fortunately for me, I've been the benefactor of a lot of this."

—A player such as Tim MacDonald, who quit the day before the Northern Iowa game last year, reports back to camp 25 pounds heavier, bench presses 494 pounds and wins a starting spot at defensive tackle?

No, K-State isn't joking about its football program at all. While it will be several seasons before the 'Cats challenge Oklahoma or Nebraska for the Big Eight title, this year should definitely be a step in the right direction.

Last year, Parrish suffered through his first losing season in his 11-year coaching career when K-State went 2-9 overall and 1-6 in the Big Eight. He now knows what to expect from his team, and realizes the grueling demand the seven-game conference schedule can exact on a team—and its coach.

"I'm sitting here with my sanity after last season which is one thing I'm very proud of," Parrish said. "And we've got a lot better football team. When we lost the sixth game last year it got a lot tougher."

"I don't want to go through what I went through last fall."

To prevent last season's dismal shortcomings when the 'Cats were one of the nation's worst teams offensively, Parrish has "somewhat grounded" the "Air Parrish" passing attack. This is due to the talent in K-State's running game this season, led by record-setting tailback Tony Jordan.

"The strength of our team lies with the running backs. I think that's what we need to do to win. We've got to control the ball against some of these teams," Parrish said. K-State's second-year head coach also said the players wanted to change the offensive strategy.

"We were honest with our players and told them we needed to build around our best players, and they all wanted to play more physical football," he said.

Still, Parrish plans to throw 25 times a game. But this year's air attack will feature play-action passing instead of the drop-back style.

"I think we need to be balanced," Parrish said, "but we have to keep our defense off the field for 90 snaps a week in this conference."

K-State's strength lies with its running game, wide receivers, linebackers and defensive secondary. Weaknesses can be found in the offensive and defensive lines where there are quality players but not much depth. Success in the non-conference portion of the schedule is essential, but this includes games against No. 18-ranked Iowa at Iowa City, and Army and Tulsa at Manhattan. And the so-called warmup schedule doesn't get any easier in the future when K-State takes on the likes of Ohio State and Arizona.

Strong Safety Erick Harper (6), who had an outstanding year as a freshman, is expected to help the Wildcat defense remain strong. K-State head coach Stan Parrish now realizes the grueling demands of the seven game Big Eight schedule.

When Big Eight play begins, the 'Cats will have to contend with OU and Nebraska—ranked No. 1 and 2, respectively, in the nation—and Colorado.

"Oklahoma is one of the most talented football teams of the decade," Parrish said. "Nebraska, they're always tough, and Colorado would not surprise me by winning nine games."

Last season, Parrish said K-State would win six games. This year, he has made the same prediction. Only this time, the players have established the goals.

The following is a position by position breakdown of the Wildcats.

Receivers: John Williams and Dan Hughes will start at wide receiver, backed up by Lawrence Tolbert and Eric Blades. At tight end is Brent Cotton, who replaces the injured Kent Dean (hernia) who is out until at least the Army game.

Williams, who ran a 10.45 100-yard dash this spring in track, caught a 51-yard scoring toss from Tim Hanson in a scrimmage Aug. 22.

"Williams is the fastest straight-on player in the Big Eight," Parrish said.

Offensive Line: Only two players from last year's team are in starting positions.

"We're not very deep," Parrish said. "We'll have to have Lady Luck stay with that group because we're just not very deep in numbers."

Quarterback: Hanson, who entered the spring as the No. 2 quarterback behind highly touted juco transfer Gary Swim, had an impressive scrimmage and earned the starting nod three days before the season opener.

Still, both are talented and Parrish said both will play Saturday in the season opener against Austin Peay State.

"I feel comfortable that we can win with either of them in there," Parrish said. "I look at this as a very positive situation for our team."

Running Backs: Jordan will start at tailback and former nose guard Rick Lewis is the fullback. Parrish said the other four running backs will also see action, including Maurice Henry and Terry Richards at tailback and Lee Pickett and Ray Wilson as fullbacks.

Jordan, though, is the key to K-State's ground attack this year.

"There were a couple of games last year when that man deserved the Congressional Medal of Honor. We didn't block and we didn't throw, we just gave him the ball."

And when Jordan got the ball, he ran well, including a K-State record 218 yards on 35 carries last season against Iowa State.

Kickers: Mark Porter is the No. 1 place kicker but David Kruger may handle kick-offs. Ken Olson earned punting honors.

Linebackers: Grady Newton and Dwayne Bazille return to handle outside linebacking duties.

"An outstanding combination that played well for us last year," Parrish said. David Wallace and Matt Wallerstedt are at inside positions.

Defensive Line: "Once again, we've had almost a total infusion of new players," Parrish said. And once again, several players will see action throughout the course of the season here. Doug Blackburne (left tackle), Jim Oehm (middle guard), and MacDonald (right tackle) were named starters.

Defensive Secondary: It hurt the 'Cats last year when most of the secondary was injured and freshmen had to take their place. But the now-experienced sophomores make this area one of the defense's strongest suits.

Erick Harper is at strong safety, Robert Basterwood is the free safety and Marcus Miller and Brad Lambert are cornerbacks.

Reagan helps Landon celebrate 100th

By Candy Leonard
Government Editor

TOPEKA — In a centennial birthday celebration Sunday honoring Alf Landon, President Ronald Reagan referred to the one-time Republican nominee for president as the "living soul of Kansas," saying that the former Kansas governor embodied the "quiet strength and simple decency" of all America. The president and Nancy Reagan were in Topeka Sunday afternoon to honor Landon.

"I had a little better luck," Reagan said, comparing his and Landon's residential aspirations. "But, I also had better years and an easier field." Landon made his party proud, Reagan said, and although it wasn't a popular thing to do, Landon spoke out against government spending.

Landon's life/Page 14

"I just wish I could get you to come back to Washington and help drum that message into the Congress," Reagan said. Landon's daughter, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, attended the celebration. Besides the family, about 60 guests were at the birthday party, including Chief of Staff Howard Baker, Sen. Robert Dole, Gov. Mike Hayden, former Gov. Bill Avery, Republican legislators and state parliamentarians.

You don't know what a joy it is to have a birthday party where someone honestly calls me 'kid,'" Reagan said.

The rain held off long enough for Landon to blow out the single candle on his elephant-shaped cake, which was held by Nancy Reagan. In the background, the University of Kansas marching band played the state song, "Home On the Range," while Landon's grandchildren served birthday cake to the guests.

Reagan ended by saying, "All right. See LANDON, Page 14"

K-State will be running the I-formation this year and sure enough, Tony Jordan, No. 29, will be hugging the pigskin the most. Coach Stan Parrish, though, has three more backs that more or less resemble Clydesdale horses at his disposal.

Parrish feels this year's strength lies in the running game. And that running game starts with Jordan.

"We have a player that did a phenomenal job under very adverse conditions last year in Tony Jordan," coach Stan Parrish said at the Big Eight Skywriters news conference Aug. 20. "I think he's bigger, stronger, faster, more competitive now. I know a lot of people, particularly the pros, are very interested in watching him this year."

"When you have a Tony Jordan on your team, obviously you have to utilize him the best you can," he added. "Either you put the ball in his stomach and let him carry it or you pull it out and throw a pass off the action. One man doesn't make a club but Tony can make a heck of an impact and we plan on utilizing him and building a lot of our offense around him."

Jordan needs only 29 yards to move into K-State's all-time top 10 for career rushing; he currently has 901 yards in his career. He already holds the single game rushing record with 218 yards at Iowa State last year. Jordan finished last season fifth in the Big Eight with 738 yards.

Jordan is a big man. Listed at 6-3 and 228 pounds, he should be able to take a lot of punishment—and he's the smallest of the running backs.

Yes, Jordan is the lightest of the running backs. If he starts to get tired, Parrish has at his disposal a corral of big horses to haul the ball.

"We issued them neck yokes (supports) when they got here this fall," Parrish said of his running backs.

The main horse will be Jordan, and providing some of the holes for him and quarterback Tim Hanson will be Lee Pickett and Rick Lewis at the fullback slot.

Lewis, No. 44, at 6-2 and 225 pounds, and Pickett, No. 30, at 5-11 and 230 pounds will be able to interchange and continually create some gaps for the likes of Jordan to walk through.

Lewis moved over from the defensive side where he played noseguard last season when Parrish, in search of a noseguard, asked Lewis if he wouldn't mind playing there.

Lewis agreed and called it the worst year of football that he has ever played.

The number two fullback, Pickett, a small dynamo with legs like tree trunks, was praised by teammate Jordan as being able to have an impact on this year's team.

Running behind Jordan will be one of the more talented of the big backs, Maurice Henry.

For Henry, No. 28, 6-1 and 230, this will be the year he could finally come through and have not only an impact on the offense but also the Big Eight.

"If Maurice is completely back and well, it gives us two tailbacks that really can bang the ball up inside," Parrish said.

Oklahoma preseason Big 8, national favorite

By The Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla.—Last year, the Oklahoma Sooners were known as much for their characters as for their talent. This year, with his team ranked preseason No. 1, Coach Barry Switzer said it's the team's character that he likes.

"Every team has its personalities, they come and go," Switzer told Big Eight Skywriters on their first stop Tuesday. "We've got a good group of kids, a bunch who are fun to coach, kids with a lot of character."

"I'd say 98 to 99 percent of our players are really great kids."

On the field, this year's Oklahoma team will look much the same as a year ago—in all, 15 starters return. The one player noticeably missing is Brian Bosworth, who parlayed his painted hair, earrings and sometimes volatile comments into a multimillion-dollar National Football League contract.

"Bosworth was the only player who really made statements that got national attention," Switzer said. "No one else ever really got out of bounds like Boz did."

"He'll be missed as a player. Brian and I got along fine—I cussed him, and he smiled right back at me. But I don't think our football team has any person like him."

That isn't to say the Sooners have gone from Technicolor to black and white, however. There are still people like quarterback Jamelle Holieway, whose newly shaved head accents his shades and earring. And Keith Jackson, the cello playing All-America tight end. And there are others.

"We've got enough, internally," Switzer said.

And they appear to have enough talent to make a serious run for their second national title in three years. With eight starters back on offense and seven on defense, and a soft non-conference schedule, only a season-ending game at Nebraska would seem to be the major obstacle.

The catalyst on offense is Holieway. As a sophomore last year, Holieway rushed for a team-leading 811 yards and was named the Big Eight's offensive player of the year.

"As far as innate running ability, quickness, being able to make people miss him, he's as good as we've ever had," Switzer said. "He's an exceptional option quarterback, and he throws the ball better than people think he does."

The backfield, including fullback Lydell Carr and halfbacks Anthony Stafford and Patrick Collins, has Switzer excited. And why not? An offensive line Switzer calls "the best we've ever had here" will be opening the holes.

Jackson is a consensus All-America pick. He caught only 14 passes a year ago, but he averaged 28.8 yards per catch and five of those went for touchdowns.

"Defensively, I don't think we'll be as good," Switzer said. "But how can you be better than the statistics last year when we were the best in NCAA history?"

The 1986 Oklahoma defense led the nation in six major categories. And not only is Bosworth missing, but so are both tackles.

"Still, I think the strength of our defense was at linebacker, inside and outside, and the secondary," Switzer said. "As long as they're healthy, we'll be a good defensive team."

intensive courses, needed material will be bought, he said. Hoffman said he expects an increase next year close to this year's students.

K-State could handle these increases for several years, he said. Enrollment now stands at more than 20,000, but in the past K-State has more than 20,000 students. Thomas Frith, director of housing, says this year's enrollment jump left immediate openings in men's housing and only a few in women's housing. All of the residence halls are in use.

Though the increase was not as big as it was greater than anticipated, he said. "Somebody had asked me last year's Eve what our occupancy would be like this fall, I'd have said it'd be four years with empty spaces, I'd have spaces this year," he said. "Last year when our numbers went down, we had corridors we filled up of the halls has had."

Women's tennis squad optimistic despite loss of last year's top player

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

After finishing sixth in the Big Eight Conference last year and losing its No. 1 player, the K-State women's tennis team doesn't appear to have much to be optimistic about. But that's not the case at all. "I'm very excited about this year," said K-State women's tennis coach Steve Bietau. "We're stronger than we've ever been and these girls are very mature and business-like in their approach to practice and working and improving themselves. I don't know how good they'll end up being right now, but I think they can be very good."

There are five girls returning from last year's squad: Sigrid Ivarsson, Annika Emtell, Valerie Rive, Nancy Ramirez and Tara White. Bietau is happy with the improvement they've shown over the summer and expecting a lot from them this fall.

"In terms of conditioning they are in a lot better shape as a group coming in over the summer," Bietau said. "The fact they've all got a year or two of experience is going to make a big difference this fall."

The returning players aren't the only ones Bietau is expecting a lot out of this year though.

"We have three new girls, Marijke Nel from South Africa, Misty Britner from Bonner Springs and Thresa Burchan from Little Rock, Arkansas," Bietau said. "The new people are very good and expect them to all be in the top six on the team before the year is over."

"Individually, Marijke played number one for Texas-El Paso last year and had some good wins including KU's No. 1 girl, so she's an established player," added Bietau. "She spent the summer playing at home in South Africa and improved a lot."

"Misty is a freshman coming in and has been ranked in the top 50 nationally in the younger age groups. She had a couple of years where she got out of tennis a bit, but she's back at it now. She's a very talented player and a particularly strong doubles player," Bietau added.

"Thresa spent the summer doing two things: one playing the Southern circuit, probably the strongest section in the country, in addition to playing in the National Hardcourts and the National Clay Courts Tournaments," added Bietau. "She's been playing the best people in the nation all summer and is somebody who is going to help us a lot right away."

There are a couple of differences in this year's team compared with last year's squad, Bietau said.

With the loss of last year's No. 1 player, Lena Svensson, the No. 1 singles position is wide open at the moment with several players in contention for the spot.

"The thing that's really changed this year is, at least to this point, we don't have a clear cut No. 1," Bietau said. "Last year we knew Lena was going to be No. 1 and that's not so clear cut right now."

Staff/Steve Wolgast

Annika Emtell, a returning tennis team member from Sweden, practices her volley. In two weeks, K-State will host the first meet of the season.

"The other thing that's a lot different is depth. There are probably four or five players that potentially could play No. 1 before the year is over. We are as strong this year at our No. 6 six position as we were last year at our No. 4 spot," Bietau added.

The fall season doesn't start until Sept.

18, but the team has already been practicing for a week.

"I consider the fall to be a teaching season," Bietau said. "A season where we make changes in player's strokes and establish doubles teams. The fall is a chance to do all those things that you wouldn't normally do during the regular season. It's also a chance for the new players to get to see what the competition is like."

Rugby team fights for success

By Chris Wilhelm
Sports Writer

K-State's rugby team has grown in numbers, which is a very good sign for its prospects this year.

This year's squad numbers 55 compared with last year's 43 members. The club, which isn't directly affiliated with the K-State athletic department, had a record of 8-3 last year and finished third in the western regional and 10th in the nation on the collegiate level.

The club is optimistic about its chances of improving on last year's feats, as they graduated only one starter and are gaining back players who were injured.

"All of our injured guys are back at full strength, and there is a lot of fighting for positions going on," club president Dave Todd said.

The lack of collegiate teams in the Midwest has forced the K-State team to compete in some club matches, to allow them to play a ten-game schedule. Club matches are somewhat tougher because anyone is eligible to play, while collegiate play is limited to people 25 years of age or younger.

The team holds its practices on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 5:30 p.m. at the rugby field just west of the intramural fields. They also lift weights on Mondays and Wednesdays at 6 p.m. in Ahearn Field House.

Todd acknowledged the assistance of Mike Jones, business manager for the athletic department, noting he has been extremely helpful in getting facilities for the squad.

"Although the Student Senate gives us $500, rugby is a self-funding club," Todd said. "We raise money at our alumni game by selling T-shirts and by taking donations."

The K-State club will play all of its home matches on the intramural fields. Todd said the average crowd for the home matches often numbers as many as 300 people.

"Rugby is really fun to watch," Todd said. "It's a fluid, moving game, and the action doesn't stop."

The club—known as a powerhouse in collegiate rugby—has had several members chosen to play on select rugby squads throughout the Midwest. Besides Todd, coach Danny Blea, Mike Powers and Kevin Wagner all played on the Heart of America select squad this summer.

Last season, K-State defeated KU in the final regular-season match to advance to the Midwest regional in collegiate play. For the last seven years in a row, the K-State-KU match has been the deciding game for advancing to the regional. The K-State club has won all seven of those matches.

The K-State squad will open their season by playing their annual alumni game Sept. 5. Out of 200 alumni members, 45 are expected to play.

"Our alumni will be the toughest competition we will face all year," Todd said.

K-State cross country coach John Capriotti watches his team stretch at the beginning of practice in Memorial Stadium. While the men's team is rebuilding this year, the women will try to compete as strongly as they did last season.

Men's

"We're just going to let the younger members of the team find out what it really takes to run on the national level and see what it takes to make it all the way," he added.

The move is similar to former Wildcat football coach Jim Dickey's move when he tossed in the towel in 1981 and banked on the redshirts helping out the following year. The plan worked, and the following year K-State earned its first-ever bowl bid in 1982.

"I believe that this team is going to learn a lot during this year," Capriotti said. "When we combine this year's group of runners next year with the ones coming back from redshirting, we'll have a strong group of runners for a few years."

Still, the future is what Capriotti is banking on with his redshirt move.

Big Eight, it's up for grabs among five teams, including K-State.

"Colorado, Oklahoma State, Iowa State, Nebraska and ourselves all have a chance to win the Big Eight title," he said. "If anybody has a good shot at taking it, it would probably have to be Oklahoma State. They have two of their top five (runners) returning and good group of young runners coming back."

Capriotti said this year's team has the added security of depth and experience.

"We have a lot of girls who have run before and know what it takes to win in this conference and at the national level," he said. "Right now...we have a lot of questions and if they turn out to be plusses, we could have a very good year again."

Capriotti's approach to his team's preparation has changed since he took over the reins from Steve Miller last year.

"Last year we probably ran too many meets and that tired some of them out," he said. "This year we won't be running as many meets and we'll be having only two or three quality meets leading up to the Big Eight and national meets."

Capriotti said this year will be more difficult for both the men and women to qualify for the national meet in that only the top two teams will go from their region. Last year the top three qualified.

"It'll be tougher," he said. "We finished second last year and know we don't have the same people back to help us out, and this time only the top two qualify. It'll be tough, but we should be there."

Reagan helps Landon celebrate 100th

By Candy Leonard
Government Editor

TOPEKA — In a centennial birthday celebration Sunday honoring Alf Landon, President Ronald Reagan referred to the one-time Republican nominee for president as the "living soul of Kansas," saying that the former Kansas governor embodied the "quiet strength and simple decency" of all America. The president and Nancy Reagan were in Topeka Sunday afternoon to honor Landon.

"I had a little better luck," Reagan said, comparing his and Landon's presidential aspirations. "But, I also better years and an easier field." Landon made his party proud, Reagan said, and although it wasn't a usual thing to do, Landon spoke against government spending.

Bill Avery, and other legislators and state leaders. "You don't know what a joy it is to have a birthday party where someone honestly call me 'kid,'" Reagan

Reagan ended by saying, "All I see is Landon, Page 14

Intensive courses, needed material will be bought, he said. Hoffman said he expects an increase next year close to this year's students.

State could handle these increases for several years, he said. Student now stands at more than 10,000, but in the past K-State has more than 20,000 students. Thomas Frith, director of housing, said this year's enrollment jump left immediate openings in men's dorms and only a few in women's dorms. All of the residence halls are in use.

Jackson declares intentions of announcing candidacy bid

By The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Jesse Jackson, declaring he has a good chance of becoming America's first black president, said Monday he will announce his candidacy for the Democratic nomination on Oct. 10 and pledged to campaign for "jobs, jobs, jobs, peace and justice."

"In a real sense, I'm trying to fulfill the best dimension of the Constitution," he said. "If I can in fact become president, indeed as (John) Kennedy became as a Catholic, indeed as (Franklin D.) Roosevelt came riding in a wheelchair...every woman can, every man, boy and woman and girl can," he said on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America."

"So in a real sense, I'm giving America a chance to make a choice to fulfill the highest and best of an authentic and honest democracy," he said.

Jackson, who for months has been campaigning around the nation as an undeclared candidate, said he will make his candidacy official in Raleigh, N.C., at the national convention of his Rainbow Coalition.

"We agree that what we need is not just a new occupant for the White House. We need a new direction for our nation," said Jackson, 45. "We need a government that cares, a president committed to the well-being of the American family who will protect them from the exportation of jobs and the importation of drugs."

Jackson, who in 1984 won primaries in Louisiana and the District of Columbia, becomes the most liberal in the Democrats' sizable field of presidential contenders for 1988.

He said his new campaign will work on broadening the party's base of support, widening its "mainstream into a river," in part by continuing his old theme of registering new voters.

"The leadership of the Democratic party is going to be much fairer to me in part because I'm part of the leadership of the Democratic party," Jackson said.

"The party has recognized the errors of its ways in 1984. It will expand and coalesce and win in 1988," he said. "We will work out any internal problems internally. My campaign must focus externally on jobs, jobs jobs, peace and justice."

People should vote against him "if I do not make sense," Jackson

Paying for enrollment rise Housing, classes fill to capacity

By Mark Schreiner
Contributing Writer

Although K-State's enrollment increase is universally viewed as a blessing, by no means does it come without a price, campus officials say.

The increase of more than 600 students compared with last fall has filled almost all available campus housing and caused a slight class overcrowding problem, said University Provost James R. Coffman.

Analysis

The increase has also required a restructuring of K-State's budget.

Coffman said the extra students have strained the budget because "budget changes in response to student enrollment lag two years behind."

He said money originally intended for maintenance or operating expenses has gone to hire more instructors.

"We're at a major point with our backs against the wall financially," Coffman said.

"It takes a real effort to restructure funding for a two- or three-year period until funding catches up (with enrollment)," he said. "But over the long pull, it will be good for the University."

K-State's budget may receive a boost in the form of a tuition fee release from the state, said Robert Krause, vice-president for institutional advancement.

When enrollment exceeds projections, as it did this year, the extra students' tuition reverts to Kansas, he said. A tuition fee release would give these funds back to K-State.

The state gives money back to the University of Kansas in the form of a tuition fee release because their enrollment traditionally exceeds projections, Krause said.

"We hope that would establish some sort of precedent, and we would hope for the same consideration here (at K-State)," he said.

Coffman said the extra students have also created larger classes in some areas. No classes, except some sections of freshman English, are overcrowded, Coffman and Krause said.

"Things are tight, and I'm aware of some individual classes where they had to switch things around," Krause said. "We may have some areas where we may be short. By-and-large, we've been able to accommodate the major stress points."

Coffman said that except in some areas of architecture and design, K-State has enough equipment and materials in classes to handle the extra students.

The budget restructuring did not allow new equipment and materials purchases in response to the increased enrollment, Coffman said.

As the budget catches up with enrollment and this year's freshmen become upperclassmen with more lab-intensive courses, needed materials will be bought, he said.

Coffman said he expects an increase next year close to this year's 600 students.

K-State could handle these increases for several years, he said. Enrollment now stands at more than 18,000, but in the past K-State has had more than 20,000 students.

Thomas Frith, director of housing, said this year's enrollment jump left no immediate openings in men's housing and only a few in women's housing. All of the residence halls rooms are in use.

He said 139 more spaces could be generated by converting single rooms to double rooms. More than 300 students are living on campus this year (compared with) last year, Frith said.

Although the increase was not a surprise, it was greater than anticipated, he said. ## Kassebaum to speak at K-State

By The Collegian Staff

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum will be the first speaker of the 1987-1988 Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues at 10:30 a.m. Wednesday in McCain Auditorium.

The lecture will mark the 100th birthday of her father, Alf Landon, for whom the lecture series was named in 1966.

The republican senator's address topic has yet to be announced, said Charles Reagan, assistant to the president and head of the lecture series. Reagan is hoping for a large attendance, adding "a lot of times people have weekend amnesia" after a long holiday weekend. Reagan is hoping the lecture is not forgotten.

Kassebaum, a resident of Wichita, was elected to the senate in 1978 and re-elected in 1984. Before she took office, Kassebaum worked for former Kansas Sen. James B. Pearson during his terms in office.

The Landon Lecture series is also scheduled to bring Costa Rican President Oscar Arias Sanchez on Sept. 21.

Other lecturers scheduled for this academic year are Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor and U.S. Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

School prohibits Spuds shirts

PRARIE VILLAGE — A school has barred its students from wearing shirts bearing the likeness of Spuds Mackenzie, the spokesdog that achieved fame from beer commercials.

Students wearing the shirts when classes began last week at the Indian Hills Middle School had to turn them inside out and promise never to wear them again.

Officials at the Kansas City suburban school said the shirts promote beer drinking and contradict programs that teach students to say no to drugs and alcohol.

Spuds is billed as the original party animal in commercials for Budweiser beer.

False alarm grounds jetliner

BALTIMORE — The pilot of a Piedmont jetliner was forced to shut off one engine and return to the airport here shortly after takeoff Monday when a fire warning light, which proved to be false, came on, an airline spokesman said.

The 36 passengers aboard the Boeing 737, bound for Norfolk, Va., were evacuated via emergency chutes when the plane returned to Baltimore-Washington International Airport, said Don McGuire, a Piedmont spokesman.

Neither McGuire nor airport rescue officials reported any injuries.

The Piedmont flight, with a crew of six, had departed BWI about 9:30 a.m. and was two minutes away from the airport when the light came on, McGuire said.

McGuire said the captain activated engine fire extinguishers after he shut down the engine where trouble was indicated. The two-engine Boeing 737 is designed so it can fly on a single engine.

Russian city wants old name

MOSCOW — Dozens of residents of the city of Brezhnev have written to local Communist Party officials asking for a return to the city's old name, the weekly newsmagazine Ogonyok says.

Naberezhniye Chelny, an industrial city of 460,000 in the Tatar region west of the Ural Mountains, was renamed after the Nov. 10, 1982, death of Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Soviet leader for 18 years.

Brezhnev and his policies have come under criticism during the leadership of Mikhail S. Gorbachev, who became party general secretary in March 1985.

The city is the site of the massive Kamaz truck works.

"Many consider it quite unjustified that their native city, their Naberezhniye Chelny, carries the name of the former leader of the country who never visited Kamaz, a man whose name is tied to 'the epoch of decay,'" Ogonyok reported.

It said Brezhnev residents had sent dozens of letters to local authorities in the Tatar autonomous region asking that the old name be restored.

Ogonyok gave no indication whether officials are considering a switch to the old name. Some other citizen campaigns for reverting to historic city and street names have been successful over the past two years, including the renaming of some major streets in Moscow.

At the Communist Party Congress in February 1986, the new leadership blamed the policies and programs of the late 1970s and early 1980s — a reference to Brezhnev — for the poor state of the economy and many social problems in the country.

U.N. session opens in Austria

VIENNA, Austria — A nine-day United Nations conference opened Monday to review worldwide social trends and formulate guidelines for national social welfare programs.

A general report prepared for conference participants said adverse economic trends in recent years forced many countries to cut back spending for social programs "in many instances...without adequate compensatory measures."

Other issues to be discussed include improving administration of welfare programs, financing of such programs and technical cooperation among countries.

The conference was convened by Margaret J. Anstee, director-general of the U.N. office at Vienna and head of the Center for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs.

More than 100 nations are represented at the conference, a U.N. spokesman said. He said Bruce Chapman, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations in Vienna, heads the U.S. delegation.

Accident leads to actor's arrest

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Actor Matthew Broderick was charged Monday night with causing death by reckless driving stemming from an automobile accident that killed two people.

Broderick, 25, was traveling in Ireland on Aug. 5 with his girlfriend, Jennifer Grey, when his car collided with a vehicle carrying two women about 80 miles southwest of Belfast near Enniskillen in County Fermanagh.

The actor, walking on crutches, appeared in a temporary court set up in a small private room in the Royal Victoria Hospital and was charged with causing the death of Anne Gallagher, 28.

Broderick has been in the hospital recovering from a broken leg and minor injuries suffered in the crash, which also killed Gallagher's mother, Margaret Doherty, 63.

Holiday's death toll tops 400

CHICAGO — More than 400 people had died in traffic accidents by late Monday as the final day of the long Labor Day holiday weekend neared an end.

A total of 407 people had lost their lives on the nation's roads as of 8 p.m.

The National Safety Council estimated that 420 to 520 people could die in traffic accidents in the United States over the weekend.

The Chicago-based council also said 17,000 to 21,000 people could be seriously injured during the weekend, which ran from 6 p.m. local time Friday to midnight Monday.

During last year's Labor Day holiday, the council said, 487 people lost their lives and 20,000 suffered disabling traffic-related injuries.

Council officials urged motorists to wear safety belts and place children in approved child safety seats. The council's 101-day "Make-It-Click" campaign to push for safety belt use concluded Labor Day.

'Rambo' wins battle with hotel

JERUSALEM — Movie macho man Sylvester Stallone, who is in Israel to film "Rambo III," has won his first battle here: The hotel staff granted his request for pink towels to go with the white bathtub in his penthouse suite.

Stallone has not granted interviews since he arrived in Israel last Thursday and was whisked to his Dead Sea hotel in an armored car.

Regents question agreement between Kansas, Missouri

By Tom Denzel
Staff Writer

The state of Kansas has decided it may no longer be financially beneficial for it to allow some students from Missouri to pay in-state tuition while attending Kansas institutions.

The Kansas Board of Regents is questioning an agreement initiated in 1965 between the two states. The agreement states that students from either state can enroll in specific academic programs at any of the other state's institutions and pay in-state tuition.

Mark Lapping, dean of the College of Architecture and Design, said the creation of the reciprocal program was an excellent idea. However, he said, "times have changed."

He said the number of students attending the other state's colleges and universities was evenly balanced in previous years. Now, he said, that's not the case.

Lapping said the number of students enrolling in architecture programs in Kansas schools has increased in past years, while the number of students enrolling in Missouri's dental schools has decreased. The imbalance between these two programs is the main concern of both states.

Under the current agreement, Kansas pays $40,000 a year to Missouri to reserve 35 seats per class for Kansas students to attend dental school at the University of Missouri-Kansas City. Missouri pays nothing to Kansas to hold seats for Missouri students enrolled in Kansas' architecture programs.

There are currently about 350

Missourians enrolled in K-State's architecture program.

If the conflict with the agreement is not solved and results in termination of the agreement, the loss will not affect the quality of K-State's architecture program, Lapping said, adding that only the Missouri students will suffer.

Lapping said there are only two schools in Missouri offering architecture programs, Washington University in St. Louis and Drury College in Springfield. He said neither of these is "a viable program."

Neither of these schools offer any courses in landscape architecture or interior architecture. Thus, Missouri students have no other choice than to pursue architecture degrees in Kansas, he said.

He said both states are interested in continuing the reciprocity agreement. However, with the difference in enrollment in the two programs, the Kansas Board of Regents is concerned with the monetary imbalance.

"In the past, I think the concern for the students on both sides of the state line had fallen by the wayside," Lapping said. "I think with the present renegotiating of the agreement on both sides, the students' interests are back on top."

Lapping is pleased that a number of serious, new proposals concerning the reciprocity agreement were put in front of each state by late August.

He said even if the attempt to restructure the agreement fails and it is discontinued, students presently enrolled in their classes are guaranteed completion of their degrees under the existing agreement.

Forest fires still burning Weather helping

By The Associated Press

Firefighters concentrated on 200 major forest fires still burning in the West and allowed more evacuees to return home Monday after containing hundreds of the blazes that had charred 1,000 square miles.

At least 3,000 people in California were still being kept from their homes because of fire danger.

"We had enough of a break in the weather that we were able to contain some of the smaller fires and medium size fires. That enables us to shift some resources to those that are still uncontrolled," assistant regional forester Ken Clark from Sacramento, Calif., said Monday on ABC's "Good Morning America."

"It's still hot, dusty and dirty out there, but the winds aren't as erratic," Clark said.

Crews in Idaho brought a 10,500-acre blaze in the Sawtooth National Forest under control Monday, allowing most of a 600-man force to be reassigned to the huge fires still out of control in California and Oregon. One Idaho fire was allowed to continue burning in extremely rough terrain and a small fire was burning in Washington.

About 22,000 firefighters have battled the blazes and 600 Army soldiers were added to fire crews in Oregon on Monday to take over some mop-up chores. Three firefighters had been killed in vehicle accidents in California since lightning began setting the woods afire on Aug. 28, and the Forest Service said 34 had been injured.

An estimated 496,800 acres had been charred by more than 1,000 fires in California as of Monday, and nearly 105,000 acres had gone up in smoke in Oregon.

Including about 30,000 acres that burned in Idaho, plus smaller fires in Washington, Arizona, Montana, South Dakota and Wyoming, the total estimated burned area was about 636,000 acres.

Oregon officials estimated the loss at $317 million, mostly in timber resources, with state firefighting costs running up to $2 million a day.

In California, the damage estimate from just one fire, the 120,000-acre Paper Complex blaze in the Stanislaus National Forest, was $119 million.

California officials announced Monday that 2,000 people evacuated north of the Tuolumne River near the Paper Complex fire had been allowed to return, leaving 3,000 evacuees elsewhere in Tuolumne County. An unknown number of people remained out of their homes elsewhere in the state; last week state officials said a total of 15,000 had fled their homes. The last of 3,000 Oregon evacuees returned home Sunday.

Lyn Bahten returned home to see her husband, Dave, for the first time since Tuesday night. He had stayed home to protect their house.

Bahten said he almost left when the fire got a half-mile away. "I could hear the roar and feel the heat. We were watering down everything by flashlight," he said.

Others made unpleasant discoveries.

"I'm a gold miner up in that canyon," said Mark Lundquist. "Everything's burnt. I can't even earn a living."

Bob Daoust checked his summer cabin. "It's just gone. Just powder," he said. "All the trees are gone, too. I feel like I've lost part of the family."

The Paper Complex blaze, west of Yosemite National Park about 150 miles east of San Francisco, was about 35 percent contained by firebreaks. It had burned about 250 acres inside the park.

About 4,000 crew members remained at the fire despite the diminished threat to Tuolumne County towns and Yosemite. Others were moved northward to clusters of fires in the Shasta, Trinity, Mendocino and Klamath national forests.

California firefighters had contained 1,057 of the 1,252 fires that destroyed two dozen homes and 83 other structures, Dale Wierman said at the joint federal-state fire information center in Sacramento.

Owners accountable for animal's behavior

Any mail carrier or paper carrier can tell you how frightening it is to be chased, bitten or attacked by a dog. It is a risk one assumes when taking those jobs or any job where a person must go onto the property of strangers.

For more than a year, the pit bull terrier has been getting a lot of bad press concerning its aggressive and often injurious behavior. First, a couple of news stories reported attacks by these dogs, and then there were some more — until an avalanche of publicity was generated about these animals.

If all reports are accurate, attacks by these animals are vicious and, in some cases, fatal.

Such animals' attacks should be punished, and owners should be held liable for any damages or injuries inflicted. Punishment should also be levied against owners for allowing uncontrolled or dangerous behavior from their animals, and it should be more in line with the consequences of the attacks.

Pit bull terriers are not the only breed of dogs, though, that can inflict such pain, suffering and trauma. Any large or powerfully built dog can inflict serious injury to a person, and all dog attacks can cause some injury — physical or mental — to a person.

It is reprehensible to think people may go through life being frightened of even the most lovable pup because, at an earlier point in their lives, they were traumatized from an attack by a dog that could not be controlled by its owner. It is even worse to think that some owners would actually train their dogs to act in such a malicious and dangerous manner.

If any legislation is passed concerning dog attacks, it should deal with the entire spectrum of incidents, not just one breed and one type of attack. No one should be subjected to out-of-control or dangerous behavior from a dog.

Denial of poppy seeds not violation of rights

Violation of civil rights, no doubt, is a serious charge.

Last week some civil libertarians took up the cause for poppy seeds, those innocuous little seeds that creative cooks use in cole slaw, rolls and even bagels. Those little seeds can throw off urinalysis tests and cause a man to be removed from a halfway house and returned to prison. All it took was one bagel — one poppy seed bagel, that is.

Last week, Anthony Clarizio was returned to a federal prison in Danbury, Conn., for violating his furlough release. Because the consumption of poppy seeds and the use of heroin drugs made from the poppy plant cannot be distinguished in urine tests, it appeared he had used a drug derived from the poppy plant.

Because of this lack in technology, residents of the halfway house are required in their furlough not to consume poppy seed products. After Clarizio's urine tested positive for heroin (or poppy seed products), he was returned to prison for breaking his agreement.

Libertarians believe Clarizio's civil rights to consume whatever he pleases have been violated — an act of gastronomical tyranny so to speak.

But what rights does a man sentenced to prison for violating other people's rights have? Is ruling that a person cannot eat poppy seed products a violation of rights? Is that too much to ask for to ensure that people living in halfway houses are living up to their end of the deal and remaining drug-free?

No, restricting persons in halfway houses from eating poppy seed products is not tyranny. It is a way of ensuring the general public's rights of only letting those ready to rejoin society do so. Those living in halfway houses have been let out of prison early; therefore, they should not complain about missing out on eating poppy seeds when they could still be behind bars.

More police won't help

Commentary

JUDD ANNIS
Collegian Columnist

A chill in the air and a quick flip through the TV channels were all one needed this weekend to be reminded of the coming football season. At K-State, football season this year will be a time for proving something besides whether the Wildcats can compete on the gridiron. It will be a time to see if city and campus officials, as well as area merchants, will be successful at "riot control" following this year's intrastate rivalry between K-State and the University of Kansas.

It is imperative that this year's festivities not repeat the scene of 1984 and 1986 if future students are to enjoy an occasional act of "dancing in the streets." I hope I'm not the only one who wants to come back in 10 years and be able to party in Aggieville after the game. Therefore, the cycle of rioting must be squelched this year before further problems arise.

Back when a party was a party and not a riot, there was little property damage and crowd control wasn't too difficult. The crowds in Aggieville weren't any smaller or less jubilant, but they had a different goal in mind. The main event in those days was to build a huge bonfire at the intersection of 12th and Moro streets and see how long you could keep it going before firefighters came to put it out.

The crowd's attention wasn't on how many windows they could break. Celebrating and the K-State-KU game have gone hand in hand for many years. The celebrating has become malicious only at the last two games, partially due to the number of non-students participating and to police treatment of revelers.

Hopefully, nothing worthy of national TV coverage will happen. The game will be played, someone will win, and we can all party without incident. A good time without violence would be in the best interest of all those in a perpetual "party mentality" if their image as responsible adults is to gain credibility. The showing of self-restraint and a degree of responsibility would give law enforcement officers reason to allow everyone to have a good time.

This year's festivities may not produce any problems at all. A quick check of the calendar shows that the K-State-KU game just happens to coincide with Parents' Day. Parents' Day games tend to be calmer by nature. Student's traditionally take their parents to the game and spend most of the day with them.

But saying this year's after-game activities will be calmer since parents will be around assumes that the crowd in Aggieville is made up primarily of K-Staters. Last year's fiasco was led largely by out-of-towners who came to see a riot of some sort and to fulfill that prophecy if need be.

Aggieville will remain open, and there will undoubtedly be a party in some form. Therefore, the situation calls for treatment with a velvet glove.

This is why I feel very uneasy about the city's plan to import off-duty officers from the Wichita Police Department. These officers could be the catalyst for a potentially volatile situation. The Wichita Police Department, in the past, has been the repeated target of lawsuits for the violation of civil rights and using unreasonable force. Just this summer, such a suit was settled out of court. Does this city — or campus, for that matter — need an added potential problem? I don't see any safe way to place a city-hardened policeman in the "lion's den" of Aggieville and expect him to exercise perfect control. Even if they are only used to protect rooftops of businesses, can they be expected to react in the same way that a Riley County Police Department officer, who understands the K-State student, might react? Bringing in a group of no-nonsense, out-of-town police, who don't have to answer to the local electorate, could easily inflame the celebrants.

One possible solution, which probably won't get the time of day from the area's business community, is to move the game to a neutral site — Wichita. A precedent already exists with the University of Texas-University of Oklahoma game, which is played in Dallas instead of either school's campus. Let's move the game to Wichita, which no longer has a football team but does have a first-class stadium and lots of fans who miss watching a major college game on Saturday afternoons. For the estimated $25,000 it is going to cost the local taxpayers to import police, pay them overtime, and house and feed them, we could run one hell of a shuttle bus service. Although moving the game to a neutral stadium to avoid an after-game riot would hardly be a public relations plus, it would be far less damaging than a riot as large and as damaging as last year's. Then again, faced with losing all that game-day business, the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce might just find a way to persuade the Aggieville drinking establishments to close early on this one evening. Let's have some innovative thinking from the powers that be and not fight fire with fire, leaving the taxpayers to pick up the tab.

SORRY, MR. LINDBERGH... WHAT WITH ALL THE DELAYS, OVER-BOOKINGS AND LOST BAGGAGE, I'M AFRAID YOUR FLIGHT'S BEEN CANCELED... BUT THIS DOES ENTITLE YOU TO A COMPLIMENTARY DRINK.

Bork too conservative

Commentary

MICHAEL NICHOLS
Collegian Columnist

When Supreme Court Justice Lewis Powell resigned June 26, he left a vacancy which could initiate a drastic reversal in the tide of judicial decision-making. Powell was a centrist, leaning neither left nor right in a consistent fashion, maintaining a balance in the Supreme Court.

Robert H. Bork, Ronald Reagan's nomination to the court, is a conservative ideologue who cloaks his politics by practicing what he calls "judicial restraint." According to the conservative press, Bork's aim is not to advance any particular political agenda but to maintain "the arena in which conservatives and liberals can do battles for the hearts and minds of a free people." This is an honorable description which will undoubtedly convince many a citizen and senator, but who really is Robert H. Bork?

Would you want a man in the Supreme Court who in 1971 published an article stating that the First Amendment protects only the freedom of "explicitly political speech?" He dismissed the idea that speech implicit with political effects, such as scientific or philosophical, should also be protected. Must the members of the philosophy and various science departments at this university learn to curb their language and edit their writings to avoid the wrath of a misinterpretation of one of our most fundamental rights?

What about a man who has publicly declared in different instances since 1982 that he favors prayer in public schools and federal tax dollars to uphold it? Or consider Bork's 1984 decision involving "private, consensual, homosexual conduct," where he established his view that homosexuals have no right to be protected from discrimination under the Constitution.

Bork does not believe in taking each word of the Constitution literally, but rather in a context coherent with the intentions of its framers.

In other words, he makes judgements based on the experience of men who lived more than 200 years ago. Does this man have any concept of social evolution? He seems to ignore that this is not a newly established independent country, but a nation which has changed radically since the Constitution was written.

How else could one describe his statement that the privacy notion, under which the right to contraception is based, has little to do with the intent of the framers? Or his remark that the decision in Roe vs. Wade, in which women's right to abortion was upheld, was unconstitutional and usurped state legislative authority? The list goes on.

In 1963, Bork published an article condemning the Civil Rights Act as a "departure from freedom of the individual to decide with whom he will deal." He called civil rights demonstrators a mob, whose intent was to disturb and coerce private individuals in the exercise of their freedom. Is one to assume that he deems racism as one of the inalienable rights granted by the Constitution?

The critical question in this nomination, as probably in any other, is: "Does the Supreme Court stand outside of politics?" To respond negatively would be rendering useless the whole concept of checks and balances which creates the three branches of government. However, it is not very likely that any court is completely apolitical. To confirm Robert Bork would be setting legal precedents back to the 1700s.

One may contest this view by saying that the statements cited above are but mere opinions of the man. One could even argue that there is no way to predict a justice's actions and subsequently no basis for judging him unless one is certain that he will practice what he preaches.

In response to this, one must go back to October 1973 and the height of the Watergate scandal. Robert H. Bork, the Solicitor General of the United States, was the third-ranking official in the Justice Department. The department's special prosecutor in the Watergate case, Archibald Cox, had obtained a federal court order for Nixon to surrender certain incriminating tapes. Nixon refused, and began what is known as the Saturday Night Massacre, ordering Attorney General Elliott Richardson to fire Cox. Richardson refused and immediately resigned, as a matter of principle. His deputy also refused and was promptly fired, elevating Mr. Bork to the top of the list. Bork complied with Nixon and fired Cox, not only violating department regulations, but also assisting the president in illegally ignoring the Court of Appeals.

The meaning of this incident is clear. Can we trust a man to be impartial when he has already proven to lack nerve in delicate situations? Or maybe it wasn't a lack of nerve but rather an unprofessional conservative bias.

On Sept. 15, hearings will begin in the Senate to discuss Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court. The stakes in this case are very high. Bork, if confirmed, would create a narrow conservative majority in the Court. If any of you share the fear of witnessing this nation's freedoms regress a couple of hundred years, write your senator.

Biofeedback defeats stressful situations, regulates processes

By Erwin Seba
Collegian Reporter

Everyone experiences stress at one time or another, and biofeedback enables a person to defeat the effects of stress, said David G. Danskin, Counseling Center professor.

Biofeedback is information about physiological processes provided by electronic monitors. These monitors record and display changes in skin temperature or muscle tension.

Danskin said a decrease in skin temperature or an increase in muscle tension shows the presence of stress.

"In a way, it's like getting on a scale or taking your blood pressure," Danskin said. "With the information (biofeedback provides), you can practice to regulate most mental, emotional and physical processes."

Over time, he said, most people lose their awareness of the symptoms of stress. Biofeedback allows them to learn the causes of stress and relaxation techniques to use as alternative learned responses to stress.

Danskin uses skin temperature (ST) and electromyographic (EMG) biofeedback to teach his clients to control their responses to stress.

In ST biofeedback, a thermistor, which is a temperature sensor, is taped to the fingertip of the middle finger of the dominant hand. Danskin said the thermistor is wired to a small box with a digital display.

As clients think of stressful situations, their skin temperatures go down. Conversely, when clients relax, their temperatures go up.

"It's (ST biofeedback) associated with how tense or relaxed you are," Danskin said. "The temperature in your hand is reflecting what you are thinking or feeling. It's all hooked up together."

Routine flight ends with malfunction

By The Associated Press

GOLIAD, Texas — An A-4 Skyhawk Navy training jet crashed and burned in a field Monday after its engines malfunctioned, but both pilots ejected safely, Navy officials said.

The plane, from Chase Field at the Naval Air Station near Beeville, was on a routine flight about noon when the mechanical problems arose, said Capt. Ed Andrews, commodore at

He said electrodes are attached to the forehead or the forearm in EMG biofeedback. The electrodes are connected to a meter and sound-system that registers the number of electrical impulses to a muscle as clicks.

More clicks are heard when more electrical impulses are being sent to a muscle as it is tensed, indicating stress. Fewer clicks means fewer electrical impulses being sent to a muscle.

With both ST and EMG biofeedback, relaxation is achieved through self-directed phrases and visualizations, Danskin said. When using a self-directed phrase, clients say, "I am very quiet. My feet are heavy and warm."

Clients continue to say parts of their bodies are heavy and warm until relaxation is achieved. In visualization, clients imagine relaxing events, things, scenes or feelings.

Danskin said biofeedback training sessions last 30-50 minutes. Most clients require at least four sessions to learn biofeedback techniques.

"It (the number of sessions) varies from person to person," he said. "It usually takes between four and 15 sessions. How long it takes depends on how much they practice."

"It's (learning biofeedback) not like taking a pill," Danskin said. "It's like learning a skill."

To practice biofeedback at home, a client buys a small thermometer with a cardboard backing from the Counseling Center. The same principles applying to ST biofeedback are used in home practice. The thermometer costs 25 cents.

Danskin said the first 10 biofeedback sessions at the Counseling Center are free to students. Each additional session costs $6.

the Naval facility.

Commander Michael R. Gass and Lt. Thomas S. Crafton, both assigned to Training Squadron 25, tried unsuccessfully to return the engine and ejected at 5,000 feet, Andrews said.

No ages or hometowns of Gass or Crafton were available. Both walked away after ejecting and were picked up by Navy rescue personnel.

The training jet crashed and burned in a brushy area.

Wes Ward, psychology intern, demonstrates the skin temperature biofeedback instrument, that is used to measure degrees of tension or relaxation allowing individuals to deal with stress. The higher the temperature the more relaxed the individual.

Moslems free hostage after 7-month ordeal

By The Associated Press

DAMASCUS, Syria — Shiite Moslem kidnappers in Lebanon on Monday freed one of their two West German hostages from seven months of captivity, and the Bonn government said Iran and Syria played a role in the release.

Syrian army officers drove 47-year-old engineer Alfred Schmidt to Damascus and turned him over to West German diplomats.

"It's wonderful to be a free man again," Schmidt said before he was taken to the airport for the flight home.

"They didn't mistreat me. The treatment was all right. I'm OK. I want to see my family and friends."

A West German air force transport plane had flown to Damascus to pick him up.

Schmidt was released at 4 a.m. in the slums of south Beirut, a stronghold of Iranian-backed Shiite militants. His captors, who call themselves the Holy Warriors for Freedom, indicated the agreement was worked out by Syria.

Twenty-five foreigners remain missing in Lebanon, including eight Americans and Anglican church envoy Terry Waite. Most are believed held by Shiite kidnappers loyal to Iran.

Terry A. Anderson, 39, is the hostage held longest. The chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press was abducted March 16, 1985.

In Bonn, Foreign Ministry spokesman Juergen Chrobog said: "Iran and Syria both helped win (Schmidt's) release. They both said they would help us and they did."

No information was revealed about the second West German hostage, 53-year-old businessman Rudolf Cordes. He was kidnapped Jan. 16, four days before Schmidt.

The kidnappers had demanded the release of two Lebanese Shiites, Mohammed Ali Hamadi and his brother, Ali Abbas Hamadi, from jail in West Germany. Officials in Bonn said there were no plans to free the Hamadis.

"There were never any negotiations to release the two Lebanese, and there are no plans to do so," said Alexander Prechtel, a spokesman for the federal prosecutor's office.

Spokesman Horst Siebert at Siemens, the huge electronics company that employs Schmidt, said: "No ransom was paid by Siemens."

Mohammed Ali Hamadi, 23, was arrested at Frankfurt airport Jan. 13 while carrying liquid explosives in wine bottles. The United States wants him on murder and other charges in the June 1985 hijacking of a TWA airliner to Beirut during which U.S. Navy diver Robert Siethem was killed.

His brother was arrested at Frankfurt airport Jan. 26 on charges of involvement in the Beirut kidnappings, which occurred soon after the arrest of Mohammed Ali Hamadi.

A third brother, Abdul-Hadi Hamadi, is Beirut security chief of the Iranian-backed militant Hezbollah, or Party of God.

Breathing life into fantasy

Star Riders enjoy role-playing game

By Jim Vader
Collegian Reporter

Our hero, a valiant young warrior, dodges poison arrows as he swims his way across crocodile-infested waters to face his worst enemy, the fire-breathing dragon. The valiant warrior meets his enemy eye-to-eye and defeats his foe just before the jaws of death close in on him.

He proceeds across treacherous country until he comes to the dark castle sitting on the edge of the world. He sneaks into the castle and begins to search for the pretty damsel in distress. But he is stopped by the evil king.

They engage in mortal combat, with our hero ultimately defeating his enemy by throwing him into the pits of hell. Then our hero and the pretty damsel ride off into the sunset upon a white stallion.

Characters such as these are living in the minds of certain people around K-State's campus. Star Riders, founded by five people in 1981, who enjoy the fantasy and science-fiction in books and movies of years past are such people.

"We are a group of people out to inform the public about sci-fi and fantasy while having fun," said Coy Kisse, active president of the organization and a senior at Manhattan

High School.

Kisse said the group has about 25 active members and 25 inactive members on and off campus.

Members of Star Riders invent characters and role play them in a game called "Dungeons and Dragons." The objective of the game is decided by the Dungeon Master, who decides what types of roles the characters will play.

"You role play your character to make him or her more interesting," Kisse said.

He said rescuing maidens in distress, finding lost treasure or breaking out a cohort captured by an enemy are popular game objectives.

Kisse got involved with Star Riders when he was a freshman. His favorite thing about the group is "hearing other peoples' opinions on books and movies that I can relate to."

He said that although Star Riders can get monotonous, he still enjoys it very much.

Kisse said Star Riders has an annual convention, the date of which has not been set. The group meets Mondays at 7:30 p.m. in the Union.

Kisse said the group wants people who are really interested in science fiction.

"This group does not have low standards," Kisse said.

Siamese twins separated in 22-hour surgery

By The Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Doctors were "slightly encouraged" Monday by the progress of infant twins born joined at the head and separated in a 22-hour operation, and plan to keep them unconscious for up to a week as they recover from the trauma of surgery.

Patrick and Benjamin Binder, of Ulm, West Germany, were in critical but stable condition at Johns Hopkins Children's Center a full day after their operation, which ended at 5:15 a.m. Sunday.

Doctors were upbeat but cautious Monday, saying no particularly troublesome problems had arisen.

"We didn't know how much bleeding or respiratory difficulty there would be," said Dr. Mark

Rogers, who coordinated the surgery. "It appears they have developed a stable pattern in both and we are able at this point to cope with problems."

"We're slightly encouraged they're doing well this morning," Rogers said. "We will not know how this turns out for several weeks."

Two major risks are bleeding and swelling of the brain tissue.

Doctors are controlling virtually all the 7-month-old twins' bodily functions as they remain in the drug-induced comas, or "prolonged anesthetic sleep," said Rogers.

While the infants had separate brains, they shared a vein in the back of the head that helps drain the brain. Surgeons had to separate and then reconstruct the blood drainage system in each boy.

Whether you're into business, science or engineering, TI has all the right calculators with all the right functions for you.

Every year, thousands of hapless students watch their course load become an overload. And every year, the smart ones among them pick up a TI calculator and take a load off.

TI offers everything from advanced scientifics that clock your performances, to programmables that speak your language, to a solar-powered financial calculator that highlights your answers even in lowlight conditions.

And the large, color-coded keys and simple keyboard layouts mean you'll spend less time figuring out the calculator and more time figuring out your problems.

Average student age increasing in U.S.

Fenix gives help to adult pupils

By Chuck Horner
Collegian Reporter

In 1992, the United States will celebrate the 500th anniversary of Columbus' discovery of the Americas.

In that same year, one-half of all college students will be over the age of 25, said Harold Hodgkinson, education and demographics researcher, in his book "All One System."

The expanding adult population is the target of numerous K-State education programs, said Linda Delker, graduate in counseling. She said more than 2,400 adults participated in K-State education programs in the 1986-87 school year.

Delker said the target group for these programs is students with "non-traditional situations." This includes students who are over 25, married, working a full-time job or in any other situation that restricts the time they can attend classes.

Delker and Ruth Hoeflin constitute the staff of Fenix, a program whose mission is to assist and provide guidance to K-State's adult students. Hoeflin is the director of Fenix.

Subject matter presented in the adult education classes does not vary from other University instruction, Delker said. However, the formats of the classes are numerous.

Options available for adult students include night classes at the K-State Extension at Fort Riley (also called Old Trooper University), recertification seminars for teachers, credits awarded in conjunction with participation in conferences, intercession classes, TELENET courses and night classes on campus, she said.

Adults can also receive college credits through the College Level Examination Program (CLEP), credit by examination, learning from work experience, credit for military service and, in some situations, for knowledge of a foreign language.

Information regarding these and other programs is available in the Fenix handbook, which can be obtained in the Fenix office, Room 101A, Holton Hall.

Delker said K-State is reacting to the increase of adult students but is not keeping pace with the growing needs of these students and Fenix.

The University does recruit adult students through community orientations and media advertising, but the dedication of additional resources for these programs is needed, she said.

"One of the directions we are moving is to conduct workshops in conjunction with the Women's Resource Center aimed at people considering returning to school," Delker said.

"It is inspiring for me to see adults return to school," she said.

Reagan administrators say Nicaraguan struggle lost

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A consensus has formed in the Reagan administration that the 6-year-old U.S. struggle against Nicaragua's leftist government will be lost by the end of the year unless present trends are reversed, officials say.

According to a number of Central American experts in the administration, a sense of alarm exists, based on the perception that the regional peace agreement signed last month heavily favors the Sandinista government.

"All they (the Sandinistas) have to do is wait until December," said one official, speaking on condition he not be identified. Said another, who also insisted on anonymity, "Time is on the Sandinistas' side."

Leading Democrats are more optimistic. House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, for example, contends that the Sandinistas have made an impressive start toward complying with the terms of the agreement requiring democratic reform.

In addition to democratization, the agreement calls for a cutoff of U.S. aid to the rebel movement.

One administration official said the administration is working on "new ideas" to head off what they see as a potential major strategic defeat for the United States. President Reagan has said the Contras will not be abandoned. But he has not specified how that goal will be accomplished.

The current U.S. aid allocation to the Contras expires Sept. 30. The Sandinistas are not required under the agreement to show a good faith effort to democratize until Nov. 7.

The officials believe the Sandinistas need only maintain a democratic facade until late fall to achieve final victory.

As the officials see it, the mood in Congress is such that virtually any token democratic gesture by the Sandinistas will be seized on by the Democrat-controlled Congress and guarantee defeat of any Contra aid request.

Once the Contras realize they cannot get any more aid from Washington, demoralization will set in and the rebels will be forced to disband, these officials believe.

The officials predicted that the Sandinistas will dismantle the democratic trappings now in place, once the Contra threat is removed and will establish a Cuban-style system and resume efforts to subvert their neighbors.

Wright and Reagan drew up a peace plan last month that essentially was superseded by the agreement signed by Central America's leaders in Guatemala on Aug. 7. Wright has spoken enthusiastically about the Guatemala plan, and his views carry substantial weight among his fellow House Democrats.

The speaker told the Los Angeles Times last week that he was impressed with some of the steps Nicaragua has taken over the past month — including appointment of a National Reconciliation Commission — to comply with the Guatemala agreement.

"The fact that they've done these things ought to be applauded," Wright said.

Rugby squad knocks off alumni

By The Collegian Staff

At the beginning of last year's fall season, the K-State rugby squad was defeated by a group of the oldest 'Cat rugby alumni who cared to show up for the squad's annual season-opening alumni game. This fall, things turned out a little bit different.

The squad, which finished the 1987 spring season ranked as the No. 10 team in the nation, defeated a younger, stronger and more talented group of K-State rugby alumni in this year's opener, 32-16.

"A lot of these guys (alumni) still play rugby. In fact, probably about half of them are still playing select-side rugby. I was real impressed how we played fluid, continuous rugby and how we were able to come out on top," team captain Dave Todd said.

"This is the best team I have ever played on at K-State this early in the season," Todd said, who now has played on five consecutive rugby teams. "Everybody is sharper than they usually are (this early), everybody's more experienced, everybody's more intense...everybody has been working a lot harder in practice than ever before and we're going to have a killer team. That's all there is to it," Todd said.

Todd said the win was an excellent way to kick off the season.

"These guys are all real good rugby players and we had to play heads-up ball to do good things against them," Todd said.

To lead off the 'Cats' scoring, senior Kevin Wagner scored and Todd converted on the extra kick,

K-State's Dave Luchtefeld tries to escape the grasp of K-State Alumni's Cam Collins en route to K-State's defeat of the Alumni squad 32-16 making the score 6-0.

Senior Mike Powers then scored, followed by another kick from Todd to up the score to 12-0. Todd then broke to the open field, delivered a fake that brought one alumni player to the ground and streaked 70 yards for K-State's third score of the half.

Todd, worn out after the scoring run, then failed to convert on the kick, making the score 16-0.

Just before half, though, 1987 alumnus Bill Knopick scored and converted on the kick, bringing the alumni to within 10 at the half, 16-6. Knopick, who was the kicker and a key player for K-State last year, made the longest journey to Manhattan of any rugby alumnus. The recent graduate in construction science now living in Greeley, Colo., drove over nine hours nonstop to get to Manhattan to help the team, he said.

"We (the alumni) come down, we play ball and we donate money to the team because that's where they get a lot of their money," Knopick said.

Second-year player Jim Phalen scored twice consecutively just after he came in as a substitute for an injured Jim Pitts.

Chiefs cut 7 players; reduce list

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Chiefs cut veteran linebacker Scott Radeccic and six other players Monday to reduce their active roster list to 45 players.

The Chiefs released wide receiver Chas Fox, cornerback Charles Rome, cornerback Carlton Thomas, defensive end Kit Lathrop, defensive end Randy Watts and quarterback Doug Hudson.

Placed on injured reserve were guard Brad Budde, guard Byron Ingram, linebacker Charles Merritt and wide receiver Kitrick Taylor.

Placed on the physically-unable-to-perform-reserve list until at least Oct. 20 were linebackers Gary Spani and Ken McAlister. Placed on the reserve-non-football injury list was quarterback Frank Seurer.

The Chiefs' switch to a four-man defensive front left no room on the roster for Radeccic, a second-round pick in 1984.

Radeccic, a starting inside linebacker the last two seasons in the Chiefs' 3-4 defense, became expendable with the switch to the four-man front. The 4-3 requires one less inside linebacker.

Former NFL standouts cut; McMahon on injured reserve

By The Associated Press

Nat Moore and Tony Nathan, two of the mainstays of the Miami offense for the past decade, and Tony Hill, a one-time star with Dallas, were cut Monday, while the Chicago Bears put Jim McMahon on injured reserve with the expectation that he can help their young quarterbacks develop.

Hill, released by Dallas earlier this year and picked up by San Francisco, was among a group of veterans released by the 49ers. They also included linebackers Tom Cousineau and Jim Fahnhorst and running back Carl Monroe, who scored the first touchdown in the 1985 Super Bowl.

McMahon, who missed the second half of last season with a shoulder injury and underwent surgery late last year, will have to miss at least six weeks.

That move at least temporarily kept a spot on the Bears' roster for Doug Flutie, the 5-foot-9 Heisman Trophy winner. Mike Tomczak has been starting in McMahon's place and Jim Harbaugh, the team's top draft pick this year, had been virtually guaranteed a spot.

Coach Mike Ditka said McMahon will spend his time on the sidelines helping him and coaching the younger players.

"Even if I have to make McMahon an assistant coach, I want him to be out there because the Bears will need all the help they can get," Ditka said.

Moore and Nathan were cut as Miami made the unusual move of keeping four quarterbacks — Dan Marino, Don Strock, Ron Jaworski and Jim Jensen, who also doubles as special teams captain and backup wide receiver. The Dolphins also placed linebacker Hugh Green back on injured reserve, where he spent most of last season with a knee injury.

Moore, a 13-year veteran, was the Dolphins' all-time leading receiver with 510 catches for 7,547 yards. Although he had 38 receptions for 431 yards and seven touchdowns last year, he was beaten out by free agent Fred Banks for the fifth receiving job behind Mark Duper, Mark Clayton, James Pruitt and rookie Scott Schwedes.

The 30-year-old Nathan, an eight-year veteran, is fourth on the team's all-time rushing list with 3,523 yards and second on the receiving list with 373 receptions.

"I'm not going to dwell on what has happened," Moore said. "...That's a part of football. I'm 35 years old and football is a young man's game."

Among the other players cut was defensive end Daryl Sims, Pittsburgh's first-round draft pick two years ago.

The 6-foot-3, 285-pound Sims, expected to be a force when he was taken by the Steelers in the first round of the 1985 draft, never lived up to his expectations. In two seasons of spot play, he had just 14 tackles, four assists and two sacks.

The Cowboys cut veteran place-kicker Rolf Benirschke; Cleveland released running back Butch Woolfolk; Minnesota cut running back Ted Brown, San Diego cut wide receivers Anthony Hancock and Bobby Johnson and the New York Giants released veteran defensive lineman Curtis McGriff.

The Bears released veteran defensive linemen Mike Hartenstein and Henry Waechter along with punter Maury Buford. Waechter trapped New England quarterback Steve Grogan for safety in the Super Bowl two years ago. Green Bay cut backup quarterback Chuck Fusina.

NFL offers proposal to players

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The NFL Management Council on Monday gave its players union a new proposal it said can provide "the essential elements" for settlement of the contract impasse that could result in a players strike within two weeks.

But Gene Upshaw, the executive director of the NFL Players Association termed the document "garbage."

The 14-page summary, prepared over the weekend by council officials, was presented to Upshaw, executive director of the NFL Players Association, shortly after noon EDT. It was mailed about two hours later to the 28 NFL teams.

The presentation comes one day before the league's player representatives meet in Washington to set a strike date. It is expected to come after the second week of the season, which opens Sunday, with an option to wait another two weeks.

The only talks since Aug. 14 took place for 4½ hours in Washington last week and they broke off over the issue of protection for player representatives.

The league's owners will meet

Thursday outside Chicago to hear from Jack Donlan, the executive director of the Management Council, on the status of the talks.

Despite Upshaw's denunciation of Donlan's proposal, both sides said they were willing to meet again. Upshaw said they had talked on Sunday and expected to be back in contact Thursday, after both sides have had their meetings.

Donlan said in his cover letter to Upshaw that because of the lack of talks the proposal "has been developed in a virtual vacuum without the benefit of assistance from the NFLPA."

Outside hitter Valerie Kastens helps middle hitter Kristi Jacquart block a hit from the University of Drake volleyball team Saturday at Ahearn Field House. The 'Cats defeated Drake, bringing their record to 2-0.

V-ball team handles Drake

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

If the first two outings are any indication, the volleyball team could be headed for a banner season.

After coasting to victory easily against the University of Missouri-Kansas City Wednesday night, the Wildcats came back strong Saturday and defeated Drake, 15-13, 15-5, 15-3 in Ahearn Field House. The match lasted just 57 minutes and raised K-State's record to 2-0.

Serving highlighted the match once again, but this time it came from an unexpected source as Wildcat Leslie Kull served eight aces to tie the record which was established just three days before by teammate Kristi Jacquart in K-State's season opener.

"(Kull's) serving was a little bit of a surprise, because, physically, she's not one of our stronger players, which are the players who normally serve aces," coach Scott Nelson said. "But she came back from the summer break in great shape, and I think her conditioning paid off. Leslie's effort gave us a boost in the match."

The first game of the match was the only one ever in question for K-State. The Lady Wildcats broke a 13-13 deadlock to claim victory in the first game.

"That first game was really interesting to me because I wanted to see how we would handle a little adversity," said Nelson. "I knew Drake would test us, and I thought our players reacted very well."

Consistent play by K-State and tough defense, not serving, were the deciding factors in the match, according to Nelson.

"We stayed at a pretty even keel throughout the match," said Nelson. "We kept doing our fundamentals and we were tough on our serve receptions and first ball offense. We served consistently tough throughout the match. It was a good effort by the whole team."

"I'm real pleased with our defense," Nelson added. "They challenged us all over the court. I'm most pleased with the defensive effort."

K-State returns to the floor Tuesday night to put its perfect record on the line against Oral Roberts University in Ahearn Field House. The match begins at 7:30 p.m. and admission is free.

No. 1-seeded Lendl, Graf advance in U.S. Open play

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Top seeds Ivan Lendl and Steffi Graf advanced to the quarterfinals of the U.S. Open Monday, but No. 4 women's seed Hana Mandlikova lost after being penalized a game for smashing her racket against a scoreboard.

It was the second time in three days that a player was penalized a game for poor behavior.

In his third-round victory over Slobodan Zivojinovic Saturday, John McEnroe was punished for cursing and yelling. The following day, he was fined $17,500 and suspended for two months pending an appeal.

Lendl, the two-time defending champion, beat No. 16 Anders Jarryd 6-2, 7-6 (7-2), 6-4, while Graf downed No. 13 and 13th-ranked Sylvia Hanika 7-5, 6-2.

Other women advancing to the quarterfinals were second-seeded Martina Navratilova, No. 6 Helena Sukova and No. 11 Lori McNeil.

Mandlikova lost to ninth-seeded Claudia Kohde-Kilsch 6-7 (4-7), 6-4, 6-1 on an outside court at the National Tennis Center.

Mandlikova got her first warning after cursing an official who had just called a foot fault on her in the fifth game of the first set.

Her temper flared again after she lost the second game of the third set by hitting a shot wide. When she cursed at the line official, Mandlikova was given a point penalty that forced her to start the next game down 0-15.

Mandlikova lost that game to fall behind 2-1 in the set. During the changeover, the 25-year-old Czechoslovakian slammed her racket against the scoreboard, prompting head referee Georgina Clark to penalize her a game.

Kohde-Kilsch won the next three games to close out the match.

After the match, Clark said Mandlikova would be fined $500. Mandlikova could be fined up to $10,000 after further review by a disciplinary committee made up of players and a representative of the Women's International Tennis Association.

Mandlikova was not immediately available for comment.

Wildcats kick off with big disappointment

'Cats can't come back in opener

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Improvise is defined in most dictionaries as "to make, invent or arrange offhand."

To that end, Austin Peay quarterback Dale Edwards and wide receiver Rico Ransom improvised a 35-yard touchdown pass with 10 seconds left in the game as the Governors upset K-State, 26-22, Saturday in KSU Stadium.

Edwards had to survive a fierce Wildcat blitz to hit Ransom with the winning toss. And on the previous play Edwards just overthrew his brother, Dean, with a possible scoring pass.

"I wouldn't say (the play) was broken," Edwards said, "but the play was intended for out routes only. I was planning on going down the field and getting the field goal. (The touchdown) kind of shocked me, especially when I could have hit my brother the same way."

Ransom, a 6-foot-4, 215-pound junior from Clarksville, Tenn., led the Governors with 97 yards on five catches. Ransom said he beat the strong safety on the play, and the free safety had rushed in to snare the scrambling Edwards.

"I was wide open and praying Dale hadn't gotten sacked because I knew the rush was coming," Edwards said.

"I beat them to the inside; there was nobody in centerfield. Touchdown," he added.

Edwards almost single-handedly destroyed the Wildcats by completing 24-of-37 passes for a career high 293 yards.

"Our passing game wasn't prepared for their defense only...but their defense was easy to read against," he said. "They played so far back. They left everything underneath open...and yet they never brought their defensive backs up."

Even though it was the second consecutive loss to a Division I-AA opponent, K-State Coach Stan Parrish still had positive comments about his team's effort.

"I was real proud of the way our kids came back in the second half," Parrish said. "We made some big plays in the second half. It's tough to lose one like that in the last 10 seconds."

Austin Peay Coach Emory Hale said Saturday's win has to run as one of the program's best.

"This was a tremendous win for us," Hale said. "We thought we could win. I was disappointed we were behind. I thought we were going to come up on the short end after working so hard."

K-State, after trailing 13-0 at the half, took its first lead with 9:24 remaining in the final quarter after Gary Swim completed his third touchdown pass to wide receiver John Williams to give the 'Cats a 20-19 lead.

For Williams, who had 84 yards on only three catches, it was a new Wildcat single-game record for scoring receptions. For Swim — 8-of-15, 143 yards and three touchdowns — it was a chance to regain his starting spot after losing it to senior Tim Hanson earlier in the week. Still, both were more concerned about the loss than individual accomplishments.

"We should have won that game. It was our game," Williams said. "It was our first game, though. I think a lot of us, including myself, were a little nervous and scared. We'll do a lot better."

"I knew we could throw on them. I just wish we would have thrown a little more in the first half," Swim added.

Parrish said the 'Cats in the first half were "running in quicksand." He couldn't have picked a more accurate metaphor.

K-State and Hanson started several drives against the Governors' defense, but couldn't penetrate Austin Peay's 40-yard-line. And Hanson missed Williams with at least one obvious, scoring opportunity.

Staff/Greg Vogel

Joe Fabina, senior in accounting, cheers after the 'Cats take the lead.

Austin Peay scored first with 11:28 left in the second period after recovering a bad punt snap at K-State's 6-yard line. Six plays later, Edwards hit tailback Mike Lewis for the opening score. Place-kicker Tom MacMillan added field goals of 37 and 40 yards to give the Governors a 13-point lead.

Even though Parrish replaced Hanson with Swim in the second half, neither Parrish nor Swim blamed K-State's offensive woes on Hanson. The 'Cats had only 31 total yards in the first two quarters.

"It wasn't Tim's fault," Parrish said. "We just didn't give him good position to work with and we didn't execute well. We made some crucial mistakes like that bad snap on that punt."

"If I wasn't doing it, I'm the kind of quarterback that would take myself out, but that wasn't Tim's case," Swim added. "He just didn't throw like (he is capable of)."

Swim came out strong, completed his first two passes and led K-State to Austin Peay's four before the drive bogged down. Austin Peay scored again on MacMillan's 50-yard field goal two possessions later to give the Governors a 16-0 lead.

Then Swim took over. He hit Williams with scoring tosses of 16 and 20 yards on two successive possessions to pull K-State within two, 16-14, with 1:34 left in the third period.

Austin Peay added to its lead after MacMillan booted a 50-yard field goal before the Swim/Williams connection struck again. This time the scoring toss was good for 48 yards and tailback Terry Richards ran in the two-point conversion to give K-State a three-point lead.

Richards, replacing K-State rushing leader Tony Jordan who left the game in the third quarter with a thigh bruise, had a "super" game, Parrish said.

"We did well even with Tony out of the game," Parrish said. "Terry Richards was super in his backup role."

Unlike the Northern Iowa game where the 'Cats couldn't mount a comeback, K-State rebounded in this contest to take the lead. But as Yogi Berra once said, "It isn't over, until it's over." Austin Peay covered 62 yards in just four plays and won the game with Edwards' scoring toss in the closing seconds.

Wildcat linebacker David Wallace, who led K-State with 18 tackles, said K-State had a slight defensive lapse in the closing moments.

"(The defense) thought we had the game won. We started to celebrate too early. We put the blitz on; they burned us," Wallace said.

One final positive note for the 'Cats was that Jordan moved into 10th place on K-State's all-time rushing list with 72 yards on 16 carries and is expected to play against Army.

K-State, 0-1, will host Army Sept. 19 at KSU Stadium. Austin Peay, 1-0, plays the University of Tennessee-Martin at Martin, Tenn., Saturday.

Running game still up in air Saturday despite new attack

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

Last season, "Air Parrish" was introduced to the K-State football team. In one year's time it was taken away and "Land Parrish" was introduced.

The problem is, though, someone forgot to tell this to quarterback Gary Swim and wide receiver John Williams.

When Stan Parrish made the decision to start senior Tim Hanson over Swim, Swim said he still felt he was the No. 1 man.

"I felt I still could be the starting quarterback," he said. "Tim had the better camp and I wasn't doing that well, so he got the nod."

That nod soon faded into a head-shaker in the first half of K-State's season opener against the Austin Peay State Governors, which turned out to be a 26-22 nail-biter-of-a-loss for the 'Cats.

In the first half, Hanson completed two of seven passes with no interceptions for only 10 yards. Not good.

Parrish was quick to point out that not everything was Hanson's fault.

"That first half we were running in quicksand," Parrish said. "It wasn't Tim's fault, we just didn't give him good position to work with and we didn't execute well."

During the postgame interview, though, Parrish hinted that the thought of pulling Hanson in the second quarter did run through his mind.

"We thought about it," he said. "However, after the game is over it's a little too late to be second guessing yourself."

In the second half, Swim was 8-for-15 for 143 yards and three touchdown tosses to Williams.

Swim's efforts established him as the No. 1 quarterback in Parrish's mind.

"Gary is really a good player," he added. "There is no question as to who the No. 1 quarterback is, but that is not Tim's fault. Gary's second-half effort was a good one."

The three touchdowns caught by Williams were his only receptions of the game. Those three touchdowns now stand as a single-game record for K-State, surpassing many records held by former K-State receivers who have caught two in a game. Williams finished the game with three catches for 84 yards, while every time he touched the ball, it went in for six.

For Swim, having a receiver like Williams is something he's never experienced before.

"I've never thrown to a receiver as fast John," he said. "It's nice to be able to put the ball up and see someone like him just run under it and catch it."

Even Austin Peay coach Emory Hale complimented the play of Swim and Williams.

"He's (Swim) going to make a big difference for the Kansas State program," he added. "I knew a little bit about him when he was at Snow Junior College, and it was a great signing for KSU when they got him."

White's hot hitting lifts Royals to win

By The Associated Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Frank White took a simple objective into Monday's game against California ace Mike Witt.

And the Kansas City second baseman followed through perfectly.

"Mike's usually very tough on us. My goal was to not let him get ahead of me on fastballs," said White, who jumped on a pair of first-pitch fastballs for the key hits in the Royals' 5-2 victory over the Angels.

In the fourth inning, he followed walks to George Brett and Danny Tartabull with his 15th homer and a 3-0 lead. In the eighth, he doubled before scoring on Jamie Quirk's single for an insurance run.

"I didn't really hit the homer that well, but you don't have to in the daytime here," White said of the drive that barely cleared the fence in the left-center. "That would've been just a long out in our park."

Witt matched his season-high with 11 strikeouts in eight innings, but was doomed by the fourth-inning walks, two of the four he gave up.

"He had a nice curve and a nice change-up. But he got too much of the plate with a couple of fastballs," said California Manager Gene Mauch, alluding to White's hits.

With the victory, the Royals broke their third-place tie with California. Kansas City trails American League West leader Minnesota by 5 1-2 games, while the Angels fell 6 1-2 games behind.

Charlie Leibrandt pitched seven strong innings for the Royals. Leibrandt, 14-10, gave up two runs on seven hits. Gene Garber went two hitless innings for his first save with the Royals.

Rain falls on stubborn concert-goers

Despite both rain and the Wildcats' season opening 26-22 loss to Austin Peay State University the Willie Nelson and Family concert proceeded as scheduled Saturday night in KSU Stadium. According to official estimates, approximately 10,000 spectators remained for the postgame concert.

Nelson entertains 10,000

By Chad L. Sanborn
Campus Editor

There were three: Willie Nelson, champion of the small farmer; the students, representatives of one of the world's best agriculture schools; and rain, one of those most precious elements that make things grow.

All three came together Saturday night in KSU Stadium for the Willie Nelson and Family concert. The meeting may or may not have symbolized the perseverance, closeness and downright stubbornness of the American farmer.

The crowd, estimated at the end of the show by a staff member to total about 10,000 people, consisted mostly of students. Disgruntled by the rain and the Austin Peay 26-22 upset of the Wildcats, most of the alumni left the stadium as the show progressed.

In an interview before the show, Nelson talked about the plight of the farmer and about his Farm Aid shows.

"The farmer needs to be able to get a good price for his product. Farm Aid and shows like this are intended to do what I'm doing right now — talk about it," he said.

Besides bringing attention to the farmers' problems, the concerts also provide some financial relief. The third Farm Aid concert will be Sept.

19 in Lincoln, Neb.

Nelson and other musicians — including John Cougar Mellencamp and Bob Dylan — organized the first Farm Aid concert, which was held in September 1985 in Champaign, Ill. The second concert occurred July 4, 1986, in Austin, Texas.

"We are trying to raise the level of awareness because people don't really know how serious the farm problem is in this country," Nelson said.

Though the problem was not solved or forgotten, it was put aside for a while as Nelson opened the show with "Whiskey River." The evening would have been delightful with just Nelson and the swaying and singing students, but then the rain came.

As Nelson sang the first few bars of "Blue Eyes Cryin' in the Rain," the heavens opened up and the rain fell. Though light at first, the rain soon picked up. Getting wet was no big deal; getting electrocuted was.

Members of the K-State Rodeo team, hired for $5 an hour to work from 10 a.m. Saturday till early Sunday morning, scrambled to cover the band and the equipment with plastic.

One man in Levi's and a white shirt rushed out of the stands and onto the stage to help. The head of Nelson's security, a thick man known only as "Mel," started to "jerk his ass off the stage." But when Mel saw the intruder was only helping, he let him be.

John Carbray, president of Projects West, the firm organizing the concert, was giggling to members of the road crew and the press about the "human umbrella."

While the rain poured and the students danced, Nelson sang a few of his hits, including "Good Hearted Woman" and "My Heroes Have Always Been Cowboys," as well as old country standbys like "Stay a Little Longer" and "If You've Got the Money, Honey, I've Got the Time."

The show was different from a regular concert. Only about 70 people with enough clout to get passes were allowed on the field in front of the stage. However, the students in the stands, some of whom bared their chests, had their own closeness with Nelson.

Whenever he glanced at the student section a huge roar went up, and the singing became louder and the dancing more violent.

Nelson, who claimed he was "a little unsure" about these types of concerts at first, summed up the evening for himself and the fans who withstood the rain: "I like any type of concert."

KC memorial under surveillance

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Vietnam Veterans Memorial will be placed under round-the-clock surveillance because of another act of vandalism, according to a memorial official.

Arthur Fillmore, chairman of the Kansas City Vietnam Veterans

Memorial Fund, said Monday he hoped to have a television camera linked to a security company by the end of the week.

The mounted camera, to be purchased by the memorial fund, will provide a view of the entire memorial site, Fillmore said. The camera will be hooked to a tape machine and a local security system will monitor the images transmitted by the camera, he said.

Police called to the site in the city's midtown area Monday reported that 15 to 20 small surface chips had been cut into the memorial, perhaps with a small tool.

Police Sgt. Gary Zavodil said that officers did not know when the vandalism took place.

Investment world not all complex

Commentary

STEVE HARRISON
Guest Columnist

In the past few years, we have been swamped with "how to" books — anything from "How to Raise Earthworms" to "How to Be Your Own Attorney". This column is not another "How to." It is intended to discuss in layman's language the basic principles of investing — the mechanics of the financial community.

There are no "hot tips" in this column! Nor will you be urged to invest. However, share-ownership in America has quintupled in the past 25 years. In 1972, about one of every four adults in this country — more than 32 million people — owned shares in the nation's publicly held companies.

Another 100 million Americans were calculated to be indirect shareholders whose savings are invested for them, in part, in equity securities by a variety of financial institutions. If you are one of these people, you will want to learn more about how your dollars are being invested.

In the coming weeks, I will discuss such topics as investors, owners and lenders, where dividends come from, bonds and bondholders, how the "Big Board" operates, investing for income, tax-exempt securities and how to read the financial page.

In short, in the weeks ahead I will cover virtually every major topic of investing. The language of the investment world may sound strange to the newcomer. It is vivid, alive and usually flavored with meaning out of the past when securities were traded under a button-wood tree. The definitions we will use will be simple and easy, void of subtle meanings.

Soon you will have at your command a complete glossary of the language of investing. I encourage your requests for subjects you would like discussed. Securities and investing is an exciting field! I hope to share this excitement with you.

Range course uses tutorial video cassettes

A range management course will utilize instructional video cassettes for its students.

The course can be taken individually or in groups and is geared toward students from community colleges, professionals in agriculture-related jobs and ranchers with some college experience.

Beginning Oct. 5, the course is offered as undergraduate or graduate credit in a minor field. Students can register for the course at the Division of Continuing Education office, Umberger 317.

State ranks No. 1 in beef production

Kansas' feedlot and meat industry is the state's No. 1 income generator, said Scott Laudert, extension livestock specialist for K-State stationed in Garden City. Kansas has been the leader for the past two years in the beef slaughter industry, processing more than 6.3 million head of fed cattle in 1986.

The industry creates employment opportunities in slaughter and processing, production, feedlot management, trucking, construction, food supply and delivery systems.

Dell Allen, professor of animal sciences and industry, said the growth of meat production and packaging has resulted in increased employment opportunities for K-

State graduates.

The number of graduates preparing for management positions in the beef industry has increased from four to 30 during the past four years. Allen said these management jobs require expertise in many areas, including cattle nutrition, marketing and production.

Kansas has 1,900 feedlots that employ more than 17,000 people across the state. The packing plants have an estimated employment of more than 11,600, according to the Kansas Department of Human Resources. Iowa Beef Processors is the largest beef slaughter plant in the world and is located in Holcomb, near Garden City. In 1981, it employed 2,100 people with a payroll of more than $30.5 million.

The top six processing plants within southwest Kansas slaughter more than 23,000 head of cattle daily. The July issue of "Forbes 500" listed eight Kansas feedlots in the top 400 agricultural industries.

Allen said that besides providing employment, the industry can also boost the size of its base cities. For example, a box manufacturing plant and cold storage plant have opened in Garden City because of the packing company.

Kansas will continue to see growth because it has an advantage over all other beef producing and processing states, Allen said.

"As a state, we have all the facets to continue the growth in cattle feeding. We have the grain surplus, the climate and the slaughtering resources," Allen said.

K-State's role in leading the industry to the top has been varied. Research in the areas of plant and animal science and economic development has provided technology to aid in every facet of the industry.

A national sire evaluation program for carcass traits has been introduced by the K-State animal science department. The "branded beef" or specification program allows producers to run performance testing trials.

K-State also houses the Livestock and Meat Industry Council, which is responsible for promotion and research updates in the livestock industry.

"(It council) is an industry entity supported at the University," said Allen.

Hatchery supplies producers

By Linda Huddleston
Collegian Reporter

From hatching approximately 650,000 chicks in 1972 to 2.25 million this year, Nelson's Poultry Farms Inc. is the largest commercial egg hatchery in Kansas.

Carl and Leda Nelson started the hatchery in 1930, with the main office and buildings in Morganville. Now the hatchery is owned by their son, Wilburn Nelson, and operated by his sons, Greg and Jim Nelson.

In 1972, the main office was relocated to 2½ miles east of Manhattan on Highway 24. The Nelson's own and contract approximately 30 buildings located in Kansas, Nebraska and Colorado, which serve as growing houses for their birds.

"Our business is like any other phase in agriculture," Nelson said. "It has changed a lot over the last 40 years."

Fertilized eggs arrive at the Manhattan farm about 21 days before they hatch.

"The eggs are placed in trays and the trays in racks," Nelson said. "The incubators must be kept at a temperature of 99.5 (degrees) and humidity of 86 percent for the chicks to hatch."

Automatic turners rotate the eggs every hour until they hatch. After hatching, each chick is vaccinated. Some of the chicks are then put into the growing houses on the Manhattan farm, while the others are taken by trucks to commercial egg producers or the Nelson's Nebraska or Colorado farms.

"Our basic service is to provide commercial egg producers with lots of laying hens."

—Greg Nelson

Since it takes 18 weeks for the pullets to begin egg production, and the Manhattan farm has only incubating and growing houses, the birds are contracted or leased by commercial egg producers.

"Our basic service is to provide commercial egg producers with lots of laying hens," Nelson said.

The hatchery employs approximately 10 full-time workers and about 20 part-time workers. The majority of part-time help is college students.

"Having our business near a college town is beneficial," Nelson said. "There is a much larger availability of part-time help. I think it's a good situation for both sides. We get the help we need, and the kids get money for school."

Mark DeVolder, junior in accounting, has worked at the hatchery for 2½ years. "You start at minimum wage at the hatchery," DeVolder said. "But if you stick with it and work hard, your pay increases. I like what I do, so that helps out."

Workers handle the eggs and birds, and they also vaccinate the animals, clean the facilities and load and unload the trucks. DeVolder said working at the hatchery is convenient because the scheduling is flexible.

"You work whenever you can," he said. "They're pretty good about working around your schedule."

The nature of the hatchery allows the company's flexibility, said Nelson.

"There are times when we have big work loads and need a lot of help," Nelson said. "Then there are slack periods when we only need a couple of workers. It's a lot like farming crops. When it's time to harvest, you work long days, and then during other times of the year, it's not so pressing."

Flexible manufacturing diversifies production, increases output volume

By The Collegian Staff

Researchers in the College of Engineering are studying flexible manufacturing — the factory operation method of the future.

Flexible manufacturing allows small businesses to develop an assembly line that, unlike traditional ones, can make a different product every hour, said Brad Kramer, assistant professor of industrial engineering.

Kramer said flexible manufacturing involves "manufacturing products on a flexible production system where you have the flexibility of a job shop, plus the production efficiency of a flow shop."

A job shop is one that produces a variety of products, but has a low volume output, said Kramer. A flow shop produces a low variety of products but has a high volume of output.

The flexible manufacturing system is a combination of the two, having both high variety and volume.

Farm implement companies have used the flexible method to manufacture tractor parts and tractor transmissions. It has also been used to assemble sewing machines.

"Flexible manufacturing is just one part of the whole manufacturing environment," said Kramer. "It's not going to solve the world's problems, but it has its own niche in the market."

Kramer said that the Eastern Europeans were one of the first to develop a flexible manufacturing system. But Japan and the United States have many flexible manufacturing systems in operation.

However, the United States' systems, while much more sophisticated than most, tend to have higher production costs and a lower variety of products.

Some K-State classes where students can be exposed to flexible manufacturing are Computerized Design, Robotics, Computerized Manufacturing, Topics in Automated Factory Concepts and Manufacturing Systems Design and Analysis.

Kramer said that even though the misapplication of flexible manufacturing can be very costly, he believes that it can be applied in many areas of the business world.

Labor Day unofficially closes summer

Some work, play on holiday

Telethon raises $39 million

By The Associated Press

On the workers' holiday, hundreds of people picked hammers over hammers to help rebuild a Texas town ravaged by a tornado. Some campgrounds in the Northwest were closed because of forest fires, but there were plenty of picnics, parades and politics with which to greet the fall season.

More than 500 members of Texas Baptist Men set to work over the weekend, hoping to build 20 houses by sundown in Saragosa, Texas.

"This morning when I drove up I saw a street of little houses. Virtually from morning until night those houses are going up before your eyes," Susan Clowe, spokeswoman for the Red Cross in Saragosa, said Monday.

Church leaders were to break ground later at the site of the Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church, which was among the 75 percent of Saragosa's buildings leveled in the May 22 tornado that killed 30 people.

Many celebrations took the holiday's meaning seriously.

In Bridgeport, Conn., city and labor leaders dedicated a bronze and granite memorial to the 28 construction workers killed April 23 when an apartment complex collapsed during construction. The memorial depicts a worker looking down on empty hard hats that symbolize those killed.

In Indianapolis, more than 5,000 people joined a Labor Day parade with the theme, "Be American, Buy American."

Before the Buffalo, N.Y., area's first Labor Day parade since World War II, the Rev. James Healy said Mass outside St. Thomas Aquinas Roman Catholic Church.

"We will fight, as the fight was waged for the abolition of child labor, the fight for free and unrestricted worldwide trade," said Healy. "And let the miner in South Africa take his kids on a vacation in the summertime."

In a statement Sunday, President Reagan called the American worker the most important of resources: "Labor Day provides all of us with an opportunity to reflect on the meaning of work, not simply as an economic necessity, but as an expression of deeper human qualities."

By The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — The 22nd annual Jerry Lewis Labor Day Telethon raised a record $39,021,723 on Monday and workers tossed confetti as the entertainer declared the effort "a good day for mankind."

The show surpassed last year's record of $34,096,773 by nearly $5 million. A long list of corporate sponsors presented Lewis with an additional $34,306,197 in pledges above the $39 million raised across the United States and Canada.

Celebrities sang and danced through the 2 1/4-hour event and muscular dystrophy victims and their family members made poignant pleas for funds to help fight 12 different diseases and 24 neuromuscular disorders targeted by the New York-based Muscular Dystrophy Association.

Donations soared past last year's record in the 20th hour of the telethon, bringing cheers from a crowd jammed into a sports pavilion at Caesars Palace where the telethon was produced.

"As corny as it may sound, my God, what a good day for mankind," Lewis told a national audience.

One of the most touching moments came when Bob Sampson, former vice president of United Airlines, told of his long battle against the crippling disease.

"These lungs are going fast," the wheelchair-bound Sampson said in an emotional speech. "You don't die of muscular dystrophy, you die of pneumonia, or something else. If not, ultimately you will die of strangulation. So they do a tracheotomy and put you on a respirator. So you buy six months.

"I don't want a respirator," Sampson said, his voice breaking. "I want to sit up and see what this looks like when it comes to get you."

Earlier in the show, Lewis played a videotape of Jim Grigsby, a Las Vegas firefighter who helped launch a national program 25 years ago in which firefighters stand on busy corners, collecting donations in boots for MDA. Grigsby learned about two years ago that he had a form of the disease, and died earlier this year.

Lewis, who had attended Grigsby's funeral, was visibly shaken by the segment.

'Refuseniks' to emigrate

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Officials told Jewish activist Josef Begun and a half-dozen other "refuseniks" Monday that they can emigrate to Israel. Begun, who first applied for an exit visa 16 years ago, was released from prison in February.

"This morning someone from the Moscow visa office called father by telephone and told him that they were giving their permission to go to Israel," Begun's son Boris said by telephone.

The elder Begun, 55, is one of the best-known Jewish refuseniks, the name given to those refused permission to leave the Soviet Union. He had taught Hebrew and Jewish culture in Moscow, which is illegal, and was a leader in efforts for Jewish emigration.

Begun said he went to the visa office to fill out papers Monday and speculated that granting of the exit visas "could be connected to a summit" between Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev and President Reagan.

Boris Begun said Jewish activist Viktor Brailovsky, a 51-year-old scientist, also was told Monday he could emigrate.

Vladimir Slepak, another prominent refusenik, said he was told Arkady and Helena Mai, and Lev Sud, would be allowed to leave as well. He said the Mais had been waiting almost 14 years. Mai was fired from his radio engineer's job.

Israel radio said Vladimir Lifshitz of Leningrad and Semion Yantovsky also were given exit visas. It said Sud heads a group of Jews already granted Israeli citizenship.

In 1983, Josef Begun was sentenced to seven years in prison for anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda. He served more than three years in Chistopol prison before he was released Feb. 20.

Begun was the last political prisoner in Chistopol, where Anatoly Shcharansky (now Natan Sharansky) were held. Sharansky was released in an East-West prisoner exchange early in 1986 and lives in Israel.

After returning to Moscow on Feb. 22, Begun continued his activities on behalf of Jewish emigration.

In an effort to gain his release as part of an amnesty for political prisoners, Begun's family helped organize protests on the Arbat outdoor mall in mid-February. Protesters were dispersed by plainclothes police who beat and kicked some of them.

"All the people who wanted doubles as singles were not able to be accommodated," he said. "When a hall is completely full, it's harder to deal with a roommate problem."

He also said the halls are more efficiently maintained when full and "we have been better able to meet budgets...now when we have the money."

Van Zile is currently assigned to the University and not the department of housing, Frith said.

Jackson

said. "But if one does not vote for me because I'm black, I'll leave that in God's hands because God made me that way and I'm glad about it," he said.

Jackson, relying heavily on his support from organized labor, formally disclosed his plans during a Labor Day swing through Pittsburgh, Cleveland and New York City.

He made his first announcement on ABC-TV from Pittsburgh, attended a Roman Catholic mass at a racially mixed inner city church, and marched through a supportive crowd of more than 5,000 people watching the city's 100th Labor Day parade.

From the pulpit at the Roman Catholic Church, the Baptist minister led pre-parade worshippers, including many laid-off steel workers, through a 10-point "Workers' Bill of Rights."

Jackson said workers have rights to a job, to union representation, a living wage, safe work place and pension security. He played to the local audience, saying American steel workers should not lose their jobs to foreign "slave labor."

"Let us fight together and not one another," he said.

Jackson was scheduled to attend a Labor Day picnic in Cleveland and a Caribbean-American festival and parade in Brooklyn before joining striking NBC-TV technicians in Manhattan.

The Jackson camp, with an official presidential exploratory committee in place since March, has placed new emphasis on organization, in contrast to the 1984 campaign that was notorious for its chaotic pace and minute-to-minute schedule changes.

Jackson officials have a goal of raising $5 million by March. So far, campaign staffers say, the Jackson forces have brought in around $1 million.

A Time magazine poll published Sunday said Jackson remained the leading choice for president among likely Democratic voters, with Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis a distant second.

Twenty-six percent of the Democrats interviewed named Jackson as their first choice. Dukakis was the choice of 11 percent and Rep. Patricia Schroeder of Colorado was chosen by 9 percent.

Countrymen hold Landon in their hearts

By Staff and Wire Reports

Alf Landon is defying the odds once again, but this time he is winning. The grand old man of the Grand Old Party will celebrate his first century Wednesday.

He is as fit as his years allow, and surprisingly so, according to his physician, Dr. John E. Crary.

"I've felt better," the centenarian was saying the other day after dinner, "But I can't complain."

Almost as remarkable as his longevity is Landon's achievement in the hearts of his countrymen.

After his defeat by Franklin D. Roosevelt in the 1936 presidential election, the most lopsided defeat in history at the time, Landon abandoned politics, as far as elected positions were concerned.

In recent decades, though, he has emerged as a beloved elder statesman. And if there were a ballot for favorite son in Kansas, Alfred M. Landon would win the title in a landslide.

When the nation resoundingly rejected him in 1936, he carried only Maine and Vermont — which proves the adage "As goes Maine, so goes Vermont." He did not let the campaign damage his sense of humor nor his perspective.

Over the passing decades, many people have been lured to Landon's door — including a steady parade of presidents, governors and state office-seekers.

The secret of his longevity and political prominence, Sen. Bob Dole said, lies in the fact that "Alf never stopped thinking and talking. This was the headquarters if you were a politician in Kansas. You had to come to this room (the Landon library)."

Landon wasn't always in strong agreement with his party; his spirit of independence was a strong one.

He rose from Republican precinct worker to chairman of the state Republican party. He bolted the party two times, once in 1912 to campaigned for Theodore Roosevelt's Bull Moose effort and again in 1924 to support William Allen White's anti-Ku Klux Klan campaign for the Kansas governorship.

—Alf Landon

Landon himself won the Kansas governorship in 1932, despite a Roosevelt-inspired Democratic landslide that year. Later, he won reelection, the only Republican elected in the nation in 1934. That victory propelled him to a first-ballot nomination at the 1936 Republican convention in Cleveland even though, as he pointed out, few outside of Kansas knew much about his background.

Roosevelt knew him and offered him a cabinet post. Landon declined, however, as he also did with the Senate seat that was his for the asking. He explained that he would prefer the "comparatively simple but more intelligent life of Topeka."

Although fatigue catches up with him rather quickly these days, Landon still enjoys company and has no shortage of it. In the course of one day recently, no fewer than 11 friends dropped by to visit. Another half dozen old pals take turns lunching with him every day at a nearby coffee shop.

He also still gets his exercise, which has been important to him all his life. He has retired Red, his aging Morgan horse, to a neighbor's farm, so there are no more morning rides. Now he walks.

Each morning, with a cane in hand and the housekeeper at his side, he steps off his porch and walks across the front lawn and back, a distance of nearly a quarter of a mile.

"Sometimes, he tries to sneak in a second walk," reports Theo Landon, who is 11 years younger than her husband and would accompany him if she weren't nursing a bad hip.

What Landon does miss is the mental exercise.

"Ordinarily, I would have an opinion on everything," he said. "But I can't get enough information anymore. I have some new glasses so I can see the television, but I have to chase people around the house to read the paper to me."

Landon's daughter, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, provided her father with a lap amplifier so he could follow the television newscasts — and St. Louis Cardinals baseball games — more clearly, but his hearing is such that even conversation is difficult.

Landon makes these observations on his infirmities without complaint or bitterness. Anyone who knows the man would not expect otherwise.

One hundred years.

In Landon's view, people are making more of a fuss over that than it deserves. "I know it's a historic event to a lot of people," he said. "I'm just glad I made it so we could have a party like this for the people."

But consider: Landon watched his father pick up an Indian bow from a Kansas battlefield, and he has lived through five American wars. He has seen attempts on the lives of seven American presidents, two of which were horribly successful. He himself spoke from a bulletproof lectern during the 1936 campaign.

"This country has always been cursed with violence," he has said.

He also saw electricity come to Kansas, the motorized plow, penicillin, the smallpox vaccine, the polio vaccine, aviation and pasteurized milk. He has seen the sun rise nearly 40,000 times.

"I don't think there has ever been greater reason to hope and less cause for despair," he said.

One hundred years.

Five years ago, President Ronald Reagan promised Landon a ride on Air Force One and a party at the White House to celebrate his 100th birthday, but Landon didn't collect on that bargain.

If Landon has his way, on Sept. 9, he will select a comfortable chair in the shade of his front porch and chat with an old friend or two.

His daughter plans to lunch with him following her Landon Lecture at K-State.

That's the way he has observed his birthdays for years, and it would seem to be, he thinks, the comparatively simple but more intelligent way to do it.

Americans are thankful for what you have meant to our country."

The president had a 15-minute, private session with the Landons before the formal celebration began on the front porch of the Landon's home. Kassebaum said her father told Reagan he was doing a wonderful job and should continue to knock a few heads around in Washington.

"Dad told (Reagan) how well he looked for all the problems he had," Kassebaum said. She said the family really appreciated the visit with the Landons.

"It is easier to go to Washington than for Washington to come here," Kassebaum said.

She said she felt the White House did a good job of handling the security and arranging the details for the celebration.

"You couldn't compare this to anything," she said.

Machine gun-toting man kills 1 in Florida restaurant

By The Associated Press

HIALEAH, Fla. — A man toting a machine gun walked into a crowded restaurant Monday and opened fire on a couple sitting with three children, killing a man and wounding his female companion, police said.

The girls, ages 3, 8 and 12, were not injured.

The gunman said nothing when he walked into the El Rincon Colombiano restaurant and fired several rounds from the machine gun, said police Lt. Lowell Coffin.

The unidentified 35-year-old man was shot three to five times in the back of the head and died during surgery at Jackson Memorial Hospital.

The 31-year-old woman was treated at AMI Palmetto Hospital for a wound on her arm and released, Coffin said.

About 30 diners scrambled to the floor as the gunman began shooting.

The gunman, described as a thin, Latin man in his early 20s, escaped in a waiting pickup truck, authorities said.

Fraternity faces penalties over incident

Woman hospitalized for alcohol poisoning after little sister party

By Jeffrey J. Bielser
News Editor

One young woman was sent to the hospital and sanctions have been levied against a fraternity as a result of an incident that occurred at a little sister rush party last week.

According to information provided by Thomas J. Frith, director of housing, the incident began when a woman went to a little sister rush party at the fraternity where she consumed a large quantity of alcohol.

Frith would not disclose the identity of the woman, citing confidentiality of student records.

The woman is a minor, he said. Frith said to the best of his knowledge the party she attended was at the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, 2021 College Heights Road. Bill Gee, president of the fraternity, said there was a party at the fraternity Sept. 1. However, he declined comment on whether the woman had attended.

Staff members in Boyd Hall, where the woman lives, decided after midnight, Sept. 2, to take the woman to The St. Mary Hospital where she was treated and released later that morning, said Joan Cotter, hall director. Frith said she was treated for alcohol poisoning.

Officials at the hospital could not give any information about her treatment without her name.

As of this week, she is back in the hall and doing fine, Frith said.

Several complaints about the incident have spawned an investigation by the K-State Police Department, said Lt. James E. Tubach, of the department. Since the investigation is underway, he would not give any details.

The Interfraternity Council board of directors met Sept. 2 to discuss the matter and then met again the following day with the executive officers of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, Frith said. At the Sept. 3 meeting, the following sanctions were agreed upon after discussion of the matter between the council and the fraternity's representatives:

■ The Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity is on social probation for the 1987-88 academic year.

■ The fraternity will actively participate in the annual greek leadership retreat. At the retreat, the chapter will plan, organize and present a workshop on alcohol awareness and responsible drinking.

■ Gee will speak at the next Interfraternity Council meeting to summarize the incident and discuss possible outcomes of the incident through any civil and/or criminal prosecution.

■ Any further violations by the fraternity will result in further penalties.

Frith said the information about the council's meetings and the punishment levied against the fraternity was included in a memorandum sent to him from Barb Robel, adviser for greek affairs.

Robel said the IFC has a policy of not publicly discussing judicial proceedings taken at meetings, and she would not comment about the sanctions or meetings leading up to them.

"I think the Interfraternity Council and the chapter have acted responsibly in the whole matter," she said.

"I still maintain the position that I am not comfortable with making Interfraternity Council actions public knowledge, but I do feel the sanctions imposed were appropriate," Robel said.

Gee declined comment on the sanctions.

He said the circumstances surrounding the incident had been explained to the proper authorities, including IFC, the campus police and the national chapter of the fraternity.

Measures were taken to encourage responsible drinking at the party, he said, but he declined comment on what measures were taken to prevent minors from consuming alcohol.

On Sept. 2, Frith distributed a memorandum addressed to all "women residents" in University housing warning about the dangers of consuming too much alcohol.

"Please be aware that some fraternities are encouraging potential 'little sisters' to consume excessive amounts of alcohol with little regard for the individuals' well being," the memorandum states.

The memorandum goes on to urge them to "stay away from all but dry activities of this sort."

"It's not a blanket condemnation of the greek system," Frith said about the memorandum.

Robel declined comment on it.

Members of the Young Republicans and College Republicans got a chance to voice their opinions and concerns to U.S. Rep. Pat Roberts

Tuesday evening at a local bar and grill. Roberts was in town as part of his annual 58-county tour of the 1st congressional district.

Pat Roberts may seek Dole's seat

By Candy Leonard
Government Editor

U.S. Rep. Pat Roberts indicated Tuesday he would be interested in seeking Sen. Bob Dole's seat if Dole decides to run for president.

"If Dole was nominated, then the governor would need to make an appointment — that's obviously up to him," Roberts told a group at a Manhattan bar and grill. "But, if that were a consideration, I would be interested."

Roberts spoke, as part of his annual 58-county tour to discuss issues of interest, with Kansans in the 1st district.

As far as Dole's campaign for president is concerned, Roberts said the senator's chances are looking better all the time.

However, Roberts said he was not in town to wave any self-serving banners. He also said he is satisfied serving as a senior member of the house agriculture committee.

While in Manhattan, the congressman met with President Jon Wefald and Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, to discuss a grant proposal that would locate a food-safety inspection service at K-State. Roberts said he would assist K-State in applying for the federal grant for the USDA training facility.

Plans for Throckmorton Phase II were also discussed, said Gary Mitchell, Robert's representative from Salina who helped schedule the "listening tour." Mitchell said the tour was geared toward farm issues and problems of the Kansas farmer.

Roberts also met with executives at the Kansas Farm Bureau and the state soil conservation office in Manhattan, "listening to their general concerns."

Several members of the Young Republicans and College Republicans groups also had the chance to give Roberts their opinions. He went around the room asking them about their concerns over current events.

Roberts indicated he would also be meeting with state Rep. Joe Knopp, Manhattan, as well as attending today's Landon Lecture before returning to the Capitol.

Colorful anecdotes surround history of lecture series

By Candy Leonard
Government Editor

There are several myths surrounding the origination of the Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues at Kansas State University, but it is a fact that Alf Landon, the founder of the lecture series, is an alumnus of the University of Kansas.

One tale mentions that KU was not granted the Landon Lecture Series because it was not receptive to the idea when it was presented.

"We assumed the first jet was the secret service, and we were just goofing around when who steps off the plane but President Duarte."
—Charles Reagan

Another popular version suggests that Landon disagreed with the KU chancellor at the time but was a close personal friend of K-State's President James McCain. At a dinner meeting, McCain and Landon were discussing the fact that not many topnotch lecturers were actually speaking in the Midwest. McCain suggested naming a lecture series after Landon, and the lectures began with Landon himself delivering the first speech Dec. 13, 1966.

Funding for the Landon Lectures originally came from the administration budget, not from Landon's pocket, according to Charles Reagan, assistant to the president and fifth chairman of the Landon Lecture series.

"In 1968, J. Robert Wilson and a handful of Manhattanites got together a patron fund for the series," Reagan said. Wilson served as the first chairman of the patrons until his death and was succeeded by Edward Seaton, who remains the current chairman. The group of patrons now includes more than 450 people, each making a $100 contribution to the series.

"Seaton's job is to raise the money, and my job is to spend it," Reagan said. Because of Seaton's contacts and expertise, Reagan said he will consult him when he chooses the lecturers.

A former chairman of the series denied the rumor that Landon had to approve any speaker ahead of time.

"I did consult with him constantly," said Barry Flinchbaugh, professor in agricultural economics. "At first, Landon was heavily involved and made a lot of the contacts, but later his daughter took a more active role."

Landon made it known, however, in the early years of the series that he wanted to attract speakers because of the prestige of the lectures.

"That's one thing Alf didn't like — for them to be paid," Flinchbaugh said, adding that honorariums were sometimes necessary with more prominent speakers.

"I don't think $5,000 is out of the question (for an honorarium)," Flinchbaugh said.

Reagan said the least expensive Landon Lecture of his tenure was Tom Brokaw's, because NBC flew him here by private jet.

"His expenses totaled around $3,500 to cover the printing costs, the patron's luncheon and the dinner."

Hart admits 'sins,' apologizes for errors

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Former Democratic presidential front-runner Gary Hart declared Tuesday night he did not plan to re-enter the 1988 contest and, in an extraordinary admission, for the first time revealed he has been unfaithful to his wife.

The former Colorado senator apologized for "the mistakes that led" him to quit the race last May, saying "I am totally and fully responsible for my own actions and I want to say to everyone how sorry I am."

"I'm not a candidate for president and I have no plans to become one," Hart said during a 60-minute appearance on ABC-TV's "Nightline." "I am not running for president."

"I want to be part of this debate," Hart said.

"I do not blame anyone else ... I don't blame the press," Hart said in a statement opening his long-awaited interview.

Questions about Hart's relationship with Miami model Donna Rice led to his withdrawal from the race on May 8. He was the prohibitive front-runner at the time.

"I made a serious mistake. I should not have been in the company of any woman who was not a friend of mine or my wife," Hart said. "I should not have been with Miss Rice."

Hart refused to answer the direct question of whether he had had an affair with Rice, but he admitted to committing adultery during his 29-year marriage to Lee Hart.

"I'm not a perfect man. I commit sins. Mine happen to be pretty visible," he said.

On the general question of whether he had been faithful to his wife — which he refused to answer in a final news conference in May — Hart answered:

"I regret to say the answer is no."

And he said he will not ever answer the specific questions.

Rice has been negotiating to tell her story for $200,000 for a movie made for the ABC television network.

But in August, Bill Dixon, Hart's former campaign manager, prompted new speculation by saying

Kassebaum to deliver Landon Lecture today

By The Collegian Staff

Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum will be the first speaker of the 1987-88 Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues at 10:30 a.m. today in McCain Auditorium.

The lecture marks the 100th birthday of her father Alf

Landon, for whom the lecture series is named.

The topic of the address will be "New Challenges in International Relations." She will update her father's 1966 speech of the same topic.

Kassebaum, a resident of Wichita, was elected to the U.S. Senate in 1978.

Evangelist cancels trip to China

TOKYO — American evangelist Billy Graham said Tuesday he was deeply disappointed that he had to cancel a trip to China after breaking a rib in a fall in his hotel room.

"There's no way that I could continue my trip to China. This to me is probably the greatest disappointment of my life," he said.

Graham, 68, said he fractured one rib and injured several others in the fall Friday. Doctors in Tokyo ordered him to stay in bed for several days and then return to the United States for treatment, Graham said.

"The doctor says I have broken 12 ribs in all through the years and there are old scars, and there are two or three of them that he thinks have been re-injured. But I've only broken one new rib," he said in a telephone interview.

He said he hoped now to make his first visit to China in April.

No one misses stolen fire truck

NORRIS, S.D. — No fires have been reported in the Norris area lately. And good thing, since no one knew the fire truck had been missing for more than a week.

Junior Brandis, Mellette County sheriff, said Tuesday no one noticed the truck had been stolen until Friday, when members of the Norris Volunteer Fire Department were told to be ready in case lightning sparked range fires.

Officers found the truck Saturday in a creek southeast of Norris, Brandis said. No arrests had been made Tuesday, but authorities have a suspect, the sheriff said.

The truck was not damaged, Brandis said.

Japanese royalty to visit U.S.

TOKYO — Japan's Crown Prince Akihito and Crown Princess Michiko will visit nine U.S. cities next month.

Akihito, 54, and Michiko, 52, are scheduled to visit Boston; Washington; New York; Charleston, S.C.; Atlanta, and Kansas City, Mo., an official of the Imperial Household Agency said Tuesday. The couple also will stop in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Hawaii during their trip, the official said.

The trip marks the couple's first official visit to the United States, except for brief stopovers, since a 1960 visit to celebrate the centennial of the establishment of friendly U.S.-Japan ties.

Akihito is the eldest son of the 86-year-old Emperor Hirohito and heir to the 2,600-year-old Chrysanthemum throne.

Twins still in critical condition

BALTIMORE — Siamese twins who were separated in a 22-hour operation over the weekend remained in critical but stable condition Tuesday as doctors closely monitored their drug-induced comas.

The 7-month-old infants, Patrick and Benjamin Binder, were lying "very still," sleeping in separate cribs at Johns Hopkins Children's Center, hospital spokeswoman Joann Rodgers said Tuesday.

At least one physician and two nurses were monitoring the babies around the clock, doctors said.

Doctors plan to keep the children in a pentobarbital coma at least until Thursday, to give their brains a chance to heal from the surgery that ended Sunday morning. The pair had been attached at the head.

'Dear Harold' grabs attention

OKLAHOMA CITY — Two businesswomen are apologizing for a "Dear Harold" promotion stunt that got out of hand.

"There is no Harold, and there is no Rachel," said Renee Hendrix, owner of MemoryMinders. "It got way out of control. We created a monster."

Hendrix said she and her friend, Bette Madore, created the characters last week as part of a advertising scheme to launch their new business, The Daily Oklahoman reported Tuesday.

The pair put up about 75 signs throughout downtown Oklahoma City elevators and tunnels, all of them written with heavy black ink on bright pink paper.

"Harold," the note read, "you inconsiderate wimp. This is the LAST time you will forget our anniversary. Don't bother coming home — the locks have been changed. See you in court, Rachel."

The notes were noticed, all right — a story about them was picked up by The Associated Press and circulated nationally.

Hendrix said the note was supposed to be the first of a four-part comedic ad campaign detailing the forgetfulness of the fictitious Harold. She said the last installment would have featured Harold finding Hendrix's business and subsequently saving his marriage.

MemoryMinders offered to remember whatever a forgetful client wanted to be reminded of.

Ms. Hendrix said she was surprised by the news reports of the signs and how many people had taken the note seriously.

"We didn't want people to think we were pulling a big hoax over on them," she said, adding that she isn't sure whether the series would be continued.

"Which is a shame, because people would have really liked what we had planned for them," she said.

'Dead' concert causes problems

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Police learned the hard way that 30 officers were not enough to control 18,000 to 20,000 fans of the Grateful Dead.

Roughly 15,000 "Deadheads," as the fans call themselves, got in to see the band's Monday night concert at the Civic Center, and the rest laid siege to the building, police said.

Before the night was over, two policemen had facial cuts from thrown bottles, more than 60 people were arrested, two Civic Center doors were ripped from their hinges, a center employee suffered a broken arm while trying to hold a door shut and a fan broke his leg when he fell or was pushed from the center's parapet to the sidewalk.

"Thirty cops isn't enough," Capt. Bernard Gannon said after the concert.

Dylan performs for 9,000 Israel

JERUSALEM — Singer Bob Dylan abruptly canceled a meeting with Israel's foreign minister, but did not disappoint 9,000 fans at his first concert in this city.

Dylan performed with a charged delivery of classic hits including "Like A Rolling Stone."

But the concert came to an abrupt end when the sound system failed during the first encore, "Slow Train Coming," which had the capacity crowd on its feet.

Dylan's enthusiastic reception in Jerusalem contrasted sharply with the criticism he received after a performance Saturday in Tel Aviv, where hundreds of the 40,000 fans walked out in disappointment.

A health care product that's right for today!

It's called SHARED PAY COMPREHENSIVE and it's designed to provide top protection on the big end of hospital and doctor bills...with rate control front end shared pay features.

SHARED PAY COMPREHENSIVE is a product for the times. It's quality protection with students assuming reasonable out-of-pocket responsibility.

Students share in the cost of services. Students pay 50% of the bill until $250 is paid out for a single contract and $500 for a family contract. Once the shared pay maximum has been paid out, then Blue Cross and Blue Shield pays 100% for covered services.

Services provided at Lafene Student Health Center are covered 100%.

It's competitively priced, and it's from Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Kansas.

Find out about it firsthand. Contact Lafene Student Health Center, Student Government Office, or the local Blue Cross and Blue Shield office.

Effective date of coverage will be August 24, 1987. Final enrollment will be September 14, 1987.

Design selected for Vietnam Memorial

K-State to honor war dead

An artist's rendering of the winning Vietnam Memorial design.

By Robert Clasen
Collegian Reporter

The winning design for the proposed Kansas State University Vietnam Memorial was unveiled Tuesday afternoon.

K. Scott Enns, an architect in Wichita and 1985 graduate of the College of Architecture and Design, entered the winning proposal.

A nine-member jury consisting of students, faculty and staff selected Enns' design from among six proposals that met the entry qualifications set by the University's Vietnam Memorial Committee.

The memorial, which is slated to be located just north of Nichols Hall, will be circular in design. Enns' design is constructed of limestone and has two openings for a sidewalk which will pass through it. Each side begins about 3 feet tall and gradually curves to a height of about 8 feet.

The names of 38 K-State students who were killed in Vietnam, and the memorial's theme are to be carved into its limestone panels.

The theme reads: "A memorial in memory of those Kansas State University students who made the ultimate sacrifice by giving their lives in the service of their country in Vietnam."

Enns said, "This design will allow one to directly see and feel the past. If one can honestly confront a traumatic moment from the past, the healing can begin."

Bill Arck, director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education, and adviser to the committee said, "I'm really excited about this project. I think it's a much more fitting memorial."

The current memorial to the students killed in Vietnam is a plaque located on the first floor of the Union.

"These 38 men were K-State students who walked the campus every day just like you and me," Arck said. "Then, because of the war, they were gone."

"I think few students today know what it was like then — other than what they've seen in movies like 'Platoon' and 'Full Metal Jacket.'"

With the site and design now selected, the committee will present its proposal to the Board of Regents for final approval, he said.

Gary Haulmark, sophomore in political science and pre-law, and chairman of the committee, said fund-raising activities will begin now that the design has been chosen.

The first fund-raiser will be called "Operation Combat Boot." Cadets from the KSU Arnold Air Society and members of the Northcentral Kansas Chapter 344 of Vietnam Veterans of America will be soliciting donations on Sept. 19 outside KSU Stadium before the KSU vs. Army football game and in the Triangle Park area near Aggieville.

Faculty Senate tables misconduct policy

By Erwin Seba
Collegian Reporter

During its Tuesday meeting Faculty Senate again tabled consideration of a proposed policy on academic misconduct.

Concerns that reporting requirements may soon be ordered by the National Science Foundation and the Public Health Service, which are two federal granting agencies, and that the policy could impair confidentiality guarantees in the proposed "Policy on Integrity in Research and Scholarly Activity" brought the consideration to table the policy to a voice vote.

Under the regulations proposed by the federal agencies, the University would be required to inform them whenever an allegation of academic misconduct warrants full investigation. The entire process must be kept confidential, however, until academic misconduct has been proven.

"How is a faculty member's right to due process protected when half the granting agencies in Washington, D.C., know that a professor is under investigation for playing with his data?" said Mark Lapping, senator and dean of the College of Architecture and Design.

Faculty Senate tabled consideration of the academic dishonesty policy once before. At the Aug. 18 meeting, Lapping said the policy was too important to the future of faculty members to be decided on short notice.

Academic misconduct includes plagiarism, the falsification of research data, and manipulation of experiments in order to produce biased results.

As written, the Senate's recommended policy would require any person "who becomes aware of an apparent instance of academic misconduct to try to resolve the issue directly with the parties involved."

If direct confrontation does not settle the issue, the incident must be reported in writing to the appropriate department head, dean or to the provost.

The policy dictates for the provost to then appoint five members of the Integrity in Research and Scholarly Activity Committee to investigate the charges. The results of this inquiry must be reported to the provost within 30 days. The review committee must tell the provost if the charges are or are not well founded. If the charges are groundless, the matter is closed. If the charges are proven, the review committee can recommend disciplinary action to the provost. The provost is responsible for imposing any sanctions on a case-by-case basis.

The committee may recommend dismissal, suspension, removal from the graduate faculty, loss of rights to conduct research, or placing a letter of reprimand in the guilty individual's personnel file.

In other business, Faculty Senate passed a resolution inviting President Jon Wefald and Provost James Coffman, or their representatives, to all future meetings.

Senate adopted course and curriculum changes for the College of Engineering and the College of Arts and Sciences, and approved the addition of two courses recommended by the Graduate Council.

Equipment stolen

By The Collegian Staff

Approximately $25,000 of equipment was stolen over the Labor Day weekend from the University's News and Information office in Anderson Hall. Director Cy Wainscott said the theft was discovered about 6:15 a.m. Monday.

It occurred sometime after the office was locked at 5:10 p.m. Friday, he said. Computer equipment — including a set of Macintosh external disk drives and a dot matrix printer — and some other items were reported missing.

Wainscott said there was no sign of forced entry.

Higher education needs better funding

"Why are we paying for a new coliseum when we have the worst library in the Big Eight? Students have screwed-up priorities."

How many times have you heard, or said, a similar statement? A lot of confusion exists about the way different entities on campus receive funding. People are often angered when it seems their money isn't used the way they want. Unfortunately, many times this anger is misdirected.

Of the $665.65 each full-time student paid in tuition this semester, $535 went directly into the state's coffers. The rest of the money falls under the category of special fees, which have been established to support various student services or buildings on campus.

All special fees have been instigated by students, through Student Senate. They are then approved by the president of the University and the Board of Regents. Technically, the president and the Board of Regents can institute a fee without students' approval. This has never been done, however. Such an action would severely damage the administration's relations with students if it ever occurred.

Increasing special fees not solution

Everyone (I hope) knows that $8.25 of each student's semester fees is used toward the construction of Fred Bramlage Coliseum. And most are aware that a proposal was brought up (although defeated by referendum vote) to provide funding for non-revenue intercollegiate sports through a special fee. So, why doesn't someone propose a fee to help the library out of its financial woes? Do the students have their priorities confused?

The answer to that question is "no." The problem is not with priorities, but with state funding. Basically, buildings and programs on campus that are viewed as educational or necessary to the operation of the University — such as the library — are funded by the state. A student fee would still be OK if it could be used to supplement the state funds with our own. But it doesn't work that way.

The state has demonstrated that its objective, especially in these tight financial times, is to get by with as little funding as possible.

Commentary

DOUG FOLK
Collegian Columnist

Now let's look at the situation created by our hypothetical library fee. The state is reviewing the University's budget. They have already decided that the library needs X number of dollars to get by. Now they see under "projected revenue" a new source of income: the student fee. Do you think they say "Oh good, more money for the library this year" or "Oh good, less money we have to give the library this year"? If you picked the second choice, give yourself a gold star. Most people familiar with the legislature's actions agree that if students instituted a fee for a state-funded agency, the state would reduce their funding accordingly. All that would then be accomplished is that students would be shouldering more of the burden.

Another problem regarding funding relates to the proposed renovation of Holton Hall. Student fees ($3 per semester) have been collected since 1982 for a renovation of the building, which houses several student services. Some of those services are student funded, some are not. To set the record straight, no renovation has begun on Holton. The scaffolding you see is for repairs being done to the leaky roof.

The problem that has arisen with Holton also regards state funding. Last spring, administrators informed Student Senate that additional funding would be required to adequately renovate Holton Hall. This raised questions among several students as to whether students should even be funding the renovation in the first place. Some feel that the building should be a state responsibility. Realistically, however, the program will never receive state funding because it is at the bottom of the state's priority list for its meager building fund.

So, let's find out how to point our anger in the right direction. The Associated Students of Kansas is an organization that represents the students of Kansas universities at the state level. ASK is starting a grassroots lobbying campaign called HERO, the Higher Education Rescue Operation. Its goal is to get the message to the governor and legislators that higher education in Kansas is severely underfunded, and the people demand action. HERO will involve letter writing, phone calls and organized visits to the legislature by students, faculty, alumni and parents. I urge you to find out about HERO, or contact your state legislators on your own. It's time to make higher education a priority in Kansas.

Reciprocal agreement needs to serve Kansas

It's time to look into the agreement between Kansas and Missouri that allows students from either state to enroll in specific academic programs at any of the other state's institutions and pay in-state tuition.

When the reciprocal agreement was created to allow Kansas students to attend dental schools in Missouri, and Missouri students to enroll in architectural programs in Kansas, it was a good plan. However, today the cons outweigh the pros, and the agreement should either be nullified or reworked so Kansas doesn't lose money.

As the plan currently stands, Kansas pays $40,000 a year to Missouri to reserve 35 seats per class for Kansas students to attend dental school at the University of Missouri-Kansas City. Missouri pays nothing to Kansas to hold seats for Missouri students enrolled in Kansas' architecture programs. There are currently about 350 Missourians enrolled in K-State's architecture program.

Now because Kansas does not have a dental school for residents to attend, it is important that Kansas students interested in pursuing a dental career be assured of having a chance to attend such a school. And, by having the agreement with Missouri, Kansas is assured of having at least 35 students accepted into a dental program. Because of this fact, Kansas should not completely reject any reciprocal agreement.

To make the agreement more fair, Missouri should be asked to pay an amount equal in comparison to the number of students taking advantage of the agreement with Kansas.

By updating the agreement, students in both states can continue to enroll in programs not available at their state schools. This would be an amicable agreement for all. But fair is fair; Kansas should make sure it does not come out on the bottom.

Roadway fatalities mar holiday weekend

Another Labor Day weekend has come and gone, and another 425 or so bodies have been removed from the scenes of traffic accidents across the country.

The body count is becoming as much a part of Labor Day as the money count on Jerry Lewis' annual telethon for the Muscular Dystrophy Association.

And for what reason? Simply because Americans have come to expect it.

They've come to expect the carnage.

In any other disaster involving a high number of people killed, there is always inquiry and investigation. It's incomprehensible to think this country would ignore a plane crash that killed 425 people.

But holiday weekend after holiday weekend, the story's the same: Too many drinking drivers and too many speeding drivers and too many careless drivers all add up to too many dead bodies.

The nation's highway troopers aren't to blame for the deaths, and neither are the nation's liquor outlets. Only the drivers can prevent this annual massacre.

Until the magnitude of this tragedy sinks into the public consciousness, reckless drivers will continue to mar the nation's highways.

And the body count will go on.

Testing violates rights

Drug use fears limit right to privacy

This is the year of the 200th birthday of our Constitution. It is also a time when people are wanting to erode our constitutional freedoms by forcing students and student athletes to submit to drug testing. Judge Lee Sarokin explained the problems with drug testing in his decision in the case Capua vs. the City of Plainfield in 1986.

"The public interest in eliminating drugs in the workplace is substantial, but to invade the privacy of the innocent in order to discover the guilty establishes a dangerous precedent; one which our Constitution mandates be rejected."

Yet, a member of the Board of Regents, caught up in the fervor to prevent drug abuse, has suggested implementing drug testing for incoming students. I will attempt to explain why this policy must be rejected. The erosion of our constitutional rights will lead this country down the path to becoming a police state.

The policy of drug testing violates our constitutional rights. The Fourth Amendment, the Fifth Amendment and the totality of the Constitution should prevent us from being subjected to such a policy.

The Fourth Amendment protections of privacy were illustrated in two cases in federal court. The first case that ensures our right to privacy was Penny vs. the City of Chattanooga, 1986. In the second case, the American Federation of Government Employees vs. Caspar Weinberger, Judge Edenfield explained that it might have been possible at one time to argue that urinalysis is not a search and seizure, but in light of the vast amount of recent cases ruling the other way, that position is now ludicrous. He states: "Requiring an individual to submit to urinalysis involves an invasion of privacy and is a search and seizure within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment."

Commentary

MIKE KRUEGER
Collegian Columnist

Drug tests also violate our Fifth Amendment rights. Judge Sarokin ruled that compellings plaintiffs to participate in the urine testing under a threat of immediate discharge coerced a waiver of any rights, including the right against self-incrimination. I would suggest that such forms of social control are abhorrent because they force people to prove themselves innocent of crimes they haven't even committed. We shouldn't hang everyone just to get the guilty.

Drug tests also violate our penumbral rights to privacy. These rights emanate from the totality of the Constitution. Judge Collins ruled that urinalysis unconstitutionally interferes with the penumbral rights of privacy held by workers in the case of National Treasury Employees vs. Customs Service. Basically, drug testing runs counter to the Constitution. We should not sacrifice the essence of the Constitution in order to perform tests on people for crimes they haven't committed.

In order to have an accurate drug test performed, a witness must be present to ensure that no tampering occurs. The observer hears the bodily fluids being expelled and witnesses the voiding process closely but not directly. Judge Collins ruled that this is a gross invasion of privacy and is a degrading procedure that detracts from human dignity. He states: "This shocks the conscience and offends this court's sense of justice."

Parking solutions

Editor,

In response to John Kirkland's letter in the Sept. 2 issue on the parking problem, I have this to say. Noting the parking problem could be worse is surely one alternative when approaching this nightmare, although it's not unlike an ostrich burying its head in the sand. It's high time we pull up the anchor and head in the direction of solving the dilemma. We definitely need to be working on long-term plans for additional parking, but there are steps we could take now to help out.

First, we could pave the "gavel pit" across from the old stadium and line out the spots.

Secondly, we could implement a shuttle bus system to relieve some of the swollen lots. Students could park around the new stadium and be shuttled to and from the middle of campus.

In the future, high rise parking could be a possible solution.

'The Big Easy' — a southern charmer

Actors' portrayals shine throughout

By Gary Leffler
Collegian Reviewer

A lifestyle and a city built around friends, music, food, fun and romance, with a dash of hard work thrown in: That's "The Big Easy."

That's also New Orleans. However, in a city famous for Mardi Gras and Bourbon Street, police corruption sets the mood for this strong, steamy film that succeeds without one shot of a parade or the French Quarter.

Movie Review

In "The Big Easy," Dennis Quaid plays Lt. Remy McSwain, a member of the New Orleans Police Department. McSwain is a fun-loving, Cajun-accented cop who meets the beautiful — but work-minded — assistant district attorney Anne Osborne, played by Ellen Barkin.

Osborne is new in town and has been assigned to investigate suspicions of corruption within the force. McSwain, meanwhile, is working on unraveling a rash of mafia killings. Naturally, McSwain is taken with the assistant D.A.'s beauty, but he finds it hard to convince her that the big easy allows her to fool around even though they're working closely with one another.

Barkin's portrayal of Anne Osborne is wonderful. She gracefully combines professional toughness (needed by a woman D.A. investigating a precinct of men) with the soft-spoken romantic who is overwhelmed by McSwain's Southern charm.

Quaid, likewise, does a marvelous job of portraying an Irish-named, Cajun-raised police officer with a family history of protecting the citizens of New Orleans. His accent is soothing without becoming harsh or annoying, and he masters a wide range of attitudes — from the hard-nosed cop to the endearing boy who still sleeps with his stuffed "Gator."

The plot line for "The Big Easy" might be accused of lacking originality. Police corruption isn't anything new to films, or to television for that matter. But there are enough twists and variations to keep this from becoming an ordinary police drama.

In fact, there were plenty of comic moments in the film that will make you laugh out loud; Quaid's character wouldn't allow otherwise.
